I listened with a good deal of interest to what my friend from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] said, especially in regard to Admiral Dewey. He said that Dewey was a Republican. I say that Dewey is an American [applause]; and I say further that, recognizing him as a patriotic American, the Democratic Club of the city of New York on last Friday night elected him an honorary member, and honored themselves by so doing. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. If the gentleman from New York will permit me, as he has made reference to Admiral Dewey's politics, I will state that I did not drag the politics of Admiral Dewey into this discussion, but that one of his own colleagues, in speaking of the resolution, said that Admiral Dewey was a Democrat. And I did not see fit to allow any false assumption on the part of New York Democrats respecting the politics of Admiral Dewey to go unchallenged.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I was not aware of the fact which the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. POWERS. I do not want Admiral Dewey's glory clouded by any such reference. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Admiral Dewey's reputation, like the reputation of patriots on this floor, can not be clouded by any political references. [Applause.]

Mr. LOVE. That is saying a great deal. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. Admiral Dewey is recognized by the American people not as a Republican, not as a Democrat, but as true blue and patriotic an American as ever had an opportunity to serve his country in time of war. I believe that the same patriotic ardor that incited him at Manila ought to incite the members of this House to vote to make the Senate as popular as Dewey by giving the people the right to choose their own United States Senators; I will go further than this and say that the people also ought to have the right to choose their own Presidents. [Applause.]

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. As a member of the committee reporting this measure to the House, I voted for it, and feel that it would be unbecoming of the committee if its members did not support it as best they may at this time. I voted for this with the provision giving permission to the States to vote for Senators through their legislatures or directly by the people, because, while I agree with the gentleman from Alabama that it is best, and finally will come when all the States will vote as one in this matter, and vote by the people directly, I recognize the fact that for two Congresses in the past this question has been sent from this House to the Senate and there has slumbered to the death which bills of this kind know.

I believe that it ought to be sent with the conditions which this resolution proposes, because I think when we come to the proposition which brings the matter more closely to the people, and in their minds will be so considered, that the Senate will have to offer still further reasons why it should slumber again. I agree with my colleagues that it is unwise to tinker with the Constitution of the United States, but I am always glad to refer in this connection to the preamble of the constitution of my own State. That constitution commences with these words:

> In the words of the Father of his Country, we declare that the basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitution of government.

Now, sir, when we recall the history of the making of our Constitution, we all know that it was a matter of compromise, that the States of Pennsylvania and Virginia at that time agreed and believed that United States Senators should be elected directly by the people. A hundred years has led very many of the States to agree and to vote that this was right, and to-day I do not doubt, and I do not believe any man on this floor doubts, that if this proposition was submitted to the people there is not a State in the Union but would decide to allow the people themselves to vote directly upon the election of United States Senators.

The idea that the Senator votes as a unit for the State at large would involve a discussion of the idea of what is the State. I like to think of the State as do the people of Massachusetts when they refer to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the "Commonwealth" meaning the common conscience, I assume, of Massachusetts; and that is the commonwealth of every State in this Union. If the people themselves can not express that conscience, nobody to whom the people may delegate the power can ever express it. It is not for us to consider whether the Senate will or will not pass this measure.

It is enough for us to know that we are following along the line of the desire of the people of the country, and having done that, whether this Congress or some other Congress shall finally succeed in introducing a resolution which will pass the Senate is not for us to determine. It is enough for us to remember that we have voiced the opinion of the people of our several districts and States, and beyond that it is not left for us to go. We do know, however, that the time will come, and it is likely to come speedily, when the several States of this Union will, doubtless, each, for reasons of its own, see to it that their Senators adopt a resolution of this kind.

Now, I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama ought not to prevail, because I believe that this privilege of permitting the several States to elect whether they shall continue the present method of electing Senators by the legislatures or whether they shall submit the question to a direct vote of the people should be allowed, and I think it will strengthen the resolution as it goes from us, and that strengthening will certainly allow the people finally to express their will.

I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK].

[Mr. KIRKPATRICK addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SIMPSON was recognized.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kansas will allow me, in order that we may understand when the time shall come when the vote will be taken, after debate on this matter, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of this day may be occupied in the discussion of the resolution and amendments, and that to-morrow morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the vote shall be taken. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BINGHAM). The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Kansas, but will submit the request.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask this because I understand that there are a number of gentlemen who desire to talk on the question, and there are others who have engagements and yet who desire to vote on the measure. If to-day is taken up with the debate, it will give an opportunity for all to be present and vote to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning a vote be taken on the bill and the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. TONGUE. I wish to suggest to the gentleman that quite a number of members expect to be absent to-morrow.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask if the gentleman will be content if I move the previous question at half past 3 this afternoon?

Mr. MOODY. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. CORLISS. I should like to arrive at some understanding about the matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. Nobody has objected to the other proposition.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask the Speaker to put my first request.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. MOODY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that this proposition is to many of us entirely unfamiliar. In my own State, for instance, we have never had any trouble arising out of the present method of selecting Senators. I do not personally know what the sense of my people may be. I have given no thought to it. Until to-day I had no idea that I should be compelled to vote upon a proposition to change the organic law in so important a matter.

Mr. CORLISS. Does the gentleman want longer than until 5 o'clock to-night?

Mr. MOODY. Yes; my suggestion would be that the debate continue, as he proposes, during the remainder of the day, and that a vote be taken on this proposition on Monday, after the reading of the Journal. That would give a specific time. It would give a full attendance in the House, and it would give those of us who have given no attention to this matter a chance to give attention to it.

Mr. CORLISS. I think the matter should be disposed of, Mr. Speaker, either to-day or to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal. I ask unanimous consent that the debate continue during the remainder of the day, and that a vote be taken to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BINGHAM). The gentleman's proposition is that the debate continue during the remainder of the day, and that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, a vote be taken on the resolution and amendments.

Mr. TONGUE. I object.

Mr. THORP. I object.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask for a vote at 1 o'clock to-morrow, then.

Mr. CLARDY. I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. Give notice that you will move the previous question.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, unless I can secure an understanding, I shall move the previous question.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the proposition, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SIMPSON. Was I not recognized?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves the previous question.

Mr. CORLISS. At the suggestion of several gentlemen, I give notice that at half-past 4 to-day I will move the previous question.

Mr. JONES of Washington and others. Make it 4 o'clock.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman simply gives notice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman announces that at 4.30 he will move the previous question. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this proposition and the amendments to it. I represent in part the only party which put this proposition in their platform during the last campaign. Therefore I am for it; besides, it is right. I will confess, though, Mr. Speaker, that my confidence in this proposition to elect Senators by direct vote of the people has been somewhat shaken. I heard the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], and was interested in his remarks, and very much interested in his assurance that there was not anything in this anyway, that it would be defeated in the Senate. I think, in part, that accounts for so many gentlemen on the Republican side advocating the measure, because they feel that they are perfectly safe in advocating it, with that assurance which the gentleman from Vermont has given us, that it will not pass the Senate, and therefore will not injure their standing with the trusts and monopolies of the country. [Laughter.]

Some statements have been made on both sides here that this is desirable because it will give us a Senate that will be more in touch with the people, that will more directly represent the people of the country. Well, I have believed this until recently, but to-day the Senate stands more nearly the representative of the people than does this body, which is supposed to be the representative of the people. It is a fact well known to the country, whether it is well known to the members of this House or not, that this body is no longer a representative body.

Mr. MAHON. It is outside of the State of Kansas.

Mr. SIMPSON. There is a majority and a majority of the majority, and so on all along down the line till you come to the Speaker himself, who is a majority over all and represents the people! [Laughter.] Who among you all here, no matter what your constituents want and what measure you stand for, but have to go to the Speaker and beg and pray, sometimes on bended knee, to get recognition to put before this body the measures that your constituents desire? And some gentlemen have the assurance to call this a representative body and ask that the Senate pass a measure so that they may make the Senate perhaps the same kind of a body.

Mr. CORLISS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. CORLISS. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that I forced the recognition of this bill by calling for the regular order, and its very consideration is a refutation of the gentleman's charge against the Speaker?

Mr. SIMPSON. Perhaps the gentleman from Michigan is the only man who could have forced the Speaker to give way to his demand. [Laughter.] But, unfortunately for the rest of us, we have not that power over the Speaker that the gentleman who represents the Detroit district has. I am speaking for those members who have not the "pull" upon the Speaker that the gentleman from Michigan has.

Mr. CORLISS. Does not the gentleman know that he has the right to call for the regular order and secure in the regular way consideration of any measure which is upon this Calendar?

Mr. SIMPSON. "The gentleman" is well aware of that, and "the gentleman" is well aware of another fact. He has got to catch that elusive object, the Speaker's eye, before he can obtain recognition. As suggested by my friend from Mississippi, "Many are called, but few are chosen." [Laughter.]

Mr. MOODY. Let me call the gentleman's attention to another instance, which also refutes his statement, and that is that the calling up of the immigration-restriction bill this morning was in the regular course of business, and the House declined to consider the bill.

Mr. SIMPSON. I am glad that the gentleman has called my attention to that fact. It is another one of those things that come over here when there is an election coming on. The Speaker very readily conceded you the right to call it up, but gentlemen will remember it was very quickly called down, and if gentlemen will remember they did not care to go on record.

Mr. MOODY. It was for consideration.

Mr. SIMPSON. One gentleman called for the yeas and nays and another for tellers, but they quickly withdrew the demand. You did not want to consider it. Why, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the line that the gentleman wants to pursue, in order to square himself with his own constituents, a New England constituency. You had to call it up so that you could say that you made an effort. [Laughter.] "We tried to get it up." [Laughter.]

Mr. MOODY. I hope we will have order. The gentleman will not do me a personal injustice, I am sure. I want to make this statement in respect to his remark—that I not only voted for consideration, but I voted for a call of the roll upon consideration.

Mr. SIMPSON. And yet when all these were voted down, the gentleman from Massachusetts would say that he indorsed the bill and endeavored to call it up.

Now, I was about to say that my faith was somewhat shaken in the proposition of making the Senate such a body as this. To-day it is the only representative and legislative body, and is the only body representing the people, the body that is standing between the monopolists, or plutocracy, as we generally term them, and the country.

They are the body that stand between the people and the proposition of saddling an enormous issue of bonds upon the people; and I trust and hope they will ever stand between the people and that proposition. I am not clear in my determination as to the reason why Congress is not a representative body any more. I am inclined to think that the time for which members are elected is too short; that elections occur one-half too rapidly, and the desire of members to come back to this body makes trimmers out of them. They must trim to some extent, and concede to the wishes of those rich corporations and concentrations of wealth who do bring an enormous influence to bear on Representatives to carry out their will in regard to legislation.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMPSON. In a minute. There are many districts in the United States where members represent large corporate interests, and they can not stand against that interest; and so it is a fact that frequently recurring elections make cowards of us all to a certain extent. I am inclined to think that the term of Congressmen ought to be extended.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman charges members of the House with being "trimmers." Does the gentleman make that charge from personal experience?

Mr. SIMPSON. My own experience, I suppose? No; more by observation. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman has managed to get on all sides of all questions.

Mr. SIMPSON. Now, I think that is an unfair charge. I have tried to be consistent and also to be right. I will say this, however, in regard to that first proposition: I am a little more fortunate than he is. He has been neither consistent nor right.

Mr. MAHON. I am not a trimmer and never was.

Mr. SIMPSON (continuing). In the constituents I represent. There are no large cities in my district. Seventy or eighty per cent of the people that I represent are farmers, living in the rural districts, far removed from the political corruption of large cities, like many of the States, that gentlemen live in. Therefore, I am removed from that temptation to pander to rich corporations. In the great West, where we have these conditions—where the constituency we represent is largely in the country—we are not subjected to these influences as are gentlemen who live farther East, where there is great concentration of wealth.

I want to say another thing now, for I never had an opportunity before to say anything good about the Senate. It is the only parliamentary body we have. It is the only place where there is freedom of debate, where you can discuss matters coming up before the people, of great import. We witnessed here week after week and month after month, particularly in these exciting times of war, propositions coming before this body involving appropriations of hundreds of millions of dollars that are brought in and rushed through without proper debate on either side. Neither side of the House was allowed time or opportunity to express its opinion. So, in my humble opinion, the first thing that we ought to do is to reform our own body and make it a truly representative body of the people before we attack the other side. [Applause.]

I tell you, gentlemen, if the conduct of the House in the future continues as it has in the past, it will become an object of contempt and ridicule by the people instead of the United States Senate. The Senate to-day is the only representative body the people have in the United States. It is the only place where their desires can get voice, and if you keep on in this course you will make that body popular and this body unpopular. I know what the pretext is. They say this is a large body of three hundred and odd members, and if you had unlimited debate you would have endless talk and wrangling and no determination of any matter ever arrived at.

That is made the pretext of adopting a system of rules that has had the effect to gag the Representatives in the House. I do not think it is necessary. I think we ought to take the power away from the Speaker. I think the House ought to appoint its own committees. And if you adopt the rule of ordering the previous question, the House can at any time determine when it wants to take a vote and stop debate. That is the only difficulty to-day in the Senate—that they have not the right there to order the previous question, and therefore the debate is unlimited. I believe with this reform—with the responsibility thrown back on the members of the House—we could again become a representative legislative body.

I hope this measure will go through. It has gone through, I think, nearly every session of Congress since I have been here. It is an old and familiar soldier here. It has served the purpose many times of members squaring themselves with their constituents, and is going to serve the same purpose again. [Laughter.] It is suggested by a friend near me that it will be put on the pension roll. It has done great and valiant service for a great many gentlemen. I trust some of you are in earnest. [Laughter.] I trust there are enough members of the House that are in earnest to pass the proposition, so that it may finally reach the people.

I believe in a republican form of government. As was stated by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], all the places of trust and honor held by the people should be filled by election by the people. That is the only safe way. The people may make mistakes, but the people can rectify them and make right their mistakes if you trust the people. It is the only safe rule, in a republican form of government, to throw the responsibility back on the people. It is responsibility that educates, and that is what we must depend upon.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say even this much when I started in; but some of my friends over on the other side asked me a few questions which were very proper, and I therefore prolonged my remarks beyond what I intended to when I started. I merely wanted to make the suggestion and draw members' attention to the fact that if we proceed in the course that we have been proceeding in, we shall make this body an unpopular body and the Senate a popular body, and I think we all want to avoid that. I, at least, want to avoid it. [Applause.]

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman last on the floor said he hoped that some of us on the Republican side were in earnest in our advocacy of this measure proposing to elect United States Senators by the people. Let me tell him that I for one am not here to seek any political advantage by urging the adoption of this resolution. The people of my district know thoroughly well that I have, during all my public career, strongly favored the election of United States Senators by the direct vote of the people.

Therefore I can stand here and say that it is not as a demagogue that I am advocating this measure. If I had had my way, the debate would have been on abolishing the Senate. I would far rather discuss a resolution that would do away entirely with the United States Senate. Why do I say this? Because I believe that the foremost thought of the world to-day in legislative matters is in favor of doing away with any intermediate body between that representing directly the will of the people and the executive. We see this in the case of the House of Lords of England.

In Great Britain there is a constant discussion as to the necessity of the House of Lords being continued, and those favoring its discontinuance are ever increasing in numbers. The United States Senate was made a part of our body politic by taking as an example the House of Lords of England. The members of the House of Lords were in fact appointed by the King, and appointed for the sole purpose of representing property. We have no king to make such appointments, and we have no property that ought to be represented as property. I hold that property in itself is always able to protect itself. I hold, on the other hand, that human beings, men who have feelings, especially those who are poor and helpless, always need protection.

It has been said by some who oppose propositions of this kind that we ought to continue the Senate because it represents the entity of the States. If those gentlemen would tell us why a State as an abstract entity ought to be represented, I certainly would be glad to be instructed upon that point. Human beings are all that a representative government ought to represent at all.

If it be a representative government, it means that it should be a government in which the representatives would be controlled by the wishes of a majority of the people. We know full well—at least those of us who have sympathetic hearts and souls—that the majority of the people of this land are in need of sympathy. And if public representatives, whether in the Senate or here, were true to their duty, then instead of representing only property interests (I mean taking care of property interests only) they would think how they could best advance the welfare of the common people.

I was a candidate for election to this body in the hope that it might be my privilege to render service in a way which would have been an occasion of honorable retrospect during my life and a matter which might be held to my advantage when I came before the great Judge hereafter—that I had been in a station where I could do something good for the common people. Thus far, I am frank to say, I have not had that opportunity.

The members of the State senate are not elected by the counties, but elected directly by the voters. There is to-day no higher body over the boards of aldermen in our cities, and that body is elected. There is no reason based upon analogy or anything else why United States Senators ought to exist; and there is every reason for maintaining that if they do exist because for constitutional reasons we can not now go far enough to exterminate them (using that word after due thought), then we certainly ought to make them amenable to the people.

We know how great are the temptations for the vast moneyed powers to distribute their money among a small number of men called State legislators, who may thus be induced to elect their creatures, the average United States Senator. The majority of the voters would not be purchaseable. If we had as United States Senators men elected by the people, we would have a representative body in a representative country. With United States Senators so chosen, I think we would have avoided almost all the scandals we have had during the last thirty-five years.

It has been said here by the Representative from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON]—and I think it was very pertinent—that the United States Senate is to-day the real representative body of the people of this country. If he had analyzed the reasons for this fact he would have found that the men who to-day are standing up in the United States Senate arrayed against the money power, trying to find a way by which the common people may be benefited, are those United States Senators who practically have been elected by the people.

In most of the Southern States United States Senators are designated at the primaries at which the people vote. The men thus chosen as Senators are those who are now trying with the best intelligence they possess to stand by what they believe to be the wishes of the people of the United States.

Let us cite instances. In the action on the late war resolution those Senators (speaking in a general way) who favored the independence of Cuba were Senators elected, to all intents and purposes, by popular vote—Senators coming mainly from the Southern and Western States, where United States Senators are practically designated at the primaries, and hence are the representatives of the popular will. A similar state of affairs exists as to the proposed bond issue and income tax.

Could we but accomplish this reform, and one other for which I have introduced a resolution, now before the Committee on Rules with the request that it may be submitted to this body, which is as follows:

Resolution by Mr. MCEWAN.

Resolved, That a special committee, to consist of five members of this House, be appointed and hereby instructed, through a subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into the feasibility of applying the principle of direct legislation through the initiative and referendum to the legislation of the Federal Government, and to report to this House, at this session, by bill or otherwise, the results of said inquiry; and that for the purpose hereof the committee be authorized to sit in the city of Washington, or any other city of the United States, and employ such clerical aid as may be necessary.

This provides for direct vote of the people upon proposed measures of legislation. If we now had the election of United States Senators by popular vote in the States, and if we had also some way by which we could ask the people whether they were satisfied with the laws proposed, then indeed would we have a popular government. This is direct legislation. It would do away entirely with all possibility of corruption. Men who might be selected by their fellow-men to come into public life would not be held up to odium and suspicion. I long, Mr. Speaker, I pray, for the day when the United States Government shall have the direct legislative system as it exists in Switzerland at this time. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the committee having in charge the joint resolution now pending before the House has given notice that he proposes at half past 4 o'clock to demand the previous question, I want to discuss for a few moments an amendment which I desire to submit at the proper time, after the disposal of the amendment now pending.

The amendment to which I refer relates to the mode in which the constitutional amendment is to be ratified by the several States of the Union. The resolution, as drawn by the committee, provides that it shall be ratified "by the legislatures of the various States." The Constitution of the United States provides two modes for the ratification of amendments proposed to the Constitution by Congress. I will read that part of the Constitution relating to the same. It is as follows:

When ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I propose to offer is to substitute the mode of ratification by conventions instead of by the legislatures.

I believe that the great mass of the people of the United States desire the adoption of this constitutional amendment. The experience which the States of Oregon, Kentucky, and Ohio have recently had in the attempt to elect United States Senators has demonstrated that the present mode is very expensive in the time it consumes of the legislature, is very demoralizing to the regular work of the legislative body, and is very productive of corrupt practices. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, I believe, is a good one, and I shall vote for it. No argument has been suggested against the election of the United States Senators by the people of the States; and I believe that the joint resolution proposed here, whether it be amended or not, will be adopted and should be adopted unanimously.

That being the case, a practical question arises as to how we can best secure the ratification of such a change in the organic law, which may involve a great deal of controversy in some of the States, and may involve a great deal of delay. The wisest plan, in my judgment, for Congress to adopt is to select that plan which will involve the least delay.

After this resolution passes the gantlet of legislative enactments here it has a hard road to travel, because when it gets into the States it will doubtless meet stormy opposition in some of the States by persons who favor the present mode of electing the Senators, and if possible they will defeat it. It requires the consent of three-fourths of the States. That means that if twelve States in the Union prefer the present system of voting for United States Senators, this law will not be and can not become an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Twelve States only, therefore, are necessary to defeat it.

I have heard, Mr. Speaker, with a good deal of interest, the description given by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] in his remarks to-day concerning the methods of manipulating legislatures in the election of United States Senators who do not represent the people, and the control of legislation by the bosses. We have reason to believe from newspaper reports and general current rumor that there is a great deal of truth in his statement.

If you submit this constitutional amendment to the legislatures for ratification you will find efforts being made for the purpose of defeating the law that would not be attempted if it were submitted to conventions in each State. When you take into consideration the fact that you not only have to get favorable action in each of the two branches of the legislature of the majority of the States but that it has to pass the scrutiny of the legislatures of three-fourths of all of the States, and run the gantlet of the opposition and fights that will be made against it to prevent its ratification, it is well to consider whether it will become a part of the Constitution after it passes Congress.

Now, when a convention in a State is called for the purpose of voting on the direct question as to whether this shall become a constitutional amendment, you will find that the delegates to such convention will represent the sentiment of the people.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Do you believe that a convention of that kind is to be called by a mass meeting of the people, or a convention to be called under the law of the State?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of course, under the law of the State.

Mr. DINGLEY. That is, by the legislature of the State.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And the legislature submits the constitutional amendment to the people for ratification through a convention.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Do you think the legislature of a State would call a convention to ratify this amendment when it would not ratify it itself?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly it would. It would not dare refuse to call a convention.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then why would it not ratify it itself?

Mr. SHAFROTH. When the Congress of the United States presents a constitutional amendment and directs ratification or rejection by a convention, do you suppose there is a State in the Union that will not call a convention?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then why not ratify it itself, instead of calling a convention to do that very thing?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Because the legislature might be opposed to the amendment and might defeat it. Yet they would no more think of refusing to submit it to a convention when directed by Congress, than a presiding officer would think of refusing to submit a motion. Even if you are opposed to a law yourself, if the National Government should make a demand or request upon you to submit it to the people, you would do it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, permit me to say, suppose the speaker of an assembly or the president of a State senate should appoint a committee with the direct purpose of smothering that resolution. Could not that be done? What the gentleman from Colorado says is perfectly true. It is ten thousand times more difficult to get it through a legislature than it would be to get it through a convention called for that purpose. It is easy to get a committee in either house of a State legislature to kill it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. Speaker, a legislator is elected on many issues, and perhaps not on the question of this constitutional amendment. Although the people may be in favor of this measure, there is no certainty that the legislator on this minor issue of the campaign will be in accord with them, whereas a man elected to a convention upon the direct issue is sure to reflect the will of the people. To say that the legislature would not call a convention would be, it seems to me, to put upon them a stigma that they should not bear.

The people of the United States want some such measure as this passed. The only possible way of defeating it is through some legislative manipulation to tie it up and prevent its being acted upon. A legislator, it is true, may refuse to vote for the constitutional amendment, but when he is not voicing his sentiments one way or the other, but is simply providing for a constitutional convention out of respect to the National Legislature, it seems to me that every one of them, whether for or against the amendment, would unquestionably vote to submit the question to a convention.

If you have a convention, I believe that this law will be ratified by three-fourths of the States, but if you do not, I doubt very much whether it will become a constitutional amendment. Twelve States can defeat it. If bosses control legislatures, and it is as easy as it is said to be to defeat a measure in a State legislature, it seems to me the better mode of having this constitutional amendment passed upon would be through conventions of the States.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this joint resolution providing for the election of United States Senators by the people. As I now recall, I have voted for quite a number of propositions of like character during my Congressional service. I realize, as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] does, that the resolution will necessarily encounter many difficulties in its transit to final approval and enactment. Under the limitations of our Constitution it is practically impossible to ingraft a constitutional amendment upon our organic law.

The Constitution requires the approval of two-thirds of the House, two-thirds of the Senate, and three-fourths of the legislatures of the States before an amendment can be recognized as a part of our constitutional charter. Such being the law, there is only one power that can secure the enactment of this amendment, and that is the power of an awakened public opinion; and I am frank to say I do not believe we have reached the point where the people are sufficiently aroused to compel Congress and the legislatures to pass this joint resolution. I believe it ought to be the law. I believe that not only the members of this House, but the Senate and the President as well, should be elected directly by the people.

I believe in trusting the people; but I desire to suggest, as supplemental to the observations of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON], that in my judgment one reason why this proposition has not the force, effect, and power to-day before this body and the country that it had in former years grows out of the fact that the people have come to regard the Senate as more nearly their representative upon great public questions than the House of Representatives. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, this is the result of our faulty system of rules, the existing system being the logical result of abuses prevailing under the old system.

Why, sir, I stood here under the former system of rules and saw three gentlemen arrest the business of the House for eight long days and nights. That was possible under a code of rules where the pendulum swung to the extreme of unlimited debate. Mr. Speaker, from that extreme, and since the Fifty-first Congress, under all administrations of the House—and it is the system I arraign—the pendulum has swung to the other extreme until we have now reached a time when upon great questions, properly challenging the attention of the country, the Senate attracts the attention of the people, and this body, which ought to stand for the people, is minimized and dwarfed under a vicious system of rules. This fact furnishes the reason why this amendment to elect Senators by the people does not appeal so forcefully to the country as it formerly did. I am free to say, however, that I desire Senators elected by the people, and if they were thus elected that body, under its existing rules, would infinitely surpass in its representative character this House, which should be the great tribune of the people.

Mr. Speaker, these statements are not prompted by partisan considerations. When we controlled the House, substantially the same code of rules was adopted, and when it was determined to press a measure to conclusion the Committee on Rules came in with a report, and ofttimes without sufficient time being allowed for debate measures were rushed through the House just as they are railroaded through the House to-day. But, Mr. Speaker, what is the result? Debate upon unimportant propositions can be secured for the asking, but when a great measure raising $100,000,000 of revenue and authorizing a bond issue of $500,000,000 or other measures of like character come up the power of the Committee on Rules is invoked, in the absence of unanimous consent, and these great measures are railroaded through a body that ought to be the great deliberative and representative body of the Republic.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of my friend to the fact that the time for debate on the war revenue bill was fixed by the House by unanimous consent, and not by a report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DOCKERY. I stated a moment ago it was either by special order or by unanimous consent, and it could not have been secured in that case except for the fact that we were standing on the threshold of war. I desire the gentleman to understand that I am challenging the system of rules inaugurated by the Fifty-first Congress, and substantially followed by all administrations of the House since that time.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could fix the attention of the seventy millions of people of this country upon the gravity of this situation. Unless we can find the golden mean, the proper middle ground on this question, avoiding alike the extremes of needless and unlimited debate on the one hand and the equally reprehensible extreme of no debate at all on the other, we will destroy this House as a deliberative body; and it will be said and we will admit in shame that the Senate of the United States is the great controlling deliberative body rather than this House, which under the Constitution is peculiarly the representative of the interests of the people of the United States. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON], showing that it is safe for him to denounce corporations, reminds me of the story of a Western minister. This gentleman went out to preach to a new congregation, and on his way to the church he met some sister, who called him aside and said, "My brother, I want to make a suggestion. Now, please do not say anything against dancing. Quite a number of our young ladies—some of the models of our church—attend dances, and I would not like you to hurt their feelings." He agreed very readily to this. After he had gone a little farther some brother of the congregation met him and said, "I want to make a suggestion. Now, please be very careful to-day as to what you say about gambling. You notice we have a new church. It was somewhat expensive. It was difficult for us to pay for it, and we found it necessary to go around among the gambling institutions of the town and ask for subscriptions, and they contributed very liberally and were very generous, and I wish you would not hurt their feelings." He said, "All right." He went a little farther on, and met another member, who said to him, "Excuse me a moment. Now, please don't say too much about saloon keepers to-day. We had a poor family here a short time ago. The father died, leaving a widow and children in distress, with no one to take care of them. We went among the saloon keepers and they made up a very comfortable sum. I wish you would not hurt their feelings." The preacher responded, "See here, my brother; I have been forbidden to talk about dancing or to preach against gambling or against saloons. In Heaven's name, tell me what I may preach about." The brother responded, "I will tell you. There is a small band of Mormons that came and settled among us a short time ago. You can abuse them as much as you please; there's not many of them; they haven't any friends, and you will be perfectly safe." My friend from Kansas says that he has none of these corporations in his district, and he knows that he can abuse them in every other district of the United States with perfect safety. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMPSON. Now you refer to the Republicans.

Mr. TONGUE. In this question I am with the gentleman from Kansas. I agree with him, and hope to see this resolution passed. In response to a remark made by one gentleman on the other side, allow me to say that this is not a new question in the State of Oregon. Quite a number of successive legislatures have passed resolutions upon this question, and asked for this amendment. Representatives from that State, both in the House and Senate, have uniformly favored it for a great many years.

We have had some experience in that State of the evil effects of the present system. Within a few years past two legislatures have met and adjourned without electing any Senator. During three sessions of the legislature the Senatorial contest has taken up practically the entire time, and has prevented the passage of desirable legislation. The last one has discovered another method of handling this matter, that does not seem to have occurred to the members in any other State. Our constitution requires two-thirds of the members of either house to constitute a quorum.

The result has been that one-third of the members of either house can prevent the election of a United States Senator, and so at the last session a little more than one-third of the members of the house declined to take the oath, declined to qualify, declined to enter upon the discharge of their duties, and the legislature was absolutely powerless. The senate organized and was in session forty days, incurring expenses and bills to be paid, but could not pass a single measure or a single binding resolution.

The house resolutely refused to organize because more than one-third of the members failed to qualify. The result has been no legislation, no United States Senator, no appropriation bill, and so, while we are collecting taxes and piling up money in the treasury of Oregon, the bills against the State are paid by warrants drawing 8 per cent interest. So far as that State is concerned it will be a very economical matter, it will save a vast expenditure of money, it will save a vast amount of friction and feeling, if the people elect their Senators at the ordinary election without additional expense or additional trouble.

But there is another matter. I am in favor of the amendment so as to make it compulsory on the people of a State to elect their Senators. The State of Oregon is interested in the quality of men that are elected from the State of New York or the State of Pennsylvania or the State of Ohio. The present system is not designed to elect the best men for United States Senators. Before a man can become a United States Senator he must learn other things than Federal legislation. He must learn to control the political machinery of his State. He must learn the methods of handling the various members of the legislature, and it is not always that the best people learn to do that. There have been men less than a half century ago elected to the Senate of the United States that could not have been elected by the people of their State.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] said the machine will probably control conventions and nominations. Possibly that may be true; but, Mr. Speaker, when the machine does that, when it controls the machinery of conventions and nominates a candidate for United States Senate, it will nominate men who have the confidence of the people, whose record and character, whose career and whose ability, are such as to entitle them to the respect and confidence of the people; and that is not always the case when it is done by the legislature.

It is one thing to nominate a candidate for the Senate before conventions and before elections, and another when everything is all over. I favor this amendment because it is for the best interests of the State. It will be more economical; it will insure better elections and a better quality of United States Senators and a more dignified and able body. [Applause.]

It is safer to trust the people, and this is a step in that direction. It is nearer government by the people and for the people.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, the enactment into law of the bill now under consideration will mark a new era in our nation's history, add a new milestone in the onward march of human progress, and enlarge the boundaries of our national advancement.

For, sir, not only are the provisions of the bill most wise and just, but of still higher interest is the fact that the enactment of this measure will legally reaffirm that great principle on which our Republic was founded, that the people are the sovereign power and the true source of government. Hence, sir, I trust that this measure shall be but the vanguard of others to follow which shall restore in fact, as well as in name, "a government of, by, and for the people."

THE FUTURE HIGH DESTINY OF OUR REPUBLIC.

Sir, I believe the enactment of this measure will so enlarge opportunities and awaken the enthusiasm of the American people that no supernatural vision will be needed to see with prophetic eye the exalted place which our Republic will occupy among the nations of the earth. And as Greece was the mother of philosophy, literature, and art, and the early cradle of patriotism and valor, and as the great commonwealth of the Roman Republic sought to emulate all the achievements of the Greeks, and added a system of jurisprudence upon which the codes of modern nations are still founded, it has been reserved for our Republic to blend the virtues of all preceding nations in one, and, "like the masterpiece of the Greek artist, to exhibit in a single work the beauties of every master and the perfection of every model."

The great author of the Declaration of Independence himself, supported by the conscience and judgment of the noblest patriots of the Revolution, who said, "We are not of those who fear to trust the people," struggled faithfully and long that both United States Senators and United States judges should, under authority of the Constitution, be elected directly by the people. And it was his abounding faith in the integrity of the common people which inspired Jefferson, as if by a divine influence, to write his Magna Charta of human rights, which will remain through all time the dearest tribute to human virtue, and the most splendid monument of statesmanship and patriotism.

INFLUENCE OF ARISTOCRACY IN LIMITING CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

But unfortunately for our Republic, when the final draft of our national Constitution was submitted to the States for ratification, the influence of those who were "afraid to trust the people," the "Tories" of the Revolution, and those whose interests or associations still were with royalty, had forced many compromises, among which were the methods of the election of Senators and judges of the United States Supreme Court, and with the uniform tendency to conservatism in the decisions of the Supreme Court, with the influences which dominate their nomination, our national Constitution as now judicially construed is shorn of its power to defend the people against many invasions of their inherent rights.

Were it not, Mr. Speaker, that the present system of election of Senators was enjoined by the Constitution, it would be difficult to imagine a single reason or shadow of a defense for this system. And, sir, with the yearly recurring scenes of disgrace, debauchery, and corruption which accompany the election of a United States Senator, there is now no shadow, even, of defense for the continuance of the present system. The actual experiences in the present system for over a century of our country's history are far more potent than theories. The scenes of corruption and bribery attending the election of Senators are matters of such universal knowledge that no need exists to recite their horrible details.

To-day one Senator stands convicted of bribery by a majority of the committee of the legislature of his State appointed to investigate his election. The large sums of money used in this contest, the coercion, the consequent riots, and the effect upon the public sentiment are fresh in the memory of all. The people of one State (Oregon) have for some time been represented by but one Senator, because, though their legislature has been repeatedly in session, they could not elect a Senator because they could not agree on a division of spoils.

They went even further. In order to prevent the election of a Senator more than one-third of the members failed to qualify; and as the law of that State requires two-thirds of all members-elect to constitute a quorum for any business, they entirely blocked all legislation, seriously jeopardizing the interests of the State, which were made subservient to greed, ambition, or revenge. Scenes of a similar character also were recently enacted in the State of Kentucky, when the interests of the people were for weeks kept in abeyance, while selfish interests and human passion held sway.

We feel in Michigan also the terrible effects of this system as a growing ulcer. Starting from the legislature as the heart of the body politic, poisonous influences are pulsated through the arteries of the various departments, permeating to the people. At the last Senatorial contest it was repeatedly stated in the press, and I have never heard it denied, that over $1,500 was paid over the bar of a single hotel for liquor by the "manager" of the successful candidate. The money for "influencing" the election of Senators is furnished by those who desire either legislation in their special interest, or appointments for themselves or friends. Thus the vote and influence of the Senator is "fixed" in advance by political bosses or corporate interests, and the people at large are without actual representation.

TRUST THE PEOPLE.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that, in the light of our national experience, no shadow of a valid reason can now be given why the people of this country should not by direct vote elect their Senators as well as their governors of States and Representatives in Congress. I will, however, allude to one argument brought forward by the junior Senator of my State, when, as a candidate for this office, addressing the students of the college in the city where we both reside (Kalamazoo), he said, as reported in the official organ of his party:

I once thought I was in favor of the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people, but I could not vote for it now, because the people can not be trusted.

How much greater the faith of Jefferson and Lincoln. Jefferson said:

I am not of those who are afraid to trust the people.

Lincoln said:

Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people? Is there any better or equal hope in the world?

This country, with its institutions, belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing Government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending or their revolutionary right to dismember or overthrow it.

I will agree with the honorable Senator in this, that the people could not be trusted to provide a vast corruption fund to be used for their own oppression, or to set apart vast sums to be used in riot and drunkenness to encompass the ends of their oppressors.

But, sir, I deny that there is any one class, no matter how great their pretensions to embody within their caste all of "national honor," who hold in more sacred regard the highest virtues of citizenship, integrity, patriotism, benevolence, and courage than those of whom Mr. Lincoln also said:

God loved them most, the common people, because he made so many of them.

SHOULD THE SENATE UNDER THE PRESENT SYSTEM BE RETAINED?

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it has been for some time seriously considered by thoughtful men whether, under the present system of their election, it would not be far better if the Senate were abolished. Illicit speculations, jobbery, and disgraceful scenes in connection with the passage of the sugar schedules in both the Dingley and Wilson laws, in which it has been charged that vast sums were made by Senators and millions more by the sugar trust, and like scenes in connection with the lumber schedules in the Dingley law, when a Senator's committee room was turned over to the combine of millionaire timber thieves and log rollers in their conspiracy against the home builders—all these frauds upon the public demand either a radical reform in the manner of the election of Senators or else the abolishment of that branch of the Government.

THE SENATE A RELIC OF BARBARISM.

The barbarisms of antiquity still hover around this body. In the Roman Empire the chief requirement for a senator, next to Roman citizenship, was the possession of a specified amount of wealth. England, evolving from the chaos of the dark ages, made the possession of a certain amount of English land the chief requirement to a seat in her House of Lords, which is still in force. The great commoner, Gladstone, witnessing the evil effects of this system, publicly declared that unless the policy of the House of Lords should change, the interests of the nation would demand its overthrow. In our Republic the same barbarism exists, but in another form.

It is not required by the Constitution that a Senator shall himself be the actual possessor of wealth, but under the present system they are often chosen by vast combinations of wealth, whose special agents they become; and our system admits of more dangers than that of Rome or England, because the aggregate combinations of wealth which center in a single Senator are much greater, and, owing their election to these vast combinations they must surrender their personal convictions to the dictates of their masters.

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF THE PEOPLE THE GREAT ISSUE—THIS SHOULD BE MAINTAINED BY THE SYSTEM OF "DIRECT LEGISLATION."

I said, Mr. Speaker, that the highest interest which attaches to this bill is the recognition of the great principle of the sovereignty of the people. This bill, if passed, will, I trust, be also a promise of many coordinate reforms for restoring the sovereignty of the people in all departments of government under that system of pure democracy popularly known as "direct legislation."

THE SAFEGUARDS OF TRUE DEMOCRACY.

Although the recognition of the principle that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed" dates from the most ancient democracy and was defended by the ablest philosophers, yet, like the arts and sciences, it was buried for centuries by the despotism, intrigues, and ignorance of the Middle Ages. It has, however, made gigantic strides during the past fifty years in various countries, notably among which are the Swiss Republic, and Australia, the latter the birthplace of our improved ballot system. To illustrate the modes by which direct legislation is conducted in Switzerland, I shall submit as a supplement to my remarks a brief report of a recent and most important referendum recently submitted and carried.

This is the purchase by the Swiss Republic on February 20 of the present year, at a cost of 1,200,000,000 francs, of all the railway lines of the country. During this contest the railroad companies used superhuman efforts to influence public opinion against the measure, disfiguring nature's sublime monuments with cartoons, one of which represented a Swiss shepherd bowed to the earth by an enormous cheese on his back, labeled "1,200,000,000 francs!"

They used the same arguments which the railroads and telegraphs of our own country use—the "dangers to national purity attending an increase in Government employees;" "the inability of a government to successfully manage great business interests," etc. Yet, notwithstanding the immense sums of money expended by the railroad companies to defeat the measure, notwithstanding the fact that their railroads are built over and through great mountains, with tunnels over 8 miles in length, the most gigantic and expensive engineering feats in the world, national ownership won by an overwhelming majority, the vote being 384,148 "Yes" against 177,130 "No."

If we enjoyed national ownership of railroads and telegraphs in this country, the wholesale bribery of public officers—legislative, executive, and judicial—by free "passes," telegraph "franks," and "retainers" would not exist, and the railroads could not, in conspiracy with the money power, force the contemplated gigantic issue of interest-bearing bonds, by plundering the public Treasury of the funds which the patriotism of the people is so freely furnishing to carry on the war.

WHY THE PUBLIC THINK WE HAVE "TOO MUCH LEGISLATION."

From our childhood we have become accustomed to hear it said that "we have too much legislation." I wondered when a boy if this could be true, and I have learned that the people judge rightly. Why? Because most of our laws are dictated by selfish interests for burdening the people, granting to corporations gifts of the public domain, franchise rights of infinite value, and the monopoly of those great gifts which God and nature intended as the heritage of all mankind.

How many, Mr. Speaker, of the measures which are passed by Congress would be approved by the people if they knew of the influences by which they were passed? Sir, I believe there would be but few. There is not a member of this House who does not know that many of our laws for tariffs, appropriations, revenues, bonds, and railroad franchises are passed with corrupt influences.

DIRECT LEGISLATION AND ITS SPLENDID ACHIEVEMENTS IN THE SWISS REPUBLIC.

"Direct legislation" is, in the fullest sense, "a government of, by, and for the people." It extends the principles of a pure democracy to the highest possible limit in government, limited only by the will of the people. It usually includes the following:

"The initiative.—The proposal of a law by a percentage of the voters.

"The referendum.—The vote at the polls on a law proposed through the initiative, or, if petitioned for by a percentage of the voters, on any law passed by a legislative body.

"Proportional representation.—A plan of nominating and electing legislators and executives which shall voice the exact choice of the voters in proportion to their numerical strength.

"The imperative mandate.—The right to vote out of office through the initiative and referendum any official who fails to perform his duty."

The "initiative" is effected by a petition of a specified proportion of the electors (usually from 5 to 10 per cent), by which the lawmaking body is compelled to formulate, discuss, and vote upon the measure named.

If defeated, the people can have it referred directly to them for a popular vote. This is the "referendum." Or, if passed, they can upon petition demand a "referendum" to them for appeal or affirmation.

If desired, the "initiative" petition may require the "referendum" to the people directly, without further special petition. It is usual, however, for the legislative body to first vote upon the measure, and, if carried, a reasonable time is allowed to test the merits of the law.

In a recent address issued by the Direct Legislation League No. 1, of Philadelphia, Pa., occurs the following:

"But some may claim that it would be impossible for such a system to be put in successful practice in this country, for the reason that the American people are too busy to be continually signing 'initiatives,' 'referendums,' or 'imperative mandates.' But is it true that we would neglect these duties? Are not our people generally awakening to the fact that the present frightful economic conditions are due entirely to legislation passed either in ignorance or by bribery; that the poor are growing poorer and the rich richer; that the great middle class is being gradually wiped out as the result of written laws enacted in defiance of natural laws?"

But the practical working of direct legislation in Switzerland has shown that the voters have none of the trouble which, at first thought, would seem to be necessary. The first result of the system was the total abolishment of the lobby, "the third house." The bribers gone, the professional politician soon became unknown as such, and then in turn political parties were dissolved, and now partisanship never warps the judgment of the voter. And, lastly, instead of office holding being disgraceful, upright citizens now strive for office because of the honor attached. Thus good legislation at once resulted, and very seldom do the voters make use of their prerogatives, and then only to settle matters of minor importance involving merely differences of opinion. To-day Switzerland is a model republic.

To our citizens who are acquainted with the inner secrets of political deals, and who therefore never vote, direct legislation appeals at once, and every one who loves his country needs only to study the system to become its advocate. The spread of the movement in the United States has been phenomenal. Scattered all over our land are hundreds of nonpartisan "direct legislation leagues," and lately the State of Nebraska has adopted the system.

John A. Wayland says:

"It will simplify laws and government. It will kill monopoly. It will purify the ballot and supplant violence. It will broaden manhood. It will prevent revolution and accelerate progress. It will banish sectionalism and party bondage. It will abolish special privileges and plutocratic dictation. It will reduce taxation to necessity and prevent the bribery of lawmakers. It will aid honest representatives in serving the people. It will give us a government of the people, by the people, and for the people on the foundation of equal and exact justice to all."

For the purpose of supporting the spirit of this bill, with other salutary provisions, I have prepared the following, which I shall introduce for the consideration of Congress:

A bill to purify the public service, and to prevent unjust discriminations by corporations against citizens of the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it shall be unlawful from and after the passage of this act for any railroad, express, steamship, telegraph, or telephone company, or any corporation, association, or individual engaged in the business of a common carrier or in the transmission of intelligence, or for any national bank or any other corporation, association, or person whose interests may be affected by legislation, judicial proceedings, or Government contracts pending at the time or about to be pending, or for any officer or employee of any of the aforesaid corporations, associations, or persons to give or offer to give to the President of the United States, any member of his Cabinet, any Senator or Representative in Congress, any judge of a United States court, or to any other officer or employee of the Government any free transportation, either of persons or freight, free transmission of intelligence, any reduced rates upon the same, or any privilege, emolument, or immunity to which the general public is not legally entitled at the same time.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any corporation, association, or person such as hereinbefore enumerated, or those whose interests may be affected by any legislation in Congress, by judicial proceedings in United States courts, or by Government contracts pending at the time or about to be pending, to employ or offer to employ as agent, counsel, attorney, or in any other capacity, any officer or employee of the United States Government, or to promise such employment to be given at the expiration of their Government service.

SEC. 3. That any person or persons violating any of the provisions of the preceding sections of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, within the jurisdiction of which the offense was committed, be subject for each offense to a fine not less than $500 and not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than six months and not exceeding ten years, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court; and such rights and privileges as may have been granted such a corporation or person by Congress may also, in the discretion of the court, be annulled, so far as may be done without violating the constitutional rights of any citizen.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for the President of the United States, any member of his Cabinet, any Senator or Representative in Congress, any judge of a United States court, or any other officer or employee of the Government, to receive, or offer to receive, except upon payment of due compensation at the time and in the same manner as the general public, any free transportation of persons or property, any discrimination in rates in relation to the same, or any privileges, emoluments, or immunities to which the general public are not legally entitled at the time.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any officer or employee of the United States Government to give or offer to give his services as agent, counsel, attorney, or otherwise, during his term of office or Government service, to any corporation, association, persons, or person whose interests may be affected by pending legislation, or legislation about to be pending, or pending their Government office or service to offer their services in any capacity, to be given after the expiration of their Government service.

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States Government during his term of office to buy, sell, or in any manner speculate or deal in the stocks or bonds of any corporation the value of which would be affected by pending legislation or legislation about to be pending, either by margins or otherwise; or during the pendency of any legislation affecting the stocks or bonds of any corporation to impart information or an opinion respecting such legislation for the purpose of aiding any other person in buying or selling such stocks or bonds.

SEC. 7. That any person or persons violating any of the provisions of sections 4, 5, or 6 of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the offense was committed, be subject for each offense to a fine not less than $500 and not exceeding $10,000, or imprisonment for a term not less than six months and not exceeding ten years, or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court, and such conviction shall terminate the office of the person thus convicted.

SEC. 8. That it shall be unlawful for any director of any railroad, telegraph, express, steamship, or telephone company, national bank, or any member or officer of any association or combination formed for the purpose of controlling the price of any article of commerce, usually known as "trusts," to hold the office of President of the United States, member of Cabinet, Senator, Representative in Congress, judge of any United States court or head of any Department or bureau of the Government. And the holding of such position in any of the corporations mentioned herein shall render their election or appointment to any of the offices specified null and void; and every such officer shall, upon entering the duties of his office, besides the usual oath, state under oath whether or not he is a director in any of the corporations specified; and if so, he shall not qualify. Immediately after the passage of this act all of the officers of the Government enumerated in this section, who are at the time holding office, shall also make like declaration under oath before such officer as would be qualified to administer the oath of their respective offices; and the terms of office of such as are directors in any of the corporations mentioned shall thereupon be vacated, so far as may be done without violating the constitutional rights of any citizen.

SEC. 9. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions herein named are hereby repealed.

APPENDIX.

THE REFERENDUM AND THE SWISS RAILROADS.

[From the American Monthly Review of Reviews for April, 1898.]

On Sunday, February 20, 1898, the people of Switzerland were called upon to decide whether they would become the owners of their railroads or whether these should remain in the hands of private companies. Throughout each Canton voting papers were distributed with this question upon them: "Will you accept the Federal law of October 15, 1897, for the purchase and administration of railways by the Federation and for the organization of Swiss Federal railways?" Opposite, as in our own ballot papers, was a space for the answer, "Yes" or "No," and the addition of any other word would invalidate the vote. Copies of the law were also distributed among the voters. The large majority answered in the affirmative, 384,148 voting for the bill, and less than half that number, only 177,130, against it.

As the result, the principal lines in Switzerland will in five years be the property of the nation. This is a very different result from that of a referendum which was held on the same question, but with reference to the lines of one railroad company only, six years ago, December 6, 1891, when 289,406 voted against and only 130,729 in favor of the acquisition of the Central Railway by the Federation. It has been a long business on the part of the advocates of State railroads in Switzerland to educate the people up to their views. The question is one of special importance to the whole country, for by its geographical position, far away from any sea front, with intercommunication between one part and another hampered by chains of mountains, it owes its commercial development to its railroad engineers, who have made it the highway of nations, and also the holiday ground for the wealthy of all countries. The lover of nature may give a shudder as he sees the black line creeping along the magnificent gorge, and even desecrating the regions of perpetual snow, but to those who live among the heights it means possibilities of development formerly unattainable, and to take it away would be to take away their livelihood. But the same physical features which make railroads specially important to the country make them also specially difficult to build and to finance, and hence the question of their public control, though it has been so much agitated, has been shirked until the present time.

'TIS FIFTY YEARS SINCE.

The idea was first put prominently forward in the debates on the constitution of 1848. It was then declared that article 23, providing that the Confederation may carry on at its own expense or may subsidize public works, and giving it to this end the right of expropriation with indemnity, has special reference to railroads, and it has been impossible since then for private companies to maintain in opposition to this their claims to undisturbed possession. It was even proposed at that time that the State should open up its own railroads. Our engineer, Stephenson, was consulted as to the practicability of such an enterprise and declared that it would be impossible, owing to the difficulty of construction, to estimate the expense beforehand, but he and other experts seem to have been strong in their condemnation of the extortions practiced by private companies elsewhere. The Federal Council and a committee of the National Council declared themselves in favor of State enterprise, the latter closing its report on the subject in May, 1852, with this stirring injunction: "Declare resolutely that the Swiss railroads shall be a national work, an indissoluble bond between our different populations, a fresh undertaking of a democracy full of life, an imposing monument of our new constitution." But the Federal Assembly could not face the risks of such a great undertaking; they would not even take partial liability and partial authority in the schemes of private companies, but put all responsibility on the shoulders of the cantonal governments, reserving to themselves only the right of refusing sanction to plans which threatened danger from a military point of view.

THE RAILROADS AND THE LAW.

Under the cantonal authority difficulties soon became manifest; the development of railroads soon proved to be an affair of much more than local importance; international questions entered in and caused complications; cantonal jealousies made it easy for the private companies to dictate their own terms; and then again when these went too far and became too dictatorial the Cantons refused even their reasonable requests, so that the companies appealed for protection against them. At last the Federal Government stepped in, and in 1872 took back power into its own hands by the Federal law of 1872, which remains in force to the present day. By this act it provided for the enforcement of any breach of contract against the companies for the regular administration of postal, telegraph, and military communication and for the exercise of its authority in various other directions. The Federal Council (who correspond to a certain extent to our Cabinet) in their report at the time remained faithful to their old ambition for State control, which they had cherished from the beginning, and declared that if the companies failed to give satisfaction the next law should provide for their supersession by the State. Since then many subsidiary laws have been passed dealing with the railroad companies, such, for instance, as that of 1890, limiting the hours of work of their employees.

FIRST ATTEMPTS AT NATIONALIZATION.

Meanwhile the companies themselves had been gradually opening up the country amid all the ups and downs of fortune of which the State had fought shy. By the end of 1894 they had altogether lines to the extent of 3,544 kilometers, a capital of 1,182,258,354 francs, and had suffered losses amounting to 94,941,532 francs. Many of the companies which started independently had amalgamated, while small local lines, such as those objectionable funiculars up the mountain sides, remain unabsorbed. Great engineering feats had been accomplished, which were the wonder of the whole world, but they had entailed, as was foreseen, great risks, and the suffering and loss caused by failures and panics had been more severe in the case of private companies than they would have been if borne by the State. The extreme anxiety to make money had also blinded the companies to the interests of the people and had caused unnecessary waste and inconvenience. These things were noted by the watchful Federal Council, and in 1883 they tried to make use of the power which fell to them in that year to give notice that in 1888 the companies would be bought up by the State. But the financial basis of this arrangement was found to be unsound; the twenty-five years' purchase which the State was bound to pay amounted in the case of each company, except one, to more than its first value; and it was therefore decided that instead of taking over the property of the companies a law should be passed forcing them to keep their accounts in such a way as to form a fair basis for future purchase. Not discouraged by this failure, the Federal Council in 1887 put forward another attempt. It proposed to take over the lines of the Northeastern Company by friendly agreement, but received such cold support from the Chambers that it was obliged to break off negotiations. In 1890 the Federal Assembly took a step in advance by using powers which the Federal Council had legalized in 1857, and buying up so many shares in the Jura-Simplon Railway that they became entitled to a considerable voice in its management. At the same time they paved the way for the great move which they have now taken, and which has now been ratified by the people, for they made stipulations that the Confederation should have the right to buy up all the lines in May, 1903. This opportunity the Federal Council was determined not to let slip. Five years' notice was required for the purchase, and this accordingly falls due in the spring of this year in the case of five of the large companies, the St. Gothard being purchasable two years later. Meanwhile they made, as we have already seen, still another attempt in 1891, when they proposed to buy up the Central Railway Company, and were defeated at the referendum.

THE COUNCIL'S ARGUMENT.

On March 25 of last year the Federal Council sent a "message" to the Federal Assembly laying before them the proposed law which, with a few alterations, was circulated among the people before the vote, with details as to its financial issues, etc., and giving the history of the development of railroads in Switzerland and of former attempts at nationalization. They also devote a considerable space to arguments in favor of State control, among which we see all those which are so often urged among us, but with far less persistency and publicity. First and foremost they put the argument that, while a private company acts primarily in the interests of its shareholders, the State's first object is the convenience of the public. They lay down most stringently that, after paying the interest on the capital borrowed for the purchase, all profits shall go, not into the State funds, but into the improvement of the service, by increasing its efficiency and lowering the fares. They then show very clearly and practically the advantages to be gained by—

1. Unity of administration, involving saving of labor, simplification of bookkeeping, less expense in providing railroad plant, greater security of traffic. They lay down the principle of a "living wage" for their employees, and promise to carry out more fully than the companies have done the provisions as to limitation of hours and the arrangements for pensions and sick benefit which already exist.

2. The cheapening of transit, both for passengers and goods.

3. The establishing of a sinking fund for the redemption of the original capital.

4. Finally, the freedom from foreign influence which may creep in with foreign shareholders, and the entire distinctness of the railroad funds from those of the state, so that they may be devoted to improvement of the service.

STATE MANAGEMENT.

The financial basis of the arrangement had been settled in the former charters given to the companies as amended in 1883; the sum to be paid by the state is to be twenty-five times the average profits for the past ten years. The boards which shall have the management of the business under the state are to be constituted with a view both to continuity of action and also ample representation both of federal and cantonal interests. It is only the six largest companies which are to be taken over at first; the smaller ones can be safely left to local management for the present.

The plan thus carefully drawn up and explained by the Federal Council was under discussion in the chambers for several months last year. On October 15 it was finally accepted by them, and then followed the final agitation to bring the merits of the scheme before the people at large, which, as we know, has just now come to an overwhelmingly successful issue. We shall all watch with interest the further working of this measure which has been so long fought over, so often delayed, and which is of importance not only to the country which has adopted it, but to others to whom its success or failure will be a practical object lesson.

NOTE ON SWISS RAILWAY REFERENDUM IN THE DIRECT LEGISLATION RECORD.

Abstract of the federal law for the acquisition and management of railways by the Confederation, etc.

Article 1. The Confederation acquires and manages on its own account, under the name of "federal railways," all Swiss railways which are of great strategical or economic importance and whose acquisition will not cause too great expense. When it acquires, it may leave secondary lines in the hands of existing companies, and it may acquire accessory enterprises, such as steamboat lines.

2. The acquisition shall take place by means of redemption (purchase), according to federal legislation and the railway charters. (A list of roads is given which are to be immediately purchased.) The Federal Council is also authorized to purchase said roads at private sale.

3, 4–6. Minor regulations.

7. Funds for the purchase, construction, and operation of railways to be raised by issuing bonds, not to run over sixty years, or in any other convenient way, to be ratified by the Federal Assembly.

8. Regulations for keeping accounts of roads.

9–11. Effect on outstanding obligations of companies. Taxation of roads ceases.

12. Department of railways created.

13. Details of organization.

14–39. Continuation of the same.

40–41. Only Swiss to be employed on the roads. Employed only for term of three years, like other public servants.

42–47. Details of employment, pensions, and insurance for sickness.

48–50. Special and local provisions.

Decreed by the National Council October 15, 1897. Decreed by the Council of State October 15, 1897. Referendum demanded by 85,000 voters. Accepted Sunday, February 20, by a popular vote of 384,146 in favor to 177,130 against.

This was followed by the adoption of a bill in the National Council providing for State purchase at a figure approximating twenty-five times the average net earnings of the roads during the past decade. In other words, the Government assumes that the value of the roads is the sum upon which they have been yielding 4 per cent interest to their owners.

There will be no such scandals as occurred when the English Government bought out the telegraph companies, paying for some of them double their market value a few months before the purchase was formally proposed. In Switzerland such plundering of the public is, of course, impossible, as the terms of the purchase will have to be submitted to popular approval, and the general public in Switzerland has no disposition to enrich the security owners at its own expense. Representatives may thus sacrifice the public, but the public will not thus sacrifice itself.

The aggregate sum named for the purchase is $186,000,000. This will increase the public debt (now $15,000,000) from $5 per capita to $67; but, inasmuch as the public is now paying 4 per cent interest on the railway securities, and hereafter will have to pay only 3½ per cent on its own bonds covering them, there is a prospective decrease in the public burdens. Doubtless the present financial success of the Prussian state railway system has much to do with the strength of the movement for public ownership, but a still stronger impulse was the desire for uniformity of tariffs throughout the country, without discriminations between places or persons, and the cheapening of transportation for workingmen and persons of moderate means. These, as Herr von der Leyen says, were the "first beneficial effects" of state ownership in Prussia, and they will doubtless be the first beneficial effects of the same system in Switzerland.

The following is the constitution of The Direct Legislation League, No. 1, of Philadelphia:

"ARTICLE I.

"The name of this organization shall be The Direct Legislation League, No. 1, of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania.

"ARTICLE II.

"The object of this league shall be the adoption of direct legislation through the initiative and referendum in local, State, and national affairs; also proportional representation and the imperative mandate.

* * * * * * *

"ARTICLE IV.

"There shall be no admission fee, dues, or assessments, the expenses to be defrayed by voluntary contributions.

"ARTICLE V.

"There shall be a president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, to be elected annually, and, as far as possible, these officers shall belong to different political parties. Any office in this league may be declared vacant at any time by a majority vote of the membership and a new election held. One person may act as secretary and treasurer.

"ARTICLE VI.

"This constitution may be amended at any meeting by a majority of the members present, provided a week's notice has been given of the proposed amendment.

"ARTICLE VII.

"This league shall not take action on any other issue than the expressed object named in this constitution."

NOTE.

Persons interested in the subject of direct legislation should address the Direct Legislation Record, Newark, N. J. (the official organ of the National Direct Legislation League), or Mr. Eltweed Pomeroy, president of the league, at same place.

I also give notice, Mr. Speaker, that at the proper time I shall move an amendment to the bill which is under consideration by which, instead of being optional with the States, it shall be mandatory upon them to elect Senators by direct vote of the people.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this measure, followed by others of like patriotic spirit, may soon be the law of the land. Then will the objects for which our Constitution was written be achieved: "To form a more perfect union, to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

[Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment which I wish to offer at the proper time; but in view of the fact that the time set for the calling of the previous question and the final vote is so near at hand, I will ask leave to print in the RECORD my remarks bearing on the amendment which I shall offer when too late to make remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. STEELE). If there be no objection, the gentleman from Kansas will have leave to print remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be no desire to debate this question further, and if it be agreeable to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], I suggest that he now call the previous question and that we take a vote on my amendment.

Mr. MAHON. I had proposed to occupy some little time on this subject; but if there is a disposition to vote now, I will not detain the House.

Mr. CORLISS. I call for the previous question on the amendment and on the joint resolution to its passage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will that exclude the offering of other amendments?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. TODD. I have also an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The previous question being moved, the Chair will have to put the question on ordering it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It was understood that the vote would not be taken until half past 4 o'clock. There is one amendment now pending, and my amendment would not be relevant until that is disposed of.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, it was agreed to; there being on a division (called for by Mr. SHAFROTH)—ayes 70, noes 61.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD, it was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. TODD. For the purpose of securing an opportunity to offer my amendment, I move that the bill be recommitted with instructions to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. DINGLEY. As the Constitution requires a two-thirds vote on a proposition to amend the Constitution, I submit that on the passage of this joint resolution the yeas and nays must be taken.

The SPEAKER. The present question is on a motion to recommit. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] later on the point he suggests. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD] moves to recommit the joint resolution with instructions to insert the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out after "vote," in line 15, page 2, all to and including "people," in line 21, and insert: "United States Senators shall be elected in the several States at large by direct vote of the people."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD] to the fact that my amendment, already adopted, provides for a direct vote by the people, and therefore covers the same ground as the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TODD. If the substance of this amendment has already been embodied in the joint resolution, I will not insist on my proposition.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion?

Mr. TODD. Yes, sir.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, since the gentleman has withdrawn his motion to recommit, I move to recommit with the instructions I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the last line, add the following:

"That the following article be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to take the place of section 9 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, shall stand in lieu of said original section and become a part of said Constitution:

"'Section 9 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States of America, amended as proposed by Congress and ratified by the legislatures of the several States, pursuant to the fifth article of the original Constitution.

"'SEC. 9. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.'"

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to know if the previous question has not been ordered on the bill and amendments?

Mr. SIMPSON. But this is a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. This is to recommit with instructions. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. QUIGG. Before that, Mr. Speaker, I ask if the instructions which have been read so far are in order? Would they have been in order as an amendment to the proposed article?

Mr. RIDGELY. This is not an amendment.

Mr. ARNOLD. It is not pertinent.

Mr. QUIGG. I make the point of order that this proposition, so far as it has been read, is not in order as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading, and then the Chair can rule upon the matter.

The SPEAKER. The full instructions will be read first.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

Congress may impose taxes on incomes, inheritances, corporations, corporate stocks and obligations, and estates of living persons, in excess of such exemptions as it shall deem reasonable, and may graduate the rate of taxation and impose higher rates per cent on large incomes, inheritances, and estates than on smaller ones.

Mr. STEELE (interrupting the reading). I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that this evidently is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER proceeded to submit the question.

Mr. POWERS. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that an amendment to the Constitution requires a vote by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. On what authority does the gentleman base that proposition?

Mr. POWERS. I will state to the Chair——

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid any confusion, I call for the yeas and nays. Why should we not have them?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 185, nays 11, answered "present" 10, not voting 149; as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the joint resolution was adopted.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Florida, Mr. DAVIS, be excused on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANHAM. And further, Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that I am paired on this vote with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MCCALL. If he were present, I should vote "aye."

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I am paired on this vote with the gentleman from New York, Mr. FOOTE, but not knowing how he would vote, I prefer to withdraw mine, having voted "aye."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WANGER, answered on this vote? I am paired with him. If he were present, I should vote "aye." I have voted, but as I do not know how he would vote, I prefer to withdraw mine.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I voted "aye." I see that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. TAYLER, has not voted. I am paired with him, and though I am under the impression that he would vote as I do, I prefer to withdraw mine, not being positive as to his wishes in the matter.

Mr. TODD. I am paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. SHELDEN. If he were present, I would vote "aye."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. JETT, who, if present, would vote "aye;" and hence I have voted "aye" on this question.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HENDERSON with Mr. MCMILLIN.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. STROWD of North Carolina.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS with Mr. MCDOWELL.

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. MILLS with Mr. MCCORMICK.

Mr. TAWNEY with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. GAINES.

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. STURTEVANT with Mr. SLAYDEN.

Mr. CHICKERING with Mr. DE ARMOND.

Mr. ROBBINS with Mr. MOON.

Mr. BELDEN with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. BULL with Mr. BENNER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CODDING with Mr. JONES of Virginia.

Mr. SHATTUC with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. COLSON with Mr. SMITH of Kentucky.

Mr. COCHRANE of New York with Mr. BODINE.

Mr. WARD with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota with Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. MAGUIRE.

Mr. HEPBURN with Mr. CARMACK.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Mr. FOOTE with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. SAUERHERING with Mr. MCALEER.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana with Mr. GRIFFITH.

Mr. BROSIUS with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. MANN with Mr. JETT.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. TATE.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. TODD.

Mr. BARRETT with Mr. MARSHALL.

Mr. MAHANY with Mr. BAIRD.

Mr. WHITE of Illinois with Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. LYBRAND with Mr. LENTZ.

Mr. PRINCE with Mr. HINRICHSEN.

Mr. FARIS with Mr. CLARK of Missouri.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. BARTLETT.

For this day:

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana with Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. DAVENPORT with Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. DRIGGS.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. BENTON.

Mr. MCCALL with Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. LINNEY with Mr. JENKINS.

Mr. MESICK with Mr. LEWIS of Georgia.

Mr. SPRAGUE with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. HOWARD of Georgia.

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. CRANFORD.

Mr. JOY with Mr. KING.

Mr. REEVES with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

On this question:

Mr. GROSVENOR with Mr. EVANS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. I do not know how he would vote, but if he were present, I would vote "aye."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HICKS. I withdraw my vote. If he were present, I would vote "aye."

Mr. HEPBURN. I learn that I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. CARMACK. I supposed that that pair was for last week, but I withdraw my vote. If he were present, I should vote "aye."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that to pass this proposition it requires two-thirds of the membership of both Houses, not two-thirds of the members present, under the language of the Constitution. While I suppose it has been ruled on heretofore, I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the Constitution and to the somewhat anomalous position in which we will be put if this proposition is declared carried by less than two-thirds of the members of both Houses.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman any authority for his contention?

Mr. HILL. I have simply the Constitution of the United States. With the permission of the Chair I should like to read it:

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments.

Now, I wish to call attention to the fact that if two-thirds of a quorum of the House can take this action, it puts us in the somewhat singular position that whereas under the Constitution, as I read it casually, 214 members would be required, under the present aspect of the case, if my contention is overruled, 120 members, barely six or seven States in the Union, can pass a resolution which, if the action was taken directly by the States, would unquestionably require two-thirds of the States; and it hardly seems to me that it was intended that the language should be so construed. I submit the point of order so that there may be a ruling upon it.

Mr. GROW. It is two-thirds of the House, and the House is a majority of the members chosen. That makes a House of Representatives. Two-thirds of the House, then, is two-thirds of that number, and there is nothing in the Constitution which requires it to be done by a greater number. The House is a majority of the House-elect. It does not say "two-thirds of all the members." That language is not used anywhere in the Constitution.

Mr. HILL. I submit that for the transaction of its own business two-thirds of the House means two-thirds of a quorum, but for an amendment to the Constitution a two-thirds vote of the entire membership is required, and for the election of a President the rule distinctly provides that two-thirds of all the States shall constitute a quorum, and I submit that there is a marked difference between the proposition whether the House is transacting its own business or proposing an amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, another mistake of the gentleman! The State has only one vote. It can not be divided. It is a numeral. Two-thirds of the States would mean two-thirds of the numerals. That is no comparison to the House of Representatives, which is composed of individual members.

One hundred and seventy-nine members constitute the House of Representatives to-day, if there is no vacancy by death. A majority of that number can pass anything, except where two-thirds are required, and the Constitution simply requires in this case two-thirds instead of a majority. And that is the only difference.

Mr. HILL. In reply to that I would say that New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan, and one or two other States, on their own account, under this construction, may propose an amendment to the Constitution which, if the States themselves proposed it, would require two-thirds of all the States of the Union. I do not believe that it was intended that such a construction should be put upon that section of the Constitution.

Mr. BRUMM. Upon the same proposition, States having no more population than Pennsylvania and New York could pass no act. That is an answer to your proposition.

Mr. LACEY. I would suggest that the same identical language applies where it is a question of passing a bill over the veto of the President—it takes a vote of two-thirds of the House to pass the bill.

Mr. HILL. I claim that that would be an entirely different proposition and one relating to Congressional action only.

Mr. LACEY. It takes two-thirds of a quorum.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut has the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from Connecticut had resumed his seat and the gentleman from Iowa has occupied the floor.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be recognized?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. I simply desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the section relating to the passage of bills over the President's veto has been interpreted, and the language in the two cases, as the gentleman from Iowa has suggested, is almost identical, the expression being in one case "two-thirds of both Houses" and in the other case "two-thirds of that House;" and the decision in the Senate was that the constitutional requirement was fulfilled whenever two-thirds of those present—a quorum, of course, being required to be present—had voted to pass the bill over a President's veto.

The reasoning here is even stronger than it is in the other case. In that case the Constitution requires the vote to be taken by yeas and nays. In this instance there is no such requirement; but if upon a vote in the House nobody demanded a division, and in the judgment of the Chair two-thirds had voted in favor thereof, the Chair might so declare, just as the Chair does in passing bills under a suspension of the rules; or, if some gentleman demanded a division, the members rose and were counted, and two-thirds, by the Speaker's count, voted in the affirmative, that would pass a constitutional amendment. If there can be any difference between the adoption of a resolution amending the Constitution and passing a bill over the President's veto, the case is stronger in the case of the President's veto.

The first decision was on the passage of a river and harbor bill over the veto of President Pierce. The gentlemen who contended for the view that two-thirds of a quorum only were necessary were led by Senator Benjamin, of Louisiana. So far as I am concerned, I have never been fully satisfied with the reasoning of that debate. I believe if it were a new question it would require two-thirds of the entire membership, because in other cases where two-thirds is required the Constitution adds "of those present." In the case of an impeachment a civil officer can not be convicted except by a vote of "two-thirds of those present." In the case of the ratification of a treaty the Constitution makes it valid by the votes of "two-thirds of those present."

The fact that the Constitution uses the words "of those present" in some instances and does not use them in other instances would seem to indicate that its framers wished to apply a different rule. But it would be exceedingly unfortunate to have a different construction of the Constitution upon provisions so nearly alike, and exceedingly unfortunate to have one rule of construction prevail in the Senate and another prevail in the House. After that construction had been adopted and a Senate bill came to this House and is passed by a vote of two-thirds of those present and became a law without any further question. And if it be true that under that provision by a two-thirds vote we can pass a bill over the President's veto, then two-thirds can adopt a resolution amending the Constitution.

Mr. HILL. The difference between the two cases is plain. Where Congress initiates and carries forward its own work, it does it under its own rules, and two-thirds of the House means two-thirds of a quorum. But the Constitution submits an alternative proposition that an amendment may be proposed by two-thirds of the States acting for themselves or by two-thirds of the Representatives of all the States acting through Congress. Now, it seems to me that it could hardly be that a small number of the States of the Union through their Representatives could do a thing which requires two-thirds of all the States to do directly. I think that there is a difference between the two propositions; and in order that we might have a ruling upon it, I raise the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is one that has been so often decided that it seems hardly necessary to dwell upon it. The provision of the Constitution says "two-thirds of both Houses." What constitutes a House? A quorum of the membership, a majority, one-half and one more. That is all that is necessary to constitute a House to do all the business that comes before the House. Among the business that comes before the House is the reconsideration of a bill which has been vetoed by the President; another is a proposed amendment to the Constitution; and the practice is uniform in both cases that if a quorum of the House is present the House is constituted, and two-thirds of those voting are sufficient in order to accomplish the object. It has nothing to do with the question of what States are present and represented, or what States are present and vote for it. It is the House of Representatives in this instance that votes and performs its part of the function. If the Senate does the same thing, then the matter is submitted to the States directly, and they pass upon it.

The first Congress, I think, had about 65 members, and the first amendment that was proposed to the Constitution was voted for by 37 members, obviously not two-thirds of the entire House. So the question seems to have been met right on the very threshold of our Government and disposed of in that way.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. CORLISS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. QUAY, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. FAULKNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 245) declaring the lands within the former Mille Lac Indian Reservation, in Minnesota, to be subject to entry under the land laws of the United States.

ANNIE N. LEWIS.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask for its present consideration. It is from the Committee on Accounts, and that committee recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Annie N. Lewis, widow of Herman L. Lewis, deceased, late a messenger in the post-office of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and that he be further directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, the expenses of the funeral of the said Herman L. Lewis, said expenses not to exceed the sum of $150.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ODELL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, at the request of some members, I ask unanimous consent that leave be granted for five days to print remarks upon the joint resolution just passed.

There was no objection.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR GEORGE.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, May 21, 1898, be set apart for paying tribute to the memory of Hon. JAMES Z. GEORGE, late a Senator from the State of Mississippi.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion, the Speaker laid before the House the following personal requests, which were granted:

To Mr. BISHOP, leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMMODORE GEORGE DEWEY.

Mr. PROCTOR. I present resolutions of the general assembly of Vermont relating to Commodore Dewey, which I ask may be read at the desk.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Whereas the officers and men of the Asiatic Squadron, by their victory over the Spanish fleet at Manila, have won the profound gratitude of their countrymen, and their commodore, George Dewey, has made for himself a place among the world's naval heroes; and

Whereas Vermont, as the native State of Commodore Dewey, takes special pride in this achievement:

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That the members of the general assembly, representing the people of Vermont, express to Commodore Dewey, and through him to his entire command, their deep appreciation of their signal and timely success, their confidence in his ability to so meet the trying situation at the Philippines as to bring added honor to the United States and greater distinction to himself, and their keen gratification that the first great honors of the war should fall to a son of Vermont.

Resolved, That the promotion of Commodore Dewey without delay would be the spontaneous and grateful recognition of a great national service by a brave and great man; and further

Resolved, That the clerk be directed to communicate these resolutions to Commodore Dewey as soon as cable communication with Manila is restored, and to transmit copies to the President of the United States and to our representatives in Congress.

The foregoing is a true copy of a joint resolution of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Vermont, originating in the house of representatives, unanimously passed by both houses on the 5th day of May, A. D. 1898.

FRED A. HOWLAND,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9856) for the relief of Anna Merkel, to report it without amendment, and to submit a report thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the bill (S. 3142) for the relief of Anna Merkel, being Order of Business 786 on the Calendar, be indefinitely postponed, and that the House bill just reported by me be given the place of the Senate bill on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7018) to provide a steam fog whistle at the entrance to Muskegon Harbor, in the State of Michigan, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3901) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz, to report it with an amendment and to submit a report thereon. I will state that the report is not entirely unanimous. One or two members of the committee did not agree to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3842) to grant a pension to Mrs. Mima A. Read, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4239) to complete the military record of James Hicks, formerly captain Company M, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2847) to complete the military record of James Hicks, formerly captain Company M, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6098) to correct the military record of N. Ward Cady, late major Second Mounted Rifles, New York Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1572) granting a pension to Albert Hammer; and

A bill (H. R. 8181) for the relief of John A. Bingham.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2069) granting an increase of pension to Henry H. Tucker; and

A bill (H. R. 7007) to increase the pension of Samuel B. Davis.

Mr. HANNA, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 4440) granting a pension to Josiah B. Deeter; and

A bill (S. 700) granting a pension to Irvin Dickison.

ANN M. SPENCER.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back favorably Senate resolution 309, directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay to Ann M. Spencer, mother of William E. Spencer, deceased, late Minute and Journal Clerk of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's salary. The resolution is accompanied by a report. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to; as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay Ann M. Spencer, mother of William Ensor Spencer, deceased, late Minute and Journal Clerk of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's salary at the rate allowed by law to said Minute and Journal Clerk, out of the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate; said payment to be considered as in lieu of all funeral expenses or other allowances.

STEAMER CATANIA.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3953) to provide an American register for the steamer Catania, to report it favorably without amendment. I am obliged to ask for present consideration, as the Government has chartered this steamship for the hospital service.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5523) to authorize the establishment of a life-saving station at or near Charlevoix, Mich., to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 4, after the word "at," to insert "or near;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station at or near Charlevoix, Mich., in such locality as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTION OF WILLS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1910) conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes, to move that the Senate disagree to the amendment and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. ALLEN. I thought I observed the reading of a conference report on this bill two days ago.

Mr. FAULKNER. No; there has been no conference report on the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Then possibly I was mistaken; but it was a bill referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia relating to the probate of wills. Is this the bill?

Mr. FAULKNER. This is the bill. It was passed by the Senate and sent to the House. The House put on it a great many amendments—in fact, passed a substitute for it. The Committee on the District of Columbia disagreed to those amendments, and I have reported the disagreement and moved that a conference be requested with the House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not object to that action, but while I heard the bill read at that time, I did not observe what provision was made for the contesting of wills.

Mr. FAULKNER. That was left exactly as it is under the present law.

Mr. ALLEN. What I wish to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to is that there are two ways of contesting a will, one by filing a caveat and having a trial by jury and the other by filing a bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. All trials as to the validity of wills in this District have been by a jury, and it is not proposed to change it.

Mr. ALLEN. Is the right to file a caveat and have a trial by jury preserved by the bill?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes; the trial by jury will be preserved. There will be no change.

Mr. ALLEN. And if a will should be probated without contest the right will also be preserved to file a bill within a given time afterwards to contest it?

Mr. FAULKNER. That is the theory of the present law, and it will not be changed in that respect.

Mr. ALLEN. Both those remedies will be preserved?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from West Virginia that the Senate disagree to the amendment and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. FAULKNER, Mr. BAKER, and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Mr. STEWART. I introduce a bill, and ask unanimous consent to put it on its passage. It proposes to remove all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth article of the Constitution. It is but a line long. There are a few persons who are still unrelieved, and I think the disability ought to be entirely wiped out. They are old, and it would be some gratification, perhaps, to them, and it would be a gratification, I think, to the whole country, to have Congress do this act of kindness.

The bill (S. 4578) to remove all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth article of the Constitution was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all disabilities imposed by fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States upon persons on account of having engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States and on account of having given aid or comfort to the enemies thereof are hereby removed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4579) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, on a line with Massachusetts avenue extended; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4580) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the estate of John Hutchinson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4581) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of John Kelly, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4582) to provide an American register for the steamship Centennial; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 4583) for the relief of the estate of Abel Adams, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HANNA introduced a bill (S. 4584) granting a pension to Mrs. Adda F. Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 5) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of Senators of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Treasury Department, Steamboat-Inspection Service, 300 copies each of the proceedings of the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels for the years 1897 and 1898.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1316) to provide for organizing a naval battalion in the District of Columbia; and

An act (S. 4468) to provide for a volunteer brigade of engineers and an additional force of 10,000 enlisted men specially accustomed to tropical climates.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed, and the Private Pension Calendar is in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway bill It was nearly completed yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A unanimous-consent agreement was made yesterday in regard to pension bills prior to the taking up of that bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was agreed that thirty minutes should be given this morning for pension bills.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to make an appeal to the Senate in another direction. I hold in my hand some papers that the Senate had better understand in executive session. It is deemed imperatively necessary in the War Department that there should be certain action taken as soon as possible. It will be a short time, I think. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if half an hour will make any difference?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; every minute. There are some gentlemen in the city who must leave town this very evening.

Mr. GALLINGER. That settles it. I simply asked the question for information.

Mr. FRYE (to Mr. GALLINGER). But you want your right preserved.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, I want my right preserved.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for a vote on my motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will please, I ask consent that the order giving thirty minutes after the routine business to pension bills be continued so that it will be operative after the executive session.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. HAWLEY. Of course.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not think the executive session will take over five minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I said it would be a short time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order giving thirty minutes to the Private Pension Calendar will be continued.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the leave of the Senate to resign the position of conferee on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia, to be relieved from service upon the committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill? The resignation is received; and the Chair appoints Mr. PETTIGREW to fill the vacancy thus occasioned.

QUARTERMASTER'S SUPPLIES, ETC.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it my duty to call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report of the committee of conference will be read.

The Secretary read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 10, and 11.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13, and 14, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the word "Sixth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Fourth;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
B. F. MARSH,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GORMAN. This is the report we had under discussion a day or two ago?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is. It has been delayed a week, I am sorry to say.

Mr. GORMAN. This is the bill that contains the provision to suspend section 3709?

Mr. HAWLEY. It suspends section 3709.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator will agree that the conference report shall not be adopted, but let it go back, so that the provision which we discussed opening the door for all kinds of contracts may be stricken out.

Mr. HAWLEY. I believe that is the only paragraph in the report which was in controversy the other day?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not agree to that course, Mr. President. I wish to have some action taken by the Senate yea or nay.

Mr. CHANDLER. In what way, I ask the Senator from Connecticut, can we have a vote of the Senate on the question of retaining that part of the report which wipes out section 3709. I myself am not prepared to vote to repeal that section. It is an elastic section, that was sufficient during the war of the rebellion, and I believe it ought to be retained upon the statute book.

Mr. PROCTOR. I beg the Senator's pardon, it was changed decidedly by amendment before the war was closed.

Mr. CHANDLER. As it stands upon the statute book to-day, it does not require any length of time for advertisement. Advertisements may be for two days or one day or twelve hours, and it applies only to articles for immediate delivery. You may buy articles for immediate delivery. The section as it stands is sufficient, it seems to me, for every exigency, and I want to vote in some way to recede from that particular portion of the Senate amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. That section is not the same section that covered such purchases during the war. It has been materially changed since then. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in times like these it is almost impossible to provision an army or to send out ships, as we are doing now from San Francisco and other places on the Pacific coast, if we confine the quartermasters, commissaries, and disbursing officers to a rigid provision of law like that.

You must give some latitude; you must trust to the honesty of the great corps of the commissaries and quartermasters' departments, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of which we have not had any complaint. It would be better even to lose a little money in times like these, when there is absolute, immediate, and pressing necessity, particularly on the Pacific coast, to send ships, munitions of war, men, and food to Manila Bay, than to insist on the enforcement of such a law.

I trust that the conference report will be agreed to. I do not think the war will last very long, and we can very readily repeal the provision when we get down to our ordinary mode of doing business; but just now, as I say, we must give some latitude, we must trust to the honesty of the officers who have been educated by the Government and who are in charge of these matters.

Mr. HALE. I want to ask one question. What is the particular difficulty that is found now that can not be surmounted which was not encountered during the civil war under the section?

Mr. SEWELL. I have just made a statement, in which I think the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] will bear me out. This section was not in force then. It has been put in force since by an amendment.

Mr. HALE. What was in force during the war?

Mr. SEWELL. I have not got the section at hand; possibly the Senator from Vermont has it; but it was a very much more liberal one, at any rate, than this.

Mr. HALE. I have not heard that at all.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] read to the Senate the other day just what was in force during the war; it is substantially what is included in this bill of the conference committee, and it specified certain articles. It is substantially the same, except that it does not include ordnance; but I have no doubt that is included in some other measure. It authorized the purchase of subsistence, clothing, quartermaster stores, and all those things, just as is provided in this bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont, if I understood him correctly, is entirely mistaken in his statement. In 1861 we passed an act, which was read by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] a day or two ago when this matter was under discussion, which provided for the purchase of material of certain classes without advertising, but upon certificates that immediate delivery was necessary. Under that act, in 1861 so great were the complaints that the other House of Congress investigated the subject and showed the abuses under it.

There was right in the midst of the civil war growing out of that provision an extraordinary condition of affairs, until 1862, when the act was amended; and if the Senator from Vermont and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will examine the act of the 30th of June, 1862, they will find:

> When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract.

But in no case during the civil war did the authority ever go beyond immediate delivery.

This bill as it was passed by the other House and as it was passed here opens the door wide and permits officers to make contracts for deliveries one year hence without advertising. I submit to the Senator from Connecticut that under the provisions of the present statute, when the great trouble came, as it did in 1861, when there was only a limited authority granted, it was deemed necessary in the interests of honesty in the administration of the Government that a board should be formed in the Interior Department to examine this entire subject, and there can not be, with that experience, any excuse whatever in the present war, which is very small compared with what we had in 1861 and in 1862, now, for the first time, to open the door and permit administrative officers to make contracts for deliveries six months or one year hence. That seems to be the intention of the framers of this bill, and it is the literal construction of the bill as passed.

Now, I submit to the Senate that no such provision ought to be found in any law. If adopted, it will come back to plague the Administration which will have to enforce its provisions. It permits every petty officer who is to purchase material, under a general order of his superior, to go into the market and make contracts for any length of time. That ought not to be permitted. There is no necessity for it.

In answer to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], I will state that as to the statute as it now stands, if there is any necessity for purchasing anything—equipments, tents, provisions, arms, or ships—upon the Pacific coast or upon the Atlantic coast, all that is necessary is for the department commander to certify that the articles are wanted for immediate delivery; but the officers ought not to be authorized to make contracts for delivery one year hence.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me to interrupt him a moment, the Attorney-General, deciding upon this immediate-delivery statute, held that a contract for delivery within six months did not come within the provisions of the act, but that one for delivery within sixty or ninety days was legally within the provisions of the act. So that immediate delivery did not mean a week or ten days, but it might be within thirty, sixty, or ninety days.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that such a decision has been made. I submit that no contract should be made without advertising, unless in a case of extreme exigency. There is usually abundant time to advertise for such articles as are needed by the Government.

Mr. President, even with the statute as it stands, as I have already said, right in the midst of the civil war, when there was scarcely any opposition to the Administration, when there was scarcely any minority party in either House, even the majority party itself found the scandals were so great that they had to correct the original act of 1860 and modify it. Afterwards, as I say, Congress formed a commission to inquire into all these contracts, and directed that all purchases should be advertised for and the bids examined by an independent board.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GORMAN. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. SEWELL. That change was made not during the war, but subsequent to the war; so that to-day we are governed under this clause:

> Except that purchases may be made in open market in the manner common among business men when the aggregate amount required does not exceed $200, but every such purchase shall be immediately reported to the Secretary of War.

That limits the purchases to $200. The original section covering this matter, section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, which was adopted in 1861, and which was in force during the war, is as follows:

> SEC. 3709. All purchases and contracts for supplies or services in any of the Departments of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles or performance of the service. When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract, at the places and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold, or such services engaged between individuals.

There is no limit there.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will read the section again, and then read the bill which is pending. The act of 1862, which he has read and which was quoted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], provided—and I will read it—

> That all purchases and contracts for supplies or services in any of the Departments of the Government except for personal services, when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery—

Now, I ask the Senator to note this—> when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the article or articles, or performance of the service, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same.

This is the act of 1862:

> When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract at the places and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold or such services engaged between individuals.

Now comes the bill which we are asked to ratify by the adoption of the conference report, and it opens that door absolutely. It does not confine the purchases to articles required for immediate delivery, but authorizes any department of the Government, under a general order of the Secretary of War, to contract for and to purchase in open market six months, one year, or two years ahead for delivery.

I submit to the Senator that he can not find at any time when such a provision has been sought that it has been granted by Congress; and if granted now we shall open the door to every officer who is authorized to purchase to make contracts with favorites without public notice.

Mr. SEWELL. I have just read the exception.

Mr. GORMAN. So have I, and the Senator will find that the exception is only where the articles are required for immediate delivery. All I contend for now is to restore the statute of 1862.

Mr. SEWELL. That is exactly my contention here. We are loading up ships at San Francisco for an expedition that can not possibly be equipped in a reasonable time unless we give the officers some latitude. If I were an officer of the Army and was ordered to do it, I would violate the section so as to carry out my orders.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no doubt the Senator would.

Mr. SEWELL. But you ought not to place officers in such a position.

Mr. GORMAN. But under such a law as I contend for you would have ample authority as a commander of a division, with the approval of the Secretary of War, to purchase anything in open market which was absolutely necessary for the movements of your army; but an officer, by the provision as it stands in this bill, would be authorized to make contracts for delivery one year hence. That is a power which has never been granted to the Secretary of War or to any executive officer of the Government.

Mr. SEWELL. I would not ask that power.

Mr. GORMAN. Very good. Then I trust the Senator will agree that the conference report shall be rejected; that it go back to the committee, and that the law be left as it was in 1862.

I desire to see this matter conducted in a way that will bring credit to the Government and to the officers connected with it. For one I am content to go very far in giving authority to executive officers, to make every provision to conduct this war to a successful close, to give them all the money that is necessary and all the men that may be required; but it is the duty of Congress, in my judgment, to check this attempt, no matter from whom it comes, to open the door wide to the favoritism and fraud which may come from it, so as to prevent, after the close of the existing war, the disgraceful scenes we had in 1862 and 1863 connected with the investigation of the dishonesty of our officials.

I trust by unanimous consent the report may be rejected, and that it may go back to the committee of conference, where, I hope, this provision will be eliminated and the old law will be restored.

I know the Committee on Military Affairs, in the rush and hurry of the moment, the way in which this bill was passed, almost without being printed, and with no opportunity to examine it, with a patriotic desire to further the efforts of the executive department in the preparations for this conflict, permitted it to pass, as other measures probably have been passed which ought not to have been put upon the statute book. But here is a case which ought to be corrected, now that attention is called to it, and I appeal to the Senator in charge of the conference report to let us, by unanimous consent, reject the report and send it back to the committee of conference.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, of course it is unnecessary for me to say——

Mr. HAWLEY. Perhaps I can shorten the time a little. I am willing that the report shall go back to another conference that there may be a modification which will enable the Army to act with vigor, and we shall endeavor to adopt a suitable provision.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. SEWELL. Does the Senator mean on the lines suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]?

Mr. HAWLEY. Something like that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. HAWLEY. I have been interrupted three times in one minute.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator interrupted me and took the floor from me, and now complains because I am taking the floor again. If the Senator will notify me when he gets through, I will then resume my remarks.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am going perhaps to save the necessity of listening to the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not for the Senator to decide whether there is a necessity for listening or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. The trouble with these matters is not as to the time of performance. That, from the necessity of the case, is made brief. What we desire is that the time may be shortened as far as possible. The trouble is that with the purchases for twenty or thirty or forty days advertisements are necessary. There is where the difficulty comes in, and not as to the time of the performance, because in time of war the executive department will inevitably provide for delivery as early as possible, but it is an embarrassment in many cases, and sometimes will be a fatal embarrassment, to be obliged to advertise for ten, twenty, thirty, or forty days.

I rose to say that, on consultation with other Senators, I am willing that the report shall go back to the conference committee so that we may make some modifications.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want any mistake made about the point. I do not think it can be obscured. Here is section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, now on the statute book. It requires—when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the article or articles, or performance of the service.

Then follows this clause:

When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency, the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract at the places and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold or such services engaged between individuals.

No advertisement is necessary under that clause. That clause justifies a purchase in any exigency whatever, provided some officer will certify that there is an exigency.

Now, Mr. President, Senators say that by the law of 1894, repeated in the law of 1895, section 3709 was modified. If it was modified, then there is no objection to repealing the provision of 1894 and 1895, and then section 3709 will remain exactly as it is in the Revised Statutes, sufficient for every possible exigency that can be imagined.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me right there, the modification referred to in the section of the statute by the act of 1895, as Senators who are on the Appropriations Committee will remember, only applied to localities. We were then confronted with the question whether all the supplies should be purchased and furnished in the East, in New York, or along the border, and the question of locality alone was settled by that provision. I think Senators on the Appropriations Committee will remember that we did not intend to repeal that provision in the statute except as to locality. However, all this is ended by the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that the report go back to the committee of conference.

Mr. SEWELL. The War Department thinks that is the law now.

Mr. HALE. They are mistaken if they suppose it was the intention of Congress to repeal that provision of the statute. It only applied to localities.

Mr. SEWELL. If we can so arrange that the original statute, section 3709, shall be restored and remain in force, that will be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is all we want.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, replying in a word to the Senator from Maryland in regard to the conduct in 1861, I will read the last part of the act of March 2, 1861, under which the Department conducted their business:

No contract or purchase shall hereafter be made unless the same be authorized by law, or be under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

That, it seems to me, authorizes the purchase, without even an appropriation or any authority of law, of whatever is needed of such articles for the current year.

Mr. GORMAN. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the very section from which he reads is limited to cases where immediate delivery is necessary.

Mr. PROCTOR. There may be a difference of opinion in regard to that. I think, and other Senators I have consulted think, that this section, so far as those two Departments and those articles are concerned, entirely takes it out from the first part of that section.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator will go back and look at the report of the investigating committee of the House of Representatives on this very provision and the abuses which grew up under it, he will find that in every case that was the construction placed upon it by the Department, and they so acted on it; and within that narrow scope came this trouble.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the report of the conference committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. Just one minute. The clause of the act read by the Senator from Vermont continued to be the law until 1864. On July 4, 1864, an act was passed to provide for the better organization of the Quartermaster's Department, which changed the whole system, divided it into eight divisions, and placed under each division the purchase of supplies for the different departments. The second section reads:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the heads of the several divisions above mentioned shall, under the direction of the Quartermaster-General, from time to time advertise for proposals for the supplies necessary for the movements and operations of the several armies, posts, detachments, garrisons, hospitals, and for other military purposes, in newspapers having general circulation in those parts of the country where such supplies can be most advantageously furnished, having regard also to the places where such supplies are to be delivered and used; and all such supplies, so purchased or contracted for, shall be subject to careful inspection, and all clothing and camp and garrison equipage shall be subject to a double inspection, first, as to the quality of the material, and second, as to the kind and character of the workmanship, which inspection shall in all cases be performed by a competent inspector, with suitable assistants, who shall have had ample experience in the inspection of cloth, clothing, knapsacks, camp and garrison equipage; and all payments for supplies so purchased shall be made under the direction of the officers in charge of the several divisions above mentioned, upon receipts or certificates from the officers inspecting and receiving such supplies, prepared in such form and attested in such manner as may be prescribed by the Quartermaster-General.

Then section 4 provides:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That when an emergency shall exist requiring the immediate procurement of supplies for the necessary movements and operations of an army or detachment, and when such supplies can not be procured from any established depot of the Quartermaster's Department, or from the head of the division charged with the duty of furnishing such supplies, within the required time, then it shall be lawful for the commanding officer of such army or detachment to order the chief quartermaster of such army or detachment to procure such supplies during the continuance of such emergency, but no longer, in the most expeditious manner, and without advertisement; and it shall be the duty of such quartermaster to obey such order; and his accounts of the disbursement of moneys for such supplies shall be accompanied by the order of the commanding officer as aforesaid, or a certified copy of the same, and also by a statement of the particular facts and circumstances, with their dates, constituting such emergency.

Mr. GORMAN. That was for immediate delivery.

Mr. COCKRELL. During an emergency. Those provisions remained the law until after the close of the war.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator kindly give me the volume and the page of the statutes from which he has been reading?

Mr. COCKRELL. Volume 13 of the statutes, page 394, act of July 4, 1864.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

USE OF POSTAL CARDS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to withdraw the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 1596) to amend the postal laws relating to the use of postal cards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

The signature of the Vice-President was subsequently announced to the enrolled bill, it having been previously signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

STEAMER CENTENNIAL.

Mr. FRYE. The Secretary of War communicates to the Senate that it is impossible to get as many transport ships on the Pacific as are necessary, and he desires a certain ship to be admitted to an American register. The Committee on Commerce authorize me to report favorably the bill (S. 4582) to provide an American register for the steamer Centennial, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON NICARAGUAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I ask that a document which I hold in my hand, written by Capt. A. S. Crowninshield, United States Navy, who is the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and is at present on the board of strategy, be printed as a document for the use of the Senate. It relates to the Nicaraguan Canal and to kindred topics, but is directed specifically to an examination of the importance of the construction of that canal, with reference to which I have introduced a bill at the present session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama that the document referred to by him be printed? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

THE LABOR QUESTION.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 144, being a memorial on the labor question, written by Dr. W. A. Croffut, of this city, a very valuable document, and for which there have been a great many calls upon the Committee on Education and Labor. It is now out of print, and I should like the consent of the Senate to have printed a thousand additional copies of the document for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor. The expense will come within the limit, being only four or five hundred dollars.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota that the document referred to by him be printed? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

LUCINDA BOOTH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The consideration of pension bills on the Calendar is in order under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The bill (S. 4533) to increase the pension of Mrs. Lucinda Booth was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 5, before the name "Lucinda," to strike out "Mrs.;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Lucinda Booth, the widow of Wiley Booth, a soldier of the war of 1812, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certain other amendments should be made. In line 4, before the word "directed," I move to insert the words "authorized and;" in the same line, after the word "place," to strike out "upon" and insert "on;" in the same line, after the word "roll," to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" and in line 7, after the word "pension," to insert "at the rate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to increase the pension of Lucinda Booth."

LOWELL H. HOPKINSON.

The bill (H. R. 378) granting a pension to Lowell H. Hopkinson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lowell H. Hopkinson, late a member of Company A, Fifty-seventh and Fifty-ninth regiments Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Lowell H. Hopkinson."

MARIA S. WHITNEY.

The bill (S. 3325) granting a pension to Maria S. Whitney was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 4, after the word "roll," to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and in line 7, after the word "Navy," to insert "and pay her a pension;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria S. Whitney, stepmother of John M. Whitney, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CATHERINE CLIFFORD.

The bill (H. R. 1801) granting a pension to Catherine Clifford was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Catherine Clifford, widow of James Clifford, Twenty-fifth Battery Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, on the pension roll and pay her a pension of $20 per month in lieu of the pension which she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the word "roll," in line 6, I move to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" and after the word "pension," in line 7, to insert "at the rate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARCIA C. BARNES.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to James J. Wheeler."

EDWARD STARR.

The bill (H. R. 5006) to increase the pension of Edward Starr was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Edward Starr, late a private in Company C, First Regiment Washington Territory Volunteer Infantry, on the pension roll and pay him a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6, after the word "roll," I move to insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," and in line 7, after the word "pension," to insert "at the rate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL LANNON.

The bill (S. 1619) granting a pension to Michael Lannon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" to as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Lannon, late a private in Company F, Second United States Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 3, after the word "hereby," I move to insert the words "authorized and," and in line 7, after the word "Infantry," I move to insert "and pay him a pension."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK F. CARNDUFF.

The bill (S. 3676) granting an increase of pension to Frank F. Carnduff was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frank F. Carnduff, late a corporal in Company M, Seventh Regiment of New York Heavy Artillery Volunteers, at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving.

Mr. PERKINS. I hope the committee will consent to have the bill passed without amendment, as it is shown by the committee that in 1894, if the case had been properly presented, the claimant would have been entitled to $30 per month. It is an increase of only $6. This is an especially meritorious measure. The claimant can hope to live but a very short time. I am informed by those conversant with his physical condition that he is in a very poor state of health and is entirely dependent upon the small pension that he is now receiving for the support of himself and his family.

Mr. GALLINGER. In this particular case I shall not object to nonconcurrence in the amendment. I want, however, to say a single word. The committee has been striving to keep down large increases of pension. It is well known that when a case of this kind occurs and an ex-soldier gets $30 per month by special act every ex-soldier in the country knows of it, and at the next session of Congress we are flooded with appeals from those who think they are equally entitled to an increase. I am inclined to think that in this particular case perhaps the increase to $30 ought to be granted, but I wanted to state the reason that animates the committee in changing the rate proposed in many of these bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move, at the beginning of line 8, to insert the words "and pay him a pension."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MYNTIE L. HAMILTON.

The bill (H. R. 2866) granting an increase of pension to Myntie L. Hamilton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Myntie L. Hamilton, widow of Jessie B. Hamilton, late of Company A, First Regiment of the Wisconsin Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM D. FOOTE.

The bill (H. R. 4962) granting an increase of pension to William D. Foote was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William D. Foote, of Mattoon, Ill., of Company G, Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move, in line 5, to strike out the words "of Mattoon, Ill.," and to insert the word "late," so as to read "late of Company G;" and in line 8, after the word "pension," to insert the words "at the rate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ELI M. COUCH.

The bill (S. 4547) granting a pension to Eli M. Couch was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "sixteen;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eli M. Couch, late of Company A, Brackett's battalion, Minnesota Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $16 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN LINDQUIST.

The bill (S. 4485) granting a pension to John Lindquist was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "pay," to strike out "him" and insert "to his lawful guardian for him;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Lindquist, late of Company F, First Minnesota Infantry, and pay to his lawful guardian for him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the beginning of line 8 I move to insert the words "at the rate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JENNIE A. KERR.

The bill (S. 1519) granting a pension to Mrs. Jennie A. Kerr, widow of Second Lieut. John M. Kerr, Company F, Mounted Riflemen, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "Riflemen," to insert "and pay her a pension of $15 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Jennie A. Kerr, widow of Second Lieut. John M. Kerr, Company F, Mounted Riflemen, and pay her a pension of $15 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6, before the word "of," where it occurs the first time, I move to insert the words "at the rate;" and in the same line to strike out "Mrs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Jennie A. Kerr."

WILLIAM STEPHENSON SMITH.

The bill (H. R. 6309) to pension William Stephenson Smith was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "Volunteer," to insert "and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Stephenson Smith, as of Company L, Eleventh Regiment of Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6, after the word "Smith," I move that the word "as" be stricken out and the word "late" substituted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY H. K. ELLIOTT.

The bill (H. R. 587) granting a pension to Henry H. K. Elliott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Henry H. K. Elliott, father of Harry Elliott, of Company D, One hundred and forty-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6, before the word "father," I move to insert the word "dependent," and before the word "of," where it occurs the second time, I move to insert the word "late."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

C. S. ALVORD.

The bill (H. R. 2361) granting a pension to C. S. Alvord was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of C. S. Alvord, late a private in Company D, Fourth United States Infantry, at $8 per month, to commence from the passage of this act.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 7, after the word "Infantry," I move to insert "and pay him a pension," and in the same line, after the word "month," to strike out the words "to commence from the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4545) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KYLE. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3662) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are only six or seven more pension bills, I will say to the Senator from South Dakota, and I ask that they be concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KYLE. I will give consent for that purpose so far as I am concerned.

Mr. McMILLAN. Very well.

CHARLES HOFFMAN.

The bill (H. R. 4691) to increase the pension of Charles Hoffman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Charles Hoffman, a soldier of the Mexican war, Company K, First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; also lieutenant Company E, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the late rebellion, on the pension roll, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the word "place," in line 4, I move to insert "on the pension rolls subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 8 I move to strike out the words

"rebellion, on the pension roll" and insert "war," and in the same line, after "pension," to insert "at the rate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES C. KINKLE.

The bill (H. R. 6242) granting a pension to James C. Kinkle was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of James C. Kinkle on the pension roll and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the word "Kinkle," in line 4, I move to insert "late acting or contract surgeon, United States Army," and after the word "roll," in line 5, I move to insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JACOB MILLER.

The bill (S. 4568) granting a pension to Jacob Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "month," to insert "payable to his legally constituted guardian;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob Miller, idiotic and dependent son of Abraham Miller, late of Company E, Thirty-sixth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month, payable to his legally-constituted guardian.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY F. HOBBIE.

The bill (S. 3122) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Hobbie, widow of Charles A. Hobbie, late captain Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the name "Mary," to strike out the letter "A" and insert "F;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary F. Hobbie, widow of Charles A. Hobbie, late captain Company B, Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $20 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Hobbie."

GUSTAVUS A. KINDBLADE.

The bill (H. R. 3524) increasing the pension of Gustavus A. Kindblade was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Gustavus A. Kindblade, late of Company C, Fourth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. After the word "roll," in line 4, I move to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HENDERSON H. BOGGS.

The bill (H. R. 2023) to pension Henderson H. Boggs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Henderson H. Boggs, late a private in Company A, Third Battalion, First Provisional Regiment Kansas Volunteer Militia, and private in Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Kansas State Militia, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MIMA A. READ.

Mr. GALLINGER. I reported one pension bill this morning, and in behalf of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill will be taken up.

The bill (S. 3842) to grant a pension to Mrs. Mima A. Read was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mima A. Read, widow of Col. Joseph C. Read, late chief commissary of subsistence, Army of the Cumberland, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of that which she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Mima A. Read."

TRADE RESTRICTIONS BY FRANCE.

Mr. KYLE. I call up Senate bill 3662.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to present a paper to be read and referred?

Mr. KYLE. I will yield.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to present a paper addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, and as it is brief and is signed by very many business men, I should like to have it read and then referred to the Committee an Finance, so that they may consider it now, perhaps, if they have an opportunity to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned packers and shippers of provisions of the city of Chicago beg to present to your honorable body the following facts relative to the recent action of the French Government respecting the duties imposed upon the articles of lard and sausages imported into France:

1. That the duty upon lard has been raised from 14½ francs per 100 kilos to 25 francs as a minimum and 40 francs as a maximum per 100 kilos; and

2. That the duty upon sausages has been raised from 25 francs per 100 kilos to 50 francs as a minimum and to 100 francs as a maximum per 100 kilos.

The undersigned beg to direct your attention to the fact that the minimum duty imposed by France upon lard equals about 36½ per cent ad valorem, while the maximum duty equals 58½ per cent ad valorem. On sausages the minimum rate of duty equals about 28½ per cent ad valorem, while the maximum rate equals 67 per cent ad valorem.

We also beg to state that the present minimum duty on lard is more than 175 per cent and the present maximum duty is more than 285 per cent increase upon the tariff rates heretofore imposed, and that the present minimum duty on sausages is 50 per cent and the present maximum duty is 300 per cent increase upon the tariff rates heretofore imposed.

This situation is seriously aggravated by the Government of France having, during the past week, announced the enforcement of the maximum rates of duty upon these articles, and these, contrary, as we understand, to the general expectation of the trade both in France and the United States, are now in force.

We desire also to add that while business under the minimum rates above noted is barely possible, so that it can only be carried on with such difficulty as to render it extra hazardous, the maximum rates now in force are wholly prohibitory and have resulted in a total suspension of trade in these articles.

In view of these facts, the undersigned respectfully represent that special negotiation having failed to remedy the evils complained of, appropriate retaliatory measures should be promptly taken by the Congress of the United States to bring about all necessary, reasonable, and equitable concessions on the part of the Government of France.

CHICAGO, ILL., May 10, 1898.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply desire to add that the paper is signed by very many large business men, and the business referred to reaches the farmers all over the country. I desire to have the paper appear in the RECORD, and I had it read for that purpose. I hope that the Committee on Finance will be inclined to take some steps with reference to the matter, as the action of the French Government makes the trade prohibitory so far as these exports are concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KYLE. I ask consent to call up the bill (S. 3662) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees.

Mr. CARTER. The unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside with the understanding that it shall be taken up immediately on the conclusion of the bill called up by the Senator from South Dakota. I do not know that at this time it is necessary to stipulate a time for a vote upon the arbitration bill. Probably it would be just as well to proceed with its consideration.

Mr. KYLE. We can have a vote this afternoon; I think in a very short time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I shall not object to the request of the Senator from South Dakota, provided I can have an understanding that to-morrow morning immediately after the morning business I shall be able to go on and finish the two railroad bills, which really ought to be finished without any delay. I do not suppose there will be any objection to such an understanding.

Mr. CULLOM. I think that the arbitration bill will be out of the way very soon, if we can get it up for consideration.

Mr. KYLE. We shall probably finish the bill this afternoon. I think we can conclude it in a short time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of Senate bill 3662, and it is before the Senate.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. McMILLAN. Do I understand that consent has been given to have the railroad bills taken up to-morrow morning after the routine business?

Mr. CARTER. In the morning hour.

Mr. McMILLAN. In the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that the Senate has taken such action for to-morrow morning. The Chair has not put any request for unanimous consent to the Senate, but will do so if the Senator from Michigan desires.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent that such an agreement be made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to an agreement that to-morrow morning, immediately after the morning business, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes, and the bill (H. R. 8541) to define rights of purchasers of the Belt Railway, and for other purposes?

Mr. CARTER. During the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Immediately after the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. CARTER. And only during the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. During the morning hour.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that will be the order. The two bills, House bill 6148 and House bill 8541, will be taken up, House bill 6148 to be taken up first.

ARBITRATION BETWEEN RAILROAD COMPANIES AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. KYLE. Now let Senate bill 3662 be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3662) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to offer one or two amendments. The first is on page 4, line 17, section 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 17, page 4, section 3, it is proposed to add:

And in cases where the majority of such employees are not members of any labor organization, said employees may by a majority vote select a committee of their own number, which committee shall have the right to select the arbitrator on behalf of said employees.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not rise to speak to the amendment just read, which I think is all right, if it is not already provided for in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. The amendment should come after the word "organization," in line 17, as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the place where it has been suggested.

Mr. SPOONER. I rose to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to the fact that the Senate ordered a reprint of the bill with amendments, and I hold in my hand what purports to be and is the reprint. My understanding is, or was, that the Senator from South Dakota accepted yesterday the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] at the end of the third subdivision, on page 5.

Mr. KYLE. I did accept the amendment, but I presume in the noise and confusion in the Chamber it was not heard.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think it changes at all the legal effect of the bill, but it was adopted by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to say that it was not adopted by the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. It was accepted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was accepted by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SPOONER. That made it a part of the bill for the time being, did it not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No action was taken by the Senate on the amendments, although there was an acceptance by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SPOONER. Then it is pending now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is pending now, or it will be brought to the attention of the Senate before the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. KYLE. I offer the amendment now.

Mr. NELSON. What action was taken on the amendment just offered by the Senator?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. None whatever. It is before the Senate, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] was recognized to speak.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that we first take a vote on that amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us take a vote on the first amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] is in order.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "organizations," in line 17, on page 4, it is proposed to insert:

And in cases where the majority of such employees are not members of any labor organization, such employees may, by a majority vote, select a committee of their own number, which committee shall have a right to select the arbitrator on behalf of said employees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] offered an amendment, which was not acted on, and which will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 22, of the new print of the bill, after the word "permit," it is proposed to strike out:

No person shall, however, be punished for his failure to comply with the award as for contempt of court.

And to insert:

Provided, That no injunction or other legal process shall be issued which shall compel the performance by any laborer against his will of a contract for personal labor or service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 11, on page 5 of the reprint of the bill, where it reads:

And that pending the arbitration the status existing immediately prior to the dispute shall not be changed.

I move to insert after those words:

Provided, That no employee shall be compelled to render personal service without his consent.

I offer that amendment because that provision of the bill is that, pending arbitration proceedings, everything shall remain in statu quo. That would imply that the men who are at work should during those entire proceedings, pending the hearings and decision of the arbitrators and pending the appeal, be obliged to remain in the service of the company without their consent. It might afford a basis for some judge to issue an injunction to that effect, based upon this paragraph of the bill. To save any question on that matter, to save any doubt on it, I think this amendment ought to be adopted. It will not change the effect of the bill, except to limit it so that no employee can be compelled, pending proceedings for appeal, which may last for one or two years, to remain without his consent in the employ of the company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "changed," on page 5, line 11, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That no employee shall be compelled to render personal service without his consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in as an additional section after section 11 as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That section has not yet been acted upon.

Mr. ALLEN. Then let section 11 be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What action shall be taken upon section 11? Senators will find upon their bills that section 11 is marked "pending." The question is on striking out all after the word "That," in line 3, of section 11, down to and including the word "appropriated," in line 12, and inserting what is printed in italics from line 13 to line 24.

Mr. KYLE. With reference to the amendment of section 11, I believe under a previous section the award of the arbitrators must be filed within thirty days. The amount of money required can be very easily computed. Ten dollars a day for the three arbitrators would make $300 for each arbitrator for this special service, making a total of $900; and the balance of the $5,000 will, I think, be ample for all purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill the precise meaning of this amendment. It reads:

That each member of said board of arbitration shall receive a compensation of $10 per day for the time he is actually employed, and his traveling and other necessary expenses; and a sum of money sufficient to pay the same—

That is, the compensation of each member. Then it goes on—together with the traveling and other necessary and proper expenses of any conciliation or arbitration had hereunder, not to exceed $5,000 in any one year.

Is it the understanding of the Senator that the amount paid to each arbitrator may amount to $5,000 in one year?

Mr. KYLE. No; the total expenses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I think the phraseology is very unfortunate. I suggest that it should read, "And the entire amount expended shall not exceed $5,000 in any one year."

Mr. KYLE. Does the Senator propose that amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the language amended so as to read:

And the entire amount to be paid to such board of arbitration shall not exceed $5,000 in any one year.

Mr. ALLEN. May I have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it will be observed by Senators that there is no appropriation to pay witnesses or to pay a stenographer, and no means whatever of obtaining testimony. These matters ought to be provided for.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the amendment I have suggested be inserted, if it is a proper one. I ask to have it read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator restate the amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. I propose to amend so as to make the language read:

And the entire expenses for said board of arbitration under this act—

That might not include witnesses, if it is desired to insert a provision for them.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] will give attention a moment, I wish to ask him, Does not this language, in his opinion, cover the matter of witnesses:

And a sum of money sufficient to pay the same—

That is what is decided above—

together with the traveling and other necessary and proper expenses of any conciliation or arbitration had hereunder.

I think that would cover it.

Mr. ALLEN. Probably that will be sufficient.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. My amendment should read:

And the entire expenses under this act shall not exceed $5,000 in any one year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, line 18, after the word "hereunder," it is proposed to insert the words "and the entire expenses under this act shall"——

Mr. GALLINGER. And the word "to," in line 18, before the word "exceed," should be stricken out. I so modify the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, line 18, after the word "hereunder," it is proposed to insert "and the entire expenses under this act shall;" and in the same line, before the word "exceed," to strike out "to;" so as to read:

And the entire expenses under this act shall not exceed $5,000 in any one year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. TURLEY. Before the amendment is adopted I should like to ask this question: There may be several arbitrations pending in one year; would not the language of this amendment confine the expenses of all the arbitrations, no matter how many there might be, to $5,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is enough.

Mr. TURLEY. There may be half a dozen arbitrations in a year, or more than that.

Mr. CULLOM. Congress will probably be in session again before the board of arbitration is organized.

Mr. TELLER. I want to understand the effect of the amendment. Let it be read as it has been amended, so that we may understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 11, on page 18, line 3, after the word "That," it is proposed to strike out:

A sufficient sum of money to pay the traveling and other necessary and proper expenses of the arbitrators appointed and serving under this act, and to pay all other necessary and proper expenses of any conciliation or arbitration had hereunder, to be audited and allowed by the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is hereby appropriated, for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1898, and June 30, 1899, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

And insert:

Each member of said board of arbitration shall receive a compensation of $10 per day for the time he is actually employed, and his traveling and other necessary expenses; and a sum of money sufficient to pay the same, together with the traveling and other necessary and proper expenses of any conciliation or arbitration had hereunder, and the entire expenses under this act shall not exceed $5,000 in any one year, to be approved by the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, is hereby appropriated for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1898, and June 30, 1899, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that to mean that when we have exhausted the sum of $5,000 there shall be no more arbitration. That is what it means now. One fairly contested arbitration will exhaust the entire $5,000. You pay $10 a day to the arbitrators and their traveling expenses. That is $30 a day, to begin with, and very likely an arbitration may last two or three months before it can be completed. In the meantime the business is going on in a normal manner, and the arbitrators will take such necessary time as may be required. From some observation I have had—I have had no direct experience with this question—it seems to me that that is a limitation which ought not to be put on them.

Mr. GALLINGER. And there will be other expenses.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; there may be other expenses, as suggested. They may want to employ experts to examine books, so as to see what a company is earning, to see what is its condition, and whether or not it can afford to meet the demands of the men. All these things should be considered by the arbitrators, and it seems to me it would defeat the very object which is designed to say that having expended $5,000 there shall be no more paid. You can not put this work upon men without providing for the expense of doing it. The railroad companies may decline to appoint an arbitrator, and the result will be you will have only one or two arbitrators at most, and perhaps not more than one.

I think the Government of the United States can afford to pay all the expenses of all arbitrations, if the arbitration succeed; and if they do not, we can repeal this bill. It is a trial bill, an experiment, which a great many people believe will not succeed. I confess I have very little hope of its success myself, but if we make the effort, we at least can then determine whether we can proceed hereafter in this way or whether it will be necessary to adopt some other method. I hope there will be no limitation as to the amount, except that the entire amount shall not be expended in one case.

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator will direct his mind to the first provision on page 5, he will find—

That the board of arbitration shall commence their hearings within ten days from the date of the appointment of the third arbitrator, and shall find and file their award, as provided in this section, within thirty days.

Then they shall file the award as provided in this section within thirty days of the appointment of the third arbitrator.

Mr. TELLER. I had not noticed that, and I think it is a mistake. I should like to suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that it would be a great deal better when an arbitration board is created to let the board determine how long the case shall continue. Thirty days would not be enough, as a general rule, and, I think, it will be found to work very badly if you limit them to thirty days. If the employees insist on thirty days, let that question be settled when they enter into the arbitration; but if it requires more than thirty days, let the stipulation be made that additional time shall be given.

Mr. KYLE. If $5,000 is not deemed sufficient, in the view of the Senator from Colorado, we can make it $10,000. I think the disposition is on the part of all Senators to make it ample.

Mr. TELLER. I supposed that it was to be not more than $5,000 in one case. I had not any idea that it was supposed that all these questions could be settled for $5,000 a year.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that was the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. CULLOM. I should think that the amount named in the amendment ought to be doubled. If we have three or four arbitrations between now and the next session of Congress, evidently the amount provided for here will be exhausted before the arbitrations are concluded.

Mr. ALLEN. It would not cover the expense of one ordinary arbitration.

Mr. CULLOM. Probably not; and there may be a half dozen arbitrations going on at the same time. Labor troubles generally occur once in a year, and sometimes oftener, and generally they all occur about the same time. So if three or four arbitrations are proceeding at the same time, examining witnesses, papers, books, etc., evidently the $5,000 will be very soon exhausted. So I hope the Senate will double the amount.

Mr. KYLE. I shall be glad to amend by striking out "five," before the word "thousand," and inserting "ten."

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not inclined to insist upon the amendment I offered. By way of explanation I will say that as I read the proposed amendment, the amount specified seemed to apply to each individual member of the board of arbitration, but I find there is another clause in the amendment which reads:

> And a sum of money sufficient to pay the same, together with the traveling and other necessary and proper expenses of any conciliation or arbitration had hereunder, not to exceed $5,000 in any one year.

I am inclined to think I was wrong in the construction of the amendment—although I think it is awkwardly expressed—and that the sum of $5,000 is intended to cover the expense of one arbitration. I have no objection to that. I think it ought to be left open. We ought not to limit it at all so far as the amount of money is concerned. I will therefore withdraw the amendment I have offered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire is withdrawn. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] has moved to amend the amendment, in line 18, before the word "thousand," by striking out "five" and inserting "ten;" so as to make the amount $10,000. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on striking out, in section 11, line 3, after the first word "That," down to and including the word "appropriated," in line 12, and inserting the new matter which is printed in italics in the bill, and which has been read. The question is on that amendment as it has been amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a new section, to be inserted after section 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

> SEC. 12. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to enlarge the remedies at law and in equity in courts of the United States now enjoyed by private persons, firms, or corporations; and that in cases of controversies between interstate-commerce carriers and their employees concerning rates of wages and terms of employment involving the public interests and threatening irreparable public injury, no statute of the United States shall be construed as permitting the equitable jurisdiction of the courts of the United States to be invoked except by the Attorney-General of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to add an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to make a statement for a moment?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. This amendment simply prohibits the indiscriminate issuing of injunctions on behalf of private individuals and private corporations, and vests the power in the Attorney-General to determine when it is proper to apply for a writ of injunction, like the relation in a case of quo warranto or process of that kind.

Mr. NELSON. I move to add at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska the following:

> And nothing in this act shall be so construed as to entitle any court to compel any employee to render personal service without his consent.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] covers that point entirely and fully. It is also covered by another provision.

Mr. NELSON. Is that already in the bill?

Mr. ALLEN. It is already in the bill.

Mr. NELSON. Very well; then I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if the scope of his amendment is not in the direction of preventing one class of citizens, to wit, the corporations, making appeals, and depriving them of the right which the Senator from Nebraska and I enjoy to appeal from any decision?

Mr. ALLEN. No; the purpose of this amendment, I will say in answer to the Senator from New Jersey, is to have the Attorney-General determine when it is proper to apply for an injunction to restrain laborers and labor organizations, so that there shall be some central power before whom the facts may be laid to determine the question and prevent the issuance of indiscriminate injunctions.

Mr. SEWELL. Why deprive a corporation or a citizen of the right of a direct appeal and let the question go to the Attorney-General? Why deprive the court of the right to decide that question?

Mr. ALLEN. You do not deprive the court of the right to decide that question at all. In almost every State where you file an information in the nature of a quo warranto, to oust a person from public office, or to test a franchise, the Attorney-General has the right to determine, and he always grants the right to his district attorneys when it is made to appear to him that the case is a proper one. This simply prevents the corporation or individual from indiscriminately running into the courts without the consent of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SEWELL. Is it not an inherent right of an individual or a corporation—a corporation being, under the law, practically an individual—to go to a court in all cases?

Mr. ALLEN. There is no such thing as an absolute right to a writ of injunction.

Mr. SEWELL. Then there is no occasion for the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. The granting of a writ of injunction is always discretionary with the court. The court may or may not grant an injunction.

Mr. SEWELL. Would not the courts under this provision be deprived of the right to grant an injunction if they wanted to do so?

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all; but the Attorney-General takes the initiative, either by himself or through some of his district attorneys in the various jurisdictions.

Mr. SEWELL. I see what the Senator wants to provide for, that a corporation or an individual shall not have the right to a writ of injunction except through the Attorney-General.

Mr. ALLEN. No; but that if either the corporations or the laboring organizations themselves desire to apply for a writ of injunction with reference to any dispute between them, they must first lay that matter before the Attorney-General and obtain his consent.

Mr. FRYE. Practically, then, it will be impossible to obtain an injunction except on the approval of one man.

Mr. ALLEN. Except on the approval or with the permission of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SEWELL. Then you set the Attorney-General above the court; and a court can not act without the prior action of the Attorney-General.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all. I simply say that the proceedings must be initiated by the Attorney-General, or with his consent. There is nothing unusual about that, because any lawyer who is familiar with the facts knows that there are certain writs that you can not sue out at common law without the consent of the law officers; and this case, in my judgment, ought to be one of them.

We all know that the writ of injunction is not a writ of right, never was, and is not now. It is a discretionary writ, and may or may not be granted in the discretion of the court. But the setting of the machinery of the court in motion ought to be placed in the control of the Attorney-General, he granting that power or instructing the district attorneys throughout the United States to file the proper bill and initiate the proper proceeding when he passes upon the facts which are laid before him. It strikes me that this is in the interest of both parties and of all parties.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say that you ought not to pass a bill which will deprive the courts of the right to do what they consider proper in the case of any citizen or in the case of any corporation in anything which involves great business interests or the rights of the individuals concerned. The courts ought to be open to everybody in this country, individuals and corporations, and they ought not to be obliged to go to the Attorney-General to get permission to apply for an injunction or ask him to make the application.

I hope that the portion of the amendment which refers to that particular point will not be adopted.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to enter into any discussion of the question of the courts being open to every individual; I fully agree with the Senator from New Jersey that they should be; but is it proper in these great controversies, where either party is somewhat excited, for them to go into court without any restraint whatever, or to have people apply to the court without any restraint whatever, and procure a writ of injunction to tie up a great railway line; or, upon the other hand, a writ of injunction to tie up thousands, and possibly hundreds of thousands, of men without the consent of some central and responsible authority?

Mr. President, suppose a man occupies an office, it may be as an officer de facto and not de jure, and it is sought to oust him. A private relator can not bring an action, although he may be a contestant, to oust that man of his office without the consent of the Attorney-General. I am speaking now of the common law. I do not know what the statute law may be in New Jersey. The proceeding must be initiated by the Attorney-General, because it is of a quasi public character.

These proceedings, whatever form they may take, ought, in my judgment, to be initiated by the Attorney-General, because they are of a highly public character, and it is a double-edged sword; it cuts as much against the laboring man as it does against the corporation. I have no doubt whatever that in a proper case, where proper representations are made, the Attorney-General will instruct the district attorney of the district in which the controversy arises to apply for a proper injunction, or permit a corporation or the laboring men, as the case may be, to apply. So that it is under his supervision.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like at this time to say that I do not want to see the courts deprived of the right to answer an appeal of a citizen or of a corporation. I do not want to see corporations or individual employees or labor organizations deprived of their rights in the courts, as we have understood them for a hundred years, by being compelled to go to one officer and get his permission to have a writ of injunction issued. I think the amendment is a vicious one in that sense.

Mr. ALLEN. It is in accordance with judicial procedure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by adding as a new section the following:

SEC. 13. That any person, being a creditor, master, employer, overseer, or agent, who shall use any coercion or intimidation to procure an elector who is a debtor or under his authority, control, direction, or employment to vote contrary to the wishes or inclination of such elector, or who shall deter such elector from voting at any election held in pursuance of the laws of the United States, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than five years; that any of the following acts shall constitute unlawful coercion and intimidation under this section, to wit: Any representation or statement by any person, company, corporation, association, creditor, or employer, in person or by or through his or its servant or agent, if a creditor or employer, to any debtor or employee in his or its service, or in the service or employment of another, or the debtor of another, that it would be to the interest of the employer or employers, or to the creditor, for such employee or debtor, or his coemployees, to cast his or their ballot for a particular candidate for the office of President of the United States, or Vice-President of the United States, or for any particular elector or electors for the office of President or Vice-President of the United States in any State or district of the United States, or who shall make an exhibition of or reference to any actual or supposed order or orders for goods manufactured or to be manufactured, or sold, by any such employer, or to any article or articles of such employer held or kept for sale, or to any article or articles to be manufactured, purchased, or sold by such employer, company, corporation, or association, or in any manner stating or intimating that such order of goods will be filled, or goods manufactured, purchased, or sold in the event of the election of any such candidate for any such office or offices, or that such order or orders will not be filled, or that the goods will not be manufactured or sold, in the event of the election of any such candidate or candidates for any such office or offices, or who shall make any statement or representation, direct or indirect, that the employer, company, corporation, association, or person, as the case may be, will close its or his place of business, or cease to do or transact business, or that it or he will be compelled to, or will, discharge any employee or employees from his or its service, or that any such employee or employees will not be given employment if any particular candidate or candidates for any such office or offices shall be elected, shall be punished on conviction by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than one nor more than five years, and shall pay a fine of not less than one nor more than five thousand dollars: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit full, orderly, and legitimate argument and persuasion respecting the merits of any candidate or candidates for any such office or offices, or as to the soundness, wisdom, or policy of political parties of which any such candidate or candidates are members. And any person violating any of the provisions of this act may be indicted or informed against in any State court having general criminal jurisdiction in the county in which the offense shall be committed, and shall be there prosecuted to final judgment according to the law of procedure of the State in which the offense may be committed, and shall, on conviction, be imprisoned in the penitentiary of such State: And provided further, That if any United States circuit court having jurisdiction in said county shall first obtain jurisdiction of the person offending, he may there be prosecuted to final judgment, and shall, on conviction, be imprisoned in a United States penitentiary to be designated by the court.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have not participated in this debate heretofore and do not propose to do so now except to say a single word. I have received letters urgent in their nature from the labor organizations of my part of the country requesting me to support this bill. I take it that they had reference to the bill as it was sent over from the House of Representatives. I have been an advocate of arbitration during my public life and have hoped many times that some means might be devised whereby these questions which agitate from time to time the public mind and divide the laborers into one camp and the employers into another might be made the subjects of proper arbitration, and hence I was disposed to favor any reasonable bill.

Mr. President, as this debate has progressed it has seemed to me that some of our friends in this Chamber who have always posed, if I may use that term, as the special champions of the laboring man have been inclined to load down the pending bill with extraneous matter that will make it absolutely inoperative, providing it could be made operative if it passed in what I regard as a more reasonable form.

Mr. President, I know the Senator from Nebraska will not feel that I am offensive, because I do not intend it in that way, neither do I pretend that I fully comprehend his amendment, which I have tried to follow as it has been read from the desk, but it does seem to me from what I heard that the amendment, if it is incorporated into the pending bill, will very likely defeat the purposes of the proposed act and that we will not get the good from this legislation which we might otherwise get.

Mr. President, I have never been a special champion of the laboring men, or a special champion of the manufacturers or employers of this country. I have tried to keep my mind balanced on that question where I could vote and speak in behalf of the rights of both these great interests. But I have felt as this discussion has proceeded and the consideration of the bill has gone along that we were legislating in the right direction, and that if this bill should be passed in a reasonable form, some good, very likely, would come from it, and that we might be spared some of the commotion and the trouble and the loss of life and money which have resulted from strikes on the part of the laboring men and the resistance of them on the part of those who employed the men.

Mr. President, it may be that the Senator from Nebraska can explain his amendment so that the impression which I received as it was read from the desk will be dissipated, and that it may appear to be really in the interest of the legislation we are trying to bring about. I sincerely trust that it may be so. Yet I want to repeat what I have said, that I fear if this amendment is adopted it may defeat the purposes of the proposed legislation and do harm rather than good.

Mr. ALLEN. I have been listening very carefully to ascertain the impression made upon the Senator from New Hampshire, and I am not yet informed as to that impression.

Mr. GALLINGER. One impression made upon my mind, if the Senator will permit me, is this: I am not a lawyer and am not going to enter into a legal argument with the Senator from Nebraska, but it does seem to me that a United States statute which expressly provides that the matter shall be transferred to the State courts presents a serious question as to whether or not it can be done constitutionally, and whether or not it would carry out the purpose which the Senator has in mind in presenting the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not suppose anybody doubted its constitutionality.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are other matters which I noticed as I listened to the reading of the amendment. I wish I might have it at my desk to read it more carefully. I wish it had been printed, so that everyone could see it. There are other matters in the amendment which struck me as being very questionable, so far as the proposed legislation is concerned. I thought it would complicate the matter and make it much more difficult of enforcement than it would be if the Senator's amendment should not be incorporated in the bill. That is the impression I received.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, just a word explanatory of the proposed amendment. While it is somewhat involved in its phraseology, it is not difficult to understand. It means simply that no employer shall take advantage of his position to influence a vote of his employee by any kind of threat or representation to the employee that unless he supports such and such candidates for office his employment will be at an end. That is what it means.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. It means, I suppose, that an agent of a woolen mill, when the proposition is that there shall be no protection whatever on woolen goods, and that there shall be a duty on wool itself, the raw material, will not be permitted to say to his employees, any of them, privately or publicly, "If that measure shall become a law my mill can not run."

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; it does not mean that.

Mr. FRYE. If he did, he would be liable to go to State prison.

Mr. ALLEN. It means nothing of the kind, and if the Senator had listened to it carefully——

Mr. FRYE. I did listen to it, and it struck me as wonderfully absurd.

Mr. ALLEN. How is that?

Mr. FRYE. I did listen, and I thought it was a very absurd amendment. I am not so polite as the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the strongest commendation of the proposed amendment. The fact that the Senator from Maine condemns it satisfies me that it has much virtue.

Mr. President, it means nothing of the kind stated by the Senator from Maine. It means that if I am in the service of a manufacturing company——

Mr. FRYE. That is it; he has it—a manufacturing company.

Mr. ALLEN. Wait a moment. It means that if I am in the employ of a manufacturing company or corporation or individual—it covers all of them, all corporations and all persons—and I am a daily worker for wages to support myself and family, the proprietor shall not call me into his office just before election, when the winter is coming on, and say, "Now, Mr. ALLEN, I have here in my hand a certain number of orders, and we can run our business all winter if John Smith is elected President of the United States, but if he is not elected, I am going to close up," stopping at that, but implying all the while, "If you do not vote the ticket

I want you to vote, I will discharge you." I say that is intimidation and fraud, and no decent man will engage in it, and there ought to be a statute prohibiting it.

I shall not go into a discussion of what took place in this country within the last twenty-four months in that respect further than to say that I know as a matter of fact that that was done in hundreds of instances and that it did influence thousands of votes. If any party in the history of the United States has advocated the freedom of the ballot and the right to exercise uninfluenced the elective franchise, it is the Republican party. They have done that, however, more especially in connection with the colored men of the South.

I have nothing sinister to gain by offering the amendment. I do not do it through mere caprice. I want to see the time come in this country, if I can live long enough to see it, when every citizen, I care not how humble he may be, can go to the polls uninfluenced by any threat or intimidation, directly or indirectly, which is calculated to induce him to vote one way or the other. That is the ideal government. That is the theory upon which this Government was established.

Mr. President, this amendment is germane to the pending bill. Here is the relation of employer and employee. The bill deals with certain financial relations between these parties. Where better than in this bill can you put a provision to protect the rights of the humble man against the strong, so far as the exercise of the franchise is concerned? Would the Senator from Maine say that any of the things enumerated in the proposed amendment are commendable upon the part of the person indulging in them? Are they not to be condemned, even in the domain of morals; and if they are to be condemned, why should we not enact a law covering such cases and, if anybody sees fit to violate that law, prosecute him?

Mr. President, it does not hamper the bill, as the Senator from New Hampshire says. It is very common in this Chamber when a man wants to seesaw a little on a measure, to say, "Oh, you are putting on an amendment here that will load down the bill. Therefore you are responsible and will be held responsible." The Senator from New Hampshire used the word "pose," whatever that may mean. I have not posed as the special champion of anybody. Never in my life have I been the special representative of any particular class of people. I am an American citizen, and I want to see every American citizen, naturalized or native born, an individual or a legitimate corporation, have his rights. I do not want to see them exercise the rights of anybody else.

I want to see every legitimate enterprise fully encouraged and protected; not protected in the New England sense of protection, but protected by the laws of the United States and by the laws of the different States. I want the persons and the property rights and the franchise of all people fully protected by legislation, and any violation of those rights I desire to see punished. If there is anything wrong in that, my shoulders are broad enough to take the consequences. I do not fear the consequences.

Mr. President, so far as this bill is concerned, I have been the recipient of telegrams by the score wanting me to vote for it. I said yesterday when the discussion first opened that after explaining its vicious features, as I tried to do, if the representatives of the labor organizations desire me to vote for it, I will do it; and I propose to do it. I propose to do it upon the theory that their eyes are now open; they know what they are walking into. With them the consequences must rest, not with me. It is a kind of goody-goody sort of bill. It covers a good deal of paper.

It is very artistically drawn now, after the several amendments which have been offered and adopted. But there is nothing to it that you can ever enforce. When the amendments were adopted which protected the individual worker against an injunction compelling him to work whether he would or not, the bill was robbed of its chief vice. As the Senator from South Dakota reported it here it stood as a manacle upon the limbs of every laborer for a railroad company if the corporation saw fit to sue out an injunction against him. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts offered an amendment, that was adopted, which has robbed it of that peculiar, obnoxious feature.

The Senator from Maine must think I have a peculiar idea of public questions that I would offer this amendment for the mere sake of doing something, regardless of its consequences. There are 800,000 men in the United States in the service of railroad companies, one-half of whom are importuned and threatened directly or indirectly if they do not vote the tickets of their masters. I doubt not that in the last Presidential election a million and a half or two million men by these underhand methods and indirect threats were robbed of their suffrage. I do not doubt it. This protects them; but because it protects them it seems to be objectionable.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska before he sits down whether he understands that we can, under the Constitution, provide that an offense created by a United States statute shall be tried in a State court?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand that to be the law.

Mr. ALLEN. I say so distinctly. I understand that to be the law, too.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed it was settled otherwise in the Pennsylvania case in principle, even as applied to a civil proceeding. Who has the pardoning power in such a case, the governor or the President of the United States?

Mr. ALLEN. The President has the pardoning power.

Mr. HOAR. He can pardon a man convicted and sentenced by a State court?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. Where does the Senator find that authority?

Mr. ALLEN. I find it in dozens of decisions which I have consulted in years gone by.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to see some of them.

Mr. ALLEN. I will be glad to send the Senator a reference to some of them if he desires to see them.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed—and there are forty lawyers within the sound of my voice, any one of whom can correct me if I am mistaken—that it is not competent for Congress to create an offense and provide that it shall be triable in and punishable by a State court. Perhaps I am altogether mistaken, but I supposed that to be the law.

I should like to ask the Senator another question. Does he understand that a Presidential elector is a State or national officer?

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think it signifies much which he is. There is a dispute as to it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator proposes to punish offenses committed with relation to the office of Presidential elector.

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose a Presidential elector stands to the State and nation very much as a Senator stands to the State and nation. For some purposes he may be considered a national officer; for other purposes he may be considered a State officer.

Mr. HOAR. I had supposed, and the Senator will correct me or some other Senator will if I am wrong, that an elector for President or Vice-President of the United States was a State officer, and that we had always in making provision in regard to national elections—elections of Representatives in Congress—scrupulously kept off the field of providing for the election of State officers.

Again the Senator will correct me if I am wrong, but it seems to me his amendment is unconstitutional in two respects. First, it provides with reference to the election of President of the United States. The amendment says vote for President or Vice-President or for electors; but of course the vote for electors is the only one that will ever be cast under the present Constitution of the United States. The Senator is undertaking to create an offense with reference to that class of elections. I understand that is wholly within the power of the States.

Secondly, the act of Congress which the Senator proposes provides that the offense thus created shall be tried and sentence be passed in a State court. I suppose that also is unconstitutional.

Mr. ALLEN. I am very much gratified that I did not learn what little constitutional law I know in the section where the Senator from Massachusetts got his eminent knowledge. The Constitution of the United States expressly provides for an elector. The elector is not created by the State constitution or a State statute. He is a creature of the Federal Constitution, and therefore draws all his life and vitality from that source. There can not be the slightest doubt about that. It is just exactly as the Federal Constitution creates the office of United States Senator and Representative in Congress. It is not created by any State constitution or statute. It is created by and emanates from the Federal Constitution.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, the Constitution of the United States expressly provides that Congress may fix the manner and time and place of electing Senators and Representatives, with the limitation that they shall not undertake to deal with the question of the place of choosing Senators.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. Now, it is under that power that all our penal or criminal authority is held to exist. That provision is scrupulously omitted in regard to electors, and as I understand it, there is nothing more clear, going entirely through the whole provision, than that Congress meant to keep that power in the States' hands. That was the reason why they not only omitted this provision which applies to Representatives and Senators, but they further provided that no person holding a national office shall act as an elector. If there was any single object which the framers of the Constitution had in mind, it was to keep the choice of electors in the hands of the States, and all the provisions in regard to them.

Mr. ALLEN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HOAR. That is all I claim.

Mr. ALLEN. Nobody has disputed it. The truth is, the Senator from Massachusetts is getting into the reflective or abstractive mood. I said that the offices of United States Senator and Representative in Congress and the office of Presidential elector are all created by the Federal Constitution. They come from the Federal Constitution and nothing else. They do not exist by virtue of State constitutions or by virtue of State statutes any more than they exist by virtue of the laws of Australia or Russia, and in that sense they are Federal, because they are created by the Federal Constitution; and yet they are Senators and Representatives and electors for certain States and certain districts in another sense. So that signifies nothing.

The Senator from Massachusetts put me this question, as though he thought it was a poser—a species of knockout blow: Whether I thought it was in the power of Congress to confer jurisdiction on the State courts to prosecute offenses against the statutes of the United States. I did not suppose there was a lawyer in the United States who would deny it or even question it. There is penal statute after penal statute of the United States which is being enforced by State courts. I recall to mind now one of them.

The penalties against national banks for usury are enforced by the State courts. It is perfectly competent for Congress under our Constitution to abolish all the subordinate judiciary of the United States, everything below the Supreme Court. It is perfectly competent for Congress to confer jurisdiction upon the nisi prius courts of the States and say that they shall ex officio exercise the Federal jurisdiction within their circuits and districts. And yet the Senator from Massachusetts wants me to take his ipse dixit that that is not true. I am not prepared to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer an amendment. On page 4, line 18, I move to strike out all after the word "arbitration" down to and including the word "section," in line 22, on the same page, in the following words:

But, in the event of their failure to name such arbitrator within five days after their first meeting, the third arbitrator shall be named by the commissioners named in the preceding section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the amendment simply proposes to strike out the provision which I have read, that if the arbitrators of the respective parties to a controversy should within five days after their first meeting fail to agree upon a third arbitrator the Commissioner of Labor and the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall appoint the third arbitrator. I think it would be a great deal better to permit the parties to the controversy to themselves agree upon an arbitrator, even if it should take a longer time than five days or even ten days.

The point to be reached by this measure is to bring about a voluntary and a fair settlement of the differences between the employer and the employees. Under the bill as it is now provided it is in the power of either party who thinks that it may gain an advantage by having the commissioners named appoint the third arbitrator to have that brought about by simply standing out and refusing to agree upon a third arbitrator.

As I understand this measure it is purely voluntary. It proposes to use no coercion whatever, but to allow the parties the fullest, fairest, and freest opportunity to settle their differences. I can conceive conditions under which the appointment of a third arbitrator by the commissioners would be extremely distasteful and objectionable to one of the parties to the controversy, and in that event it would not be a fair arbitration.

I therefore submit the amendment, because I believe it is in the interest of the end that is sought to be gained by the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have but a few words to say upon the pending amendment. Something, of course, can be said in favor of the position taken by the Senator from Florida, and I think he has said all that can be said in favor of it. The men who have been promoting the passage of this bill, the representatives of the old-time railway organizations, Mr. Arthur, Mr. Clark, Mr. Morrissey, and others, are men of ability. They have devoted their lives almost—at any rate, some of them the best part of their lives—to harmonizing and adjusting differences between employers and employees. They have studied the subject, I venture to say, with more care, all things considered, than any member of the Senate has had time to give to it; certainly with infinitely more care than I have been able to give; and they all desire, so far as I know, that this provision shall be left in the bill.

The reason for the provision, as I understand it, is that if it were omitted and no provision made for the appointment of the third arbitrator and there would come a deadlock, either one of the parties to the arbitration might prevent in that way any arbitration whatever. If an arbitrator is appointed by the carrier and is like most arbitrators, he will be appointed much in the interest of those who dictate his appointment or who appoint him, and he might not be willing to agree to a third arbitrator, and therefore an end would be put to this attempt at conciliation.

The gentlemen of whom I spoke, who have the aid of good counsel, and who are themselves able men, would rather take the chance indicated by the Senator from Florida, that the person chosen by the Commissioner of Labor and the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission as the third arbitrator, where the two arbitrators have failed to agree upon a third, may not prove a fair-minded man and lend his efforts to an honorable and just arbitrament, than to leave the provision out of the bill and put it in the power of the carrier on the one hand or the employees on the other to defeat altogether the arbitration if they should choose to do so.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the Senator think it would be better to have no arbitration at all than to have an arbitration by a board of arbitration the majority, at least, of whom are suspected of being unfair?

Mr. SPOONER. I will state how I feel about it. I have felt that, as this bill had passed the House three times, as it had the strong support of the gentlemen who represent these organizations, as it is limited to interstate carriers, I would support, as far as it seemed to be a just measure, all things considered, the proposition that they might originate. I have suggested some amendments to them, which have been adopted, in their interest and at the same time fair to both parties to the arbitration.

Of course this measure is experimental. It is not a perfect bill. It has been improved in some respects. In some respects I think it has not been improved. It is an experiment. It is an attempt which all good men in this country ought to hope, and undoubtedly do hope, will prove to be a successful one to avoid the great strikes, which not only bring loss to the country but loss to the men who are engaged in them, and to promote under the auspices of Congress, as far as it can be done, courts of conciliation and adjustments between the men and the companies.

So far as I have seen and talked with those gentlemen, they feel that in the long run this bill, as all bills of the kind, must depend for its success largely upon public opinion, and they believe it is a fair bill, if there are elements of mutuality in it; because there is not one of those men who is not large enough and strong enough to see that there can be no successful arbitration under a law which is not in a fair degree mutual. They know that such arbitrations can not be successful if they are one-sided, because if they are one-sided, being voluntary, they will not exist at all.

So they do not wish the delay. That is another point about it. If one arbitrator is appointed by the carrier, the other by the men, and the third is to be appointed by the two arbitrators, it is in the power, as I said a moment ago, of one of the parties to prevent an arbitration. In the same way it is in the power of one of the parties to indefinitely prolong or delay arbitration. They want prompt action if it can be brought about. When a disagreement arises which they have not been able to adjust by the mediation of the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and a resort to arbitration becomes necessary, they want the arbitrators, soon after the agreement to arbitrate is made, to meet, and as it is provided in the bill, if they can not agree upon the third person, they want the third party named by some one else, and they want that done promptly.

That is one reason why there is provided in the bill a limit of time within which the award must be made. They do not want an arbitration to be susceptible of indefinite prolongation by either one party or the other, because the status is to be preserved and they want a prompt and early adjustment of the difference.

Now, because they want the bill this way, and because it is perfectly obvious to me, if I am not altogether wrong, that without some provision of this kind there can be no arbitration, practically, under the bill, seeing the difficulty which my friend suggests, I am in favor of the bill with that provision in it.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the discussion on this point. I think it is sufficiently obvious to be understood without any further discussion. The only point which I should like to impress upon the Senate is that I think, in the estimation of most of us, it is better we should have no arbitration at all than to have an arbitration which after the appointment of the arbitrators is open to the accusation, if not the suspicion, of being a partial arbitration and not a fair one.

It is perfectly competent for either side to withdraw before the appointment of the arbitrators and thereby avoid it. But at the same time that would not be in the direction of settling differences. The object of this measure, as I have stated, is to secure a fair arbitration and to bring about as fair a settlement of the controversy as is possible; and that can only be done when all question whatever as to the fairness of the arbitrators or the judges is beyond question.

Mr. SPOONER. You never can get it beyond question.

Mr. MALLORY. I think you can if the parties themselves agree to a third arbitrator.

Mr. SPOONER. It is absolutely impossible for any act of Congress to put it beyond question. One thing is very certain—the arbitrators are obliged to agree upon the third arbitrator within five days.

Mr. MALLORY. In the case of an arbitration between private individuals the two arbitrators always select a third—at least as a general rule.

Mr. SPOONER. I know they do, but where there is a dispute between private parties and they find themselves unable to agree upon arbitrators, the courts are open to them. My friend knows that when questions of this kind are in controversy the courts are not ordinarily open to either side. It has been thought, and I think with some force, that the time being limited within which the two arbitrators shall agree upon the selection of a third, if either does not desire the appointment of the third by these officers for fear that the arbitration would not be fair, they will themselves agree to a third. In other words, you can not make it perfect. So far as I am concerned, I say what I do in defense of the proposition as it stands now, because those men, who are very strong men and able men, having considered it carefully, prefer it to the other proposition.

Mr. MALLORY. Who prefer it?

Mr. SPOONER. The men who represent these various organizations.

Mr. MALLORY. The labor organizations prefer it?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows it to be a fact that this point was discussed by them?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; I have discussed it with one or two of them. I suggested the very difficulty which the Senator from Florida has suggested. It is an experiment anyway. I do not know what good will come of it; but if there is any possibility of good to come from it, I want the bill to go through as they wish to have it passed.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, I will state that the matter was considered by the committee, the leaders of the workingmen being present; that the bill was prepared just as it is by them, and this provision was adopted at their suggestion.

Mr. MALLORY. After a discussion of the question?

Mr. LINDSAY. After a discussion of the question before the committee. Each provision of the bill was gone over carefully, and these men were heard.

Mr. MALLORY. I defer a great deal to the judgment of the committee and to the judgment of the men interested in the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to add to what the Senator from Kentucky has said that I have talked with one or two of the gentlemen who were parties to the preparation of the bill, and they were anxious that it should be passed as it came to the Senate.

Mr. KYLE. I will say to the Senator from Florida that we discussed this matter very thoroughly before the committee with the representatives of the railway trainmen. Various modes of naming the third arbitrator were suggested in case an agreement was not had between the first two. Reference was made to the law of 1888, where the President named the three arbitrators. It was thought better in the interest of all parties to have the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Labor Commissioner name the third arbitrator, rather than that it should be done by the President. It was their suggestion, at any rate.

Mr. MALLORY. This one arbitrator will determine the character of the arbitration. As I was proceeding to say, I defer to the judgment of the committee and also to the wishes of the men who are deeply interested in this measure, as I understand they are. At the same time, I shall insist upon a vote on the amendment because it is very apparent to me that after an understanding to go into an arbitration is entered upon, it would be in the power of one party to compel the other to accept an arbitrator who might not be acceptable to him in the end. The bill prescribes that "in the event of their failure to name such arbitrator within five days after their first meeting, the third arbitrator shall be named by the commissioners named in the preceding section." They do not know who that arbitrator will be; they have no power to suggest who he shall be; and they have no idea as to what his views are on the questions in controversy. Consequently he may turn out to be one whom they regard as inimical to the special interests of one side or the other.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, I confess that when I commenced the consideration of the pending bill I was not very favorably impressed with the idea that we would be able to report any bill that would be practically beneficial, but after listening to what the men who represented the labor interests had to say I came to the conclusion that very much good might be effected through the instrumentality of the bill that they presented to the committee. All the amendments to it were agreed to by them; many of them were suggested by them.

Of course when you come to appoint the third arbitrator, the two who are named by the parties having been unable to agree on the third, one party or the other may not be satisfied with the third man named by any person or any tribunal, but if that is to be made an objection, if nobody is to be authorized to name the third arbitrator, then we are left with a dispute between the two arbitrators named by the parties which can never be settled at all.

It will be a very unfortunate day in this country when we reach the point where no third tribunal can be found which will treat both sides fairly in the selection of an arbitrator.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to suggest to him whether, if each side should get the arbitrator they desired in their own interest, there could possibly be a fair arbitration?

Mr. LINDSAY. There would never be. There is nothing in the bill that prevents either side from suggesting to the Interstate Commerce Commission whom the third arbitrator should be, but my impression is that it would be a most indelicate thing to do and a most improper thing for the commission to permit to be done. When the time comes for an absolutely disinterested, competent, fair man to be selected, the commission ought to be allowed to exercise its own judgment, and we ought to have confidence enough in it, as the workingmen have, to believe that it would make a fair selection.

It is of very great consequence, when arbitration is needed, that it shall come speedily. A board of arbitration is needed only when the dispute between the employer and the employees has become so acute that a strike is impending. If the two arbitrators can postpone indefinitely the agreement upon the third arbitrator and the parties refuse to agree, and there is no tribunal upon which either party can agree for the appointment of a third, a strike will come, and those who are opposed to the strike can not control the imprudent and excitable men who say, "There is no remedy known to the law, and therefore we must take the remedy into our own hands."

Now, the very purpose of this arbitration and the very reason why the tribunal was appointed which should appoint the third arbitrator was that in dangerous times of acute disputes between the employer and the employees a board of arbitration upon which there should be at least one man with whose appointment neither party had anything to do should be provided to hear the dispute and to settle the controversy between the disputants.

I take it that nearly all the strikes we have had have come about because there was no tribunal constituted under any law which met the approval of both parties to settle the dispute. Many times when all the testimony is heard before a tribunal of this sort parties who are anxious to strike may become convinced that they have no ground of complaint, and when corporations, who have never heard the side of labor, hear for the first time the labor side presented in an authoritative and regular way they may become convinced that labor has wrongs which ought to be remedied.

Mr. President, unless something of this sort is done, unless one bill like this is passed, the time will come—and it will be a most unhappy day—when the disorders growing out of disputes between employers and employees will have to be suppressed by the use of means against the very thought of which all Americans revolt.

Now, then, if anything can be done to avert this unhappy contingency—and the labor men convinced me that they desire most heartily it shall be done—I say it is almost criminal upon our part to stand in the way of a consummation so much to be wished.

Whether this is all labor ought to have I do not know. It is all that the representatives of labor asked for. It is better to have a board of arbitration provided for under a law which does not give them all they want than to so frame the law that the other side will never agree to an arbitration at all. It seems to me that this bill is the least objectionable and that it promises the most; and therefore I came here expecting to vote for it without any amendment that did not emanate from the labor people themselves or did not receive their approval.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] will prevail. The views of the labor organizations, of course, are entitled to very great respect in considering the provisions of the bill because their interests are affected by it, but they are not conclusive upon the judgment and conscience of the Senate.

As the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] said, this bill is largely experimental, and the best judgment of both Houses of Congress ought to be brought to bear to make it as perfect as possible.

It seems to me that the provision in the bill which it is proposed to strike out will probably do more to prevent the successful working of this experiment than anything else in the bill. I have no criticism to pass upon the officers who are now in positions and who would be called upon to appoint the third arbitrator, but we can very well conceive that in the course of time officials may be appointed to these offices who will be recognized by one side or the other as hostile to their interests. If that occurs, then manifestly there will be no arbitration at all.

If the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor should be known to be, or supposed to be, favorable to the railroad employees, then manifestly the railway companies would decline to enter into arbitration, because they would know that after appointing their arbitrator and the laboring men appointing their arbitrator, all the laboring men would have to do in order to secure a second arbitrator to their satisfaction would be to decline to discuss at all the appointment of a third arbitrator, thus throwing the appointment into the hands of the officials who are known to be, or supposed to be, friendly to the railway employees, and vice versa.

On the other hand, I do not think there is any considerable weight in the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], that either side would decline to agree upon the third arbitrator or umpire for the purpose of defeating arbitration. Neither side need proceed to arbitration unless they wish to. Under the provisions of this bill they may say, "We insist upon our rights and propose to fight the thing out." But if both sides are sufficiently impressed with the gravity of the situation to say, "We think this controversy ought to be determined now by three impartial men," then they will be sufficiently impressed to insist that two arbitrators, chosen by them voluntarily, shall discuss the situation, go over the ground, look over the field, and select some fair man, after as many trials as may be necessary, who will umpire the arbitration.

If the arbitration is voluntary, it ought to be voluntary all through. To give any respect or validity or sanction to the award which may be made by the arbitrators, they ought to be composed of men in whom both parties have confidence and who they believe will do entire and complete justice between them.

So it seems to me, this being an experiment, it is a good deal safer to leave the selection of all three of these arbitrators to the voluntary action of the parties than it is to provide for the appointment of a third arbitrator by some separate tribunal, in whom one or the other of the parties may not have confidence and, not having confidence, will therefore decline to enter into arbitration at all.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARSH, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. HAY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave at this time, from the Committee on Finance, to report favorably, with sundry amendments, the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

I desire to say that a minority of the committee dissent from the amendments indicated in the bill, known as excise taxes upon business firms and corporations; also a minority of the committee dissent from the amendments proposed to sections 27 and 28, known as the bond sections; and also recommend amendments to those sections, which I now give notice will be offered at the proper time. I ask that the bill may be printed as proposed to be amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that 2,000 extra copies of the bill, with the amendments, may be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I send the proposed amendments of the minority of the committee to sections 27 and 28 to the desk, to be printed with the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them be attached to the bill.

Mr. STEWART. Yes, let them be attached to the bill, so that we can see the whole thing together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the amendments intended to be proposed by the minority of the committee will be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let them be attached to the bill, so that the bill and amendments may be seen at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendments proposed by the minority will be printed immediately following the text of the bill. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

Mr. ALLISON. Following in the line of the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri, I send to the desk an order which I ask to have considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the document room of the Senate 5,000 copies of the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, as reported to the Senate May 12, 1898.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the order at this time? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendments of the minority to sections 27 and 28 will also be printed, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will also be ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the order include the printing of the amendments with the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; including the amendments to be proposed by the minority of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be inserted in the order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the order of the Senate is that the amendments submitted by the minority of the committee shall be printed at the close of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I want to include.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order will be considered agreed to in that form. The Chair hears no objection, and it is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. As the bill which I have just reported will probably not be printed before to-morrow, and as there are a great number of amendments to it, it has been suggested by members of the committee, and I think very wisely, that the bill should not be taken up until Monday next. Therefore I give notice that on Monday next, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill, and shall also ask the Senate to continue its consideration until it is disposed of.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether there is a report accompanying the bill, giving any estimates of the amount of revenue which will probably be derived under the sections proposed to be amended?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no report accompanying the bill. The Senator is aware of the fact that the committee have been assiduously at work upon the bill itself and only completed it to-day. I shall endeavor on Monday to present briefly a statement of the different matters contained in the bill. I will say to the Senator that I think it is exceedingly difficult to make an accurate estimate of the revenue that will probably be realized from the bill if it shall become a law; but I will do the best I can with the opportunities at my command to make some estimate of the probable amount of revenue that will be derived from it.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand there have been some hearings had, and that some very valuable statements have been made, which I think ought to be in the possession of every Senator when we come to consider the measure. Do I understand that we are not to have a public print of such statements and data as were furnished the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. There were no hearings, except the committee heard the Secretary of the Treasury, the report of which hearing is already in print, and the committee also heard the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as to the probable war expenditures during the next fiscal year. I shall have printed and present on Monday those statements.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. TURPIE. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Iowa whether he has any intimation to make with reference to the sessions of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. I stated that it is the purpose of the committee to take up the bill for consideration on Monday next.

Mr. TURPIE. I understand that; but I wish to ask the honorable Senator whether he has any intimation to make respecting the sessions of the Senate between now and Monday?

Mr. MILLS. I hope we shall adjourn over.

Mr. ALLISON. So far as the committee is concerned, I should be very glad for the Senate to adjourn from to-day until Monday; but I do not wish to make that suggestion at this moment, because it may be that other Senators have measures which they desire to have considered. I should hope that the Senate would adjourn to-day to meet on Monday next; but I shall not make that motion at this moment unless it meets with universal approval.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to suggest that the census bill is ready for consideration, and there was an understanding that it should be taken up immediately after the taking of the vote on the pending bill. So I hope the Senate will remain in session to-morrow for the consideration of that measure.

Mr. ALLISON. I will only say, Mr. President, that I think it is important, in order that the consideration of the revenue bill may be facilitated, that Senators occupy as much time as they can between now and Monday in studying the intricacies and complications of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I will suggest to the Senator from Iowa that there is no doubt that the consideration of the bill and the disposition of it would be very much facilitated by the Senate not undertaking to sit to-morrow and the following day. It is a large bill and an important one, and one to the study of which all Senators should give as much time as possible before its consideration by the Senate. It will be easier to do that by not undertaking to keep the Senate in session for the next two days, in my judgment.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that under the circumstances we had better adjourn over.

Mr. ALLISON. I will, then, move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa, that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ARBITRATION BETWEEN RAILROAD COMPANIES AND EMPLOYEES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3662) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees.

Mr. RAWLINS. The bill which is before the Senate for its consideration is to be decided upon the responsibility of the Senate. It is not a question as to whether outside organizations approve this measure or otherwise, provided that in its provisions it is not commendable to the judgment and conscience of the Senate itself.

Mr. President, an arbitration which is not voluntary is an absurdity, founded upon a contract called articles of submission, which universally requires the consent of the parties whose rights may be affected by it. Consent to the terms of the contract with all its implications is of the essence of it. This scheme of arbitration seems to me to violate certain fundamental, legal, and constitutional principles.

In the first place, it is provided that the employer—that is, the railroad company—shall select one of these arbitrators. Next, it is provided that the other shall be named—not by the employee whose wages may be affected, whose hours of labor may be involved, or which may affect the condition of the employment, which are the subjects of arbitration under this bill; but the other arbitrator is to be selected by the labor organization to which the employees directly interested belong. Next, it is provided that the articles of submission to arbitration shall be in writing and shall be signed by the employer—that is, by the railroad company—and then by the labor organization representing the employees whose interests and rights are affected. In other words, the employees, the individuals whose wages are to be affected by the decision of the arbitrators, whose times of employment may be changed to their injury, are not consulted in the terms of the submission or in the selection of the arbitrators by whom the award is to be made.

I take it that it can not be controverted that no employee of a railroad company can be bound by articles of submission embodying the terms or stipulations under which the arbitrament is to be had unless he signs in person or by his agent thereunto duly authorized.

What is a labor organization? It possibly may be a corporation, but usually it is a voluntary association, entered into by the individuals who may compose it, with certain defined objects and purposes. They may be charitable purposes. Their acts are supposed to be beneficial to the interests of those who voluntarily join the association.

Mr. President, the persons who become members of voluntary associations have alone the right and power to define the purposes and objects and powers of such organizations. It is not competent by an act of legislation to change those objects or purposes, to add to or subtract from them. If persons unite in forming a labor organization to subserve certain ends and purposes which do not include the power to bind the individual members of the association by a submission to arbitration in respect of the wages or hours of labor of those employees, we can not by this bill confer any such authority to bind them.

It may be suggested that after the passage of this bill, which attempts to require the organization to select one of the arbitrators to sign articles of submission, the persons who continue to be members of a labor organization will impliedly consent to the exercise of this authority; but that position is not tenable, for the reason that the voluntary association having for its purpose lawful objects, Congress can not impose a condition and require them either to change the objects and purposes of their organizations so as to conform to that condition, or to withdraw from their organization. That is entirely beyond the province and power of legislation to do.

For example, a person may be engaged as an employee upon a railroad coming within the provisions of this act; he may be also associated with other persons in business as a copartner. It would be as competent for us to say that the copartnership could bind that individual member of it by a submission to arbitration, disposing of his liberty or disposing of his property without his consent, as to say that Congress can by this provision enable a voluntary organization for certain purposes, where this power has not been conferred, to bind him in respect of the rate of his wages or the time of his employment under a contract which he has personally entered into with some railroad company.

Therefore those provisions which, without consulting the employee of the railroad company, undertake to clothe the leaders of the labor organization—so called in this act—which has no recognition in law, to bind him where the employee has not authorized that organization to submit any question with respect to his wages to arbitration, are an attempt by legislation to deprive the employee of his liberty or his property without due process of law.

If my contention is right—and I do not think there is any dispute about it, or can be any—the employees to be affected under this bill do not select any of the arbitrators. The railroad selects one and some so-called labor organization or labor leader undertakes to select the other, without authority to do so of those whose interests are to be affected. In the same way it is proposed to bind these employees without their consent, or without any authorization from them, to the terms of a contract constituting the submission to arbitration. That, too, must be equally ineffectual.

Then it is proposed—and the object of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] is designed to correct that—to proceed one step further. We have passed now beyond the question of the consent of the employee whose wages are to be affected, and we are invited to go one step further. First, the labor organization, without the authority of the employees, selects one of the arbitrators and the railroad company the other. If these two, whose selection is not participated in by the employees thus directly to be affected by the proposed arbitration, are to get together, they can, without consulting the employees to be affected, select the third arbitrator to pass upon these rights of liberty and of property.

But if these two extraneously selected arbitrators, selected without the authority of those affected, fail to agree within five days, then another tribunal is selected by either of the parties to the transaction, or whose rights are to be affected by the proposed arbitration—another tribunal is to select the third arbitrator.

Now we have a board of arbitration composed of one person named by the railroad company, the employee another person not named by the opposite party to the contract, but by some person constituted, or attempted to be constituted, solely by an act of legislation, where there may be no actual authorization by the party concerned. Then the third is to be selected by those two, or, in default of such selection within five days, by a tribunal which we have created without any consultation with the parties concerned.

Mr. President, it is said that this is an arbitration. It does not bear any features of an arbitration. It is an attempt, by an act of legislation, to create a tribunal independent of the consent and will of the parties, by which tribunal the employees of the railroad are to have settled for them their rates of wages, their hours of labor, and their conditions of employment.

But that is not all. There is no provision in this bill by which any employee whose wages may be reduced by the award which may be made by this arbitration, selected without any authorization or consent of his, may be notified or given an opportunity to be heard before that tribunal or to be represented by an attorney by him authorized. The labor leaders of an organization, created for an entirely distinct purpose, are given authority, without his consent, to go and present his case, representing him, without any actual consent of his, before that board.

Now, the award is made. What next? Every employee, although utterly ignored up to this point in respect of his wages or his hours of labor or conditions of employment, is to be absolutely concluded by the judgment and determination of this tribunal, not selected by him, and before whom he has never had an opportunity to be heard; and there is given to him in this act no power to appeal to a higher tribunal for its correction. It is the baldest, it is the most vicious attempt, in my judgment, to deprive citizens of the United States of their rights, liberty, or property without due process of law, in contravention of every principle of justice as founded in our Constitution and our methods of procedure, that I think was ever attempted to be put through Congress.

You can not maintain the proposition for one moment that Congress could authorize any church organization, which is a voluntary association, to bind the person or property of the members of that organization by submitting to arbitration by the act of the authorities of such church. You can not infer the consent, the authorization, to such church leaders to submit a matter to arbitration because its members fail to withdraw from the voluntary association, or rescind themselves from the organization of which they have been members for certain purposes, which did not include that of being bound by arbitration. No more can Congress authorize a voluntary organization like a labor organization, the nature of which is not defined in this act, the power of which is not described, the extent of the authority of whose leaders is not named, which does not require that they shall be by their members expressly authorized to do the thing that they are directed by this act to do.

But, Mr. President, I pass from that to the parties who are not heard, who do not select the arbitrators, but who are to be bound by the award. I have always supposed it was a fundamental principle that jurisdiction of subjects-matter could not be conferred upon any court by the consent of the parties; and yet in this submission, which is provided for to be signed by the railroad companies and by the labor organization, certain things are required to be stipulated. The language is:

> The submission * * * shall state the questions to be decided, and shall contain appropriate provisions by which the respective parties shall stipulate, as follows:

Among other things which they are required to stipulate is the third subdivision:

> Third. That the respective parties to the award will each faithfully execute the same, and that the same may be specifically enforced in equity so far as the powers of a court of equity permit.

Then following these provisions are the amendments which have been appended to the section, which do not affect the question to which I now invite attention.

Does the court of equity get its jurisdiction by virtue of any express provision of this statute, any act of Congress? It is not so provided. It undertakes to exercise this authority. Does it exercise this authority over the subject-matter by virtue of this stipulation, supposed to embody the consent of the parties, but which in reality, as I have already pointed out, does not embody the consent of the parties to be affected by the award? If it undertakes to make the jurisdiction of the court depend upon the consent of the parties, it must be regarded as futile.

But what is this award which is to be specifically enforced by a court of equity? It must be whether the employees of a railroad company shall receive one rate of wages or another rate of wages; whether they shall work so many hours per day or for a longer term each day, or the conditions of employment may be specified in the award. The court of equity is specifically to enforce that order.

What does "specifically enforce" mean? It can mean but one thing, namely, that the employees, so far not having been consulted, shall continue to labor as provided in the award. They must continue to labor for the number of hours specified in the award. If it does not mean that, it does not mean anything. They must do this for the wages specified in the award. If it does not mean that, it does not mean anything. Why retain this clause if the award is not to be specifically enforced? Why not strike it out altogether?

But, Mr. President, I invite attention to another very important question especially, a question which it seems to me ought to concern those who have believed in such a construction of the Constitution as will retain in the States the exercise of that authority which was reserved to them upon the creation of our form of government. Take a case, say, in the State of Virginia, where a man is employed to work wholly within that State for a railroad company, a corporation organized in the State of Virginia, but whose line may extend beyond the limits of that State. The railroad in Virginia pays him so much a day. It is a Virginia contract, and it is to be performed in the State of Virginia. In that case the jurisdiction of the Federal court can not be claimed by virtue of the character of the parties. The only ground by reason of which the Federal court may justly or properly exercise authority in the case is that it is one arising under the Constitution or the laws or treaty made in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States.

It is difficult to conceive how the Federal court can get jurisdiction of that case by virtue of the character of the case or the controversy. It can only be claimed by reason of some act of Congress to regulate commerce among the States or with foreign countries. Congress in its regulation of commerce facilitates it; it may do it, so far as concerns the employment or the wages of the employees of the railway, by compelling service to facilitate the traffic.

So far as it relates to the employment of persons upon railroads to facilitate commerce, it might be claimed that Congress could compel the service by an individual against his will in order to facilitate the traffic, move it along from one State to another. That is not to be accomplished by this bill, because an amendment expressly provides that no person shall be compelled to serve against his will. Congress might possibly regulate commerce in respect to this matter by providing against the impeding of traffic. That goes back to that question whether or not, so far as the employee of the railroad is concerned, they shall prevent his impeding the transportation of freight by compelling him to render the service necessary for its transmission.

So far as his wages is concerned, it has nothing to do with interstate commerce. It is purely a matter of contract in the case which I have suggested as between the individual and the railroad company, both citizens of the same State. Yet it is clearly the object of this proposed statute to extend to cases of that kind.

Mr. President, I do not wish to censure the motives or the purpose of those who suggested or brought in this bill. There have arisen in the past great disturbances to traffic and great annoyance to the business interests of this country by reason of strikes upon railroads. In most instances those strikes have resulted from an attempt on the part of the railroad companies to reduce wages. In some instances they have resulted from the orders which have been given directly by the labor organizations or by the men who have been in charge of the labor organizations. It is said that we ought to vote for this bill because certain leaders in the labor organizations have brought it forward and proposed it. So far as the railroads are concerned, they can never be injuriously affected by the bill. The railroad company will never select an arbitrator, it will never sign articles of submission, unless it knows in advance that it will gain some advantage by so doing.

Whenever a railroad company desires to reduce the wages of its employees and resort to a method by which that can be accomplished by what will appear upon its face fair means, I would not doubt that the railroad company might be willing to submit the question in controversy to arbitration. It would do it upon conditions. The conditions would be these: That the railroad company would have some labor leader, who, under this bill, is empowered to dispose of the rights of all the members of the organization of which he, for the time being, may be a leader, consent to terms, or by making a selection of arbitrators who, in the end, would make the decision upon the question of wages which the railroad company desired.

If this condition did not exist, the railroad company would be satisfied, provided that the Interstate Commerce Commission were personally so constituted that it would make a selection which would be satisfactory to the railroad company. Thereupon the railroad company would be willing to submit the matter to arbitration; the award would be made approving the reduction in wages which the railroad company might desire, and then the railroad officials would come to these employees and say, "Here we have submitted this matter to arbitration, and they have decided by their award that certain rates of wages are reasonable and just. Now what ground for complaint have you?"

This is a beautiful scheme. The railroad company selects one arbitrator. Perhaps the labor organization, through the manipulation of the railroad company, selects the other arbitrator, and those two select a third, or a railroad commission made up in accordance with the pleasure or the wishes of the railroad companies of the country selects the third; and the terms of the submission are made up, ready-made, without any consultation with the men who are to be employed and whose wages are to be affected. That seems to be the scheme.

I can well understand how certain labor leaders would desire this put through. They, like every other person, will arrogate to themselves as much power as they can. They desire to extend their influence and power over the men who may compose those organizations, just as the railroad companies, so far as they think their interests will be advanced by it, desire to extend their influence and power over the organizations by means of the men who may be put in control of them. These labor leaders come here not in the interest of the men—the individuals whose rights are to be affected—but they come here asking Congress to vest in them the power to submit the rights of persons and the right of property of the membership of their organization to arbitration without their direction or authorization or consent. No wonder they come here and say this bill is satisfactory to them!

I do not make any criticism of those labor leaders. They are human, like other people, and seek to extend their influence and increase their power, and they perhaps have power under some circumstances, it may be, to submit the controversy by virtue of their organization to arbitration. I do not know whether it is true or not; I take it it is not true, because it is a power which is most extraordinary and unusual. The Supreme Court has decided that a business firm can not submit to arbitration the rights of the members of the firm. It so decided long since in a case reported in 1 Peters. This is the scheme.

For myself, I do not see how, consistently with the views I entertain upon these questions; and favoring as I do individual liberty and the principle that no man ought to be deprived of any right unless he consents to it and ought never to have any judgment affecting his right passed where he has no opportunity to be heard, and for the other reasons which I have mentioned, I shall be compelled to vote against the bill.

Mr. STEWART obtained the floor.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STEWART. I can not. I am going to speak only a moment.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to ask that a vote upon the pending bill be taken not later than 5 o'clock this evening.

Mr. STEWART. I will get through in a minute, if the Senator will let me alone. I do not yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada declines to yield.

Mr. KYLE. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the pending bill. I desire to say that I shall not oppose it and probably shall vote for it, but I anticipate very little benefit to the laborer from it or from any other legislation that can be had regulating the relations between the employers and the employees. The conflict between labor and capital is an irrepressible and terrible conflict, and it will continue to be so as long as prices are falling. There can be nothing to prevent it at all. With millions out of employment the struggle is going to be severe.

The employers are going to fight continually to cut down wages, because everything is coming down, and you will find it as it has been in New England during the last winter, factories cutting down wages to correspond with the lower level of prices. The laborers have got to continue to take lower and lower wages as prices fall, or else have no employment. There are a great many men out of employment to-day. A vast number of those who have employment are on short hours, and while prices are falling and enterprises are dead or stagnant this conflict is going to be very severe.

This is not the first time it has occurred. It has happened during all ages. Every time when there was a system of contraction and falling prices these conflicts have gone on. Labor organizations may resist them for a time, but if prices are continually falling labor has to go down with the cheap commodities. Cheap property produced by labor means cheap labor, and as you cheapen the average commodity by falling prices and contraction, labor will have to be cheaper. There is not now paid to labor in the United States in the aggregate one-half of what should be paid. There are millions out of employment. There are hundreds of thousands, if not millions, working on short hours, and it is continually getting harder and harder as you approach the gold standard.

You will not reach the gold standard in our time, because there are thirty-six hundred millions of silver, of full legal tender, doing duty as money. That must be replaced by gold. There are twenty-five hundred millions of paper out in the world, and one nation after another is induced to sell silver and buy gold. The panic of 1893 was brought about to furnish gold to a syndicate to convert Austrian bonds, twenty-four hundred million dollars' worth of silver bonds into twenty-eight hundred million dollars' worth of gold bonds; and a hundred millions of our gold was taken for that purpose. It cost us thousands of millions.

Japan was induced to adopt the gold standard and sell her silver. Silver went down under that 6 cents an ounce. They have stopped coining silver in England, and they are considering the proposition of procuring gold to put India on the gold basis. India has a thousand millions of silver. It will take the output of gold of the world available for coining for more than a decade, more than the next ten years, to find gold enough to supply India with gold to adopt the gold standard. They are discussing how much they must have. They certainly must have more than has been put into coin in the last decade. They are proposing to get rid of the silver in China and in all the world and to put those countries on the gold standard.

With one nation after another nation coming in and bidding for gold and dispensing with silver, prices must go down. While that process goes on you can have all the arbitration you please, but there will be conflicts between capital and labor, because with low prices capital can not profitably be employed while paying existing wages. They will cut down wages. It falls upon the laborer ultimately and will continue to fall upon him until you have some system of finance which will give you a supply of money on a parity with property.

Justice requires that they shall be kept at parity, that the volume of money shall increase proportionately with population and business, so that the debtor can pay in the money of the contract; so that he who invests in an enterprise can sell his products without 5 or 10 per cent loss per annum by falling prices; so that the merchant will not lose 5 or 10 per cent per annum on the goods on hand; so that the manufacturer will have some means of judging how much he can get for his property; so that his plant will not grow less and less in value every year. While that process is going on, you can talk about settling the conflict between capital and labor, but labor must continually be cut down. It must necessarily be cut down. Nothing will prevent it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Nevada permit an interruption?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am a learner in these matters.

Mr. STEWART. I think the Senator ought to learn a good deal from what I have seen. I do not think he has learned much yet.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am always willing to be instructed by the Senator from Nevada. He is always very kind. I understand the Senator to say that for a country to be on the gold standard it is necessary to eliminate the silver and paper money from circulation and that it must have only gold. The Senator spoke about Japan selling her silver, and about India having to get rid of her silver to become a gold country. Do I understand that all the currency must be gold to enable a country to be on the gold standard?

Mr. STEWART. No, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator was unfortunate in his statement if he does not hold to that view.

Mr. STEWART. No, sir; I was not unfortunate. I was entirely fortunate in saying what I did. The Senator was unfortunate in not being able to comprehend it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I listened very attentively.

Mr. STEWART. But that would not necessarily give him information until he has learned more on the subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I want.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator restate his proposition?

Mr. STEWART. Yes. Will the Senator keep quiet for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I say there is $3,600,000,000 of full legal-tender silver money which must be replaced by gold before you will probably reach the gold standard. There is nearly $600,000,000 of token silver. You do not have to get rid of that. I am only referring to the legal-tender money. There is $2,500,000,000 of uncovered paper. Probably you will not have to get rid of all of that, but some of it will have to be gotten rid of before you get to any kind of specie payment. You have to get rid of $2,500,000,000 of paper and $3,600,000,000 of full legal-tender silver money. You have to get four or five thousand millions of new gold to get on a solid gold basis and have the same amount of money you now have. They realize that. Japan reduced her silver to token and sold it or proposed to sell it.

Mr. Gage proposes to sell the silver in the Treasury here in order to get on a sound basis. He tells us that there is $500,000,000 of silver doing duty, and he proposes to retire the silver in order to reach the gold standard. His object is more thoroughly to commit the country to the gold basis. He recognizes that there is a good deal of legislation necessary in this country to get to the gold basis. He recognizes that we must retire the greenbacks and Treasury notes and sell the silver in the Treasury. To what effect? In order to reach the gold basis.

We have a long road to travel in this country to get to sound money—the gold basis. Our sound-money men in New York in their publications say that we must get rid of the silver and paper. They are flooding the country with documents to show the necessity for that. We will hear something next week about the matter of getting rid of the paper money, of the greenbacks. That has all got to be done before we get to the gold basis.

China and India will undoubtedly carry some token money, but it will require a large amount of gold, more than can be produced in a decade, to put India on the gold basis. Those who think they have traveled the whole length of this road have neglected to read the productions of the great Secretary of the Treasury. He has explained here what we have to do in this country. We have to get rid of five hundred millions of silver, or nearly five hundred millions in round numbers, and nearly a thousand millions of circulating medium to reach the gold standard.

He is laboring for this purpose, the more thoroughly to commit the country to the single gold standard. Russia has just started in. She has a long road to travel. Austria does not pay gold. There is no gold in circulation, although they converted her twenty-four hundred million dollars of silver bonds into twenty-eight hundred million dollars of gold bonds. Still she has irredeemable paper and silver which is at a discount and that does for her circulation. Italy is in the same fix. They are turning the screws on Italy, so as to starve her people to death. They have famine riots there now.

Mr. TILLMAN. They can not get any arbitration.

Mr. STEWART. They can not get any arbitration. They are turning the screws on them to get them down to the gold basis. When they get them down to the gold basis they must go without eating. India has a debt contracted on the paper basis and silver. Since she started with the gold basis, see where she is. We have not got there yet. Mr. Gage is going to bring us there. He says the business of the Republican party is to get the country to the gold basis. When we get there I think there will be some labor troubles in this country not quite anticipated by the Senator from New Hampshire.

But I did not rise to make a speech on the money question. I shall take occasion next week to give my views on that subject a little more at length. This evening I merely wanted to state to the labor people that I am willing they shall have this legislation or any other legislation they wish, but that I do not think it will do them any good. I hope it will.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. KYLE (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.). I wish to ask the Senate to agree that from this time on the debate shall proceed under the five-minute rule and that we will vote at 5 o'clock.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

Mr. KYLE. I hope Senators will consent to such an agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. We may vote before that hour.

Mr. KYLE. I understand that Senators wish to make only very short speeches.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I wish to address the Senate for a few minutes.

Mr. KYLE. I should like unanimous consent to the proposition, if I can get it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent is asked that the debate shall proceed under the five-minute rule until 5 o'clock and that the Senate shall agree to vote at 5 o'clock.

Mr. TURNER. I have been trying to get in a couple of amendments, and while I do not object to a vote at 5 o'clock, I wish to offer the amendments and explain their relevancy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Consent is not given.

Mr. CHANDLER. Amendments will be in order under such an agreement. I will say to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. TURNER. I desire to explain the relevancy of the amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. That might be done under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate by any extended observations upon the pending bill. It seems to me that its underlying principle is most wholesome, and I shall cheerfully give it my vote. We do well to give the sanction of Federal law to the principle of arbitration. We should, so far as lies within our proper sphere of action, encourage a spirit of concord and mutual respect between employer and employee, between the common carriers of interstate commerce and their employees. I do not belong to that school which endeavors to engender hate and discord where there is a mutuality of interest, and shall favor any measure which tends to establish a tribunal where the conflicting views of the employer and employee engaged in interstate transportation may be peacefully, honorably, and promptly determined.

The necessity for such a measure as the one before us has been repeatedly emphasized during the last few years by strikes and interruptions to interstate commerce, which have not only seriously affected carriers and their employees, but many communities and large sections of the country. Our commercial relations are so inextricably interwoven that strikes affect a wider circle than the immediate parties concerned, and any equitable, rational method which offers a solution of disputed questions without resort to force should be encouraged and adopted. The subject is a difficult one, and a solution which will do no violence to the interests of either party concerned, and which will be equitable and just to both, is not easy of attainment.

Who are the authors of this measure? It has been repeatedly stated upon the floor during the progress of this discussion that the leading labor organizations engaged in interstate commerce have formulated it and have come here and presented a respectful request to the Senate and the House of Representatives to enact their wish into law.

I have had from the leading labor organizations of my State earnest requests and appeals that this bill should become a law, and thus far I have heard no word of protest against it coming from any common carrier, State or interstate.

It will be observed from a casual examination of the measure that there is no abridgement of the existing rights of the employees or of the common carriers of interstate commerce. There is purely and simply an attempt here to create a tribunal to which the common carriers mentioned and their employees may appeal when they are divided and unable to agree and when strikes occur. It is of the utmost importance to the great interests of the country, the interests of the laborers, the interests of commerce, that there should be created some tribunal by which there may be a peaceful, a just, an honorable, settlement of the great questions of difference which arise from time to time.

Perfection is not claimed for the bill. There are doubtless some infirmities in it. It is, in the very nature of the case, largely experimental. But I undertake to say that the fundamental principle of the bill is sound and absolutely commendable.

Assume that the predictions of those who have criticised the measure shall be fulfilled, that it will not accomplish all that its authors and supporters hope and expect, who is injured? Who is harmed? Assume that the attempt to accomplish, by this legislation, the end desired is ineffective, no interest is prejudiced by the failure. We will have accomplished this much, sir, if nothing more: We shall have given Congressional sanction to the principle of arbitration, to the principle of peaceful and honorable settlement of differences among men. I am in favor of applying this principle where practicable to our domestic concerns, and also of applying it to international differences where those differences do not involve the national honor.

The measure is purely voluntary. The common carriers and their employees can avail themselves of its provisions or not, as they see fit. The option rests entirely with them. The initiatory proceedings can not be begun by compulsion; they can begin only by an agreement of the parties concerned.

If a controversy arises between the common carrier engaged in interstate commerce and its employees, interrupting or threatening to interrupt the business of the carrier, it is made the duty of the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor, upon the demand of either party, to attempt a peaceful settlement of it through their kindly offices.

If by such intercession the dispute is settled, well and good. If, peradventure, it is not, then it becomes the duty of the above-named officials to attempt to secure a settlement by arbitration under the provisions of the act. There is in this certainly nothing which is inconsistent with a proper regard for the rights and interests of both parties concerned.

The arbitration board can not be created except by the agreement of both parties to the controversy. The common carrier must select one arbitrator and the employees another. The duty devolves upon these two arbitrators to select the third. If they agree, the board so selected proceeds to the arbitration of the matter in dispute. If the contingency shall happen, however, whereby they are unable to select the third arbitrator within a limited, specified period, the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor of the United States are obliged to make the selection, and the three thus chosen constitute the tribunal of arbitration.

I shall not stop at this late hour to advert to the further provisions of the bill except the provision with respect to making effective the award of the arbitral board. The award becomes a judgment or the foundation of a judgment of a court of record, and must be observed by the parties to the arbitration.

Something has been said with respect to the impossibility of specifically enforcing the award. I think there is undue concern with regard to that feature of the question. There can be no doubt as to the competency of the court to enter a judgment upon the award. Nor can there be any doubt that it will be binding upon the parties affected by it.

But assume that some question exists as to the sufficiency of the decree, there still remains a power which will compel respect for the award, which will have the force of a writ of injunction and the potency of a writ of mandamus. The sense of honor of the parties to the arbitration and the force of public opinion are an assurance that the award of the arbitrators will be respected and obeyed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President, I do not desire to be further heard on the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment pending is the one offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I did not have the privilege of hearing the discussion on this bill in the committee, but in looking over its provisions it occurs to me that it would be exceedingly difficult to frame a measure that would meet the requirements and the difficulties between labor and capital better than the pending bill.

There are a number of objections urged against the bill, the principal one of which is that urged by the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. His contention is that by these arbitrators the individual laborer's rights would be imperiled and sacrificed. I think that that apprehension upon the part of the Senator from Utah is altogether groundless. This whole proceeding is a voluntary proceeding, and the question of conflict between the employer of labor and the employees themselves does not come within arbitration until the conflict has assumed such proportions as place the direction of it under the labor organizations.

Any individual conflict, any difference between individual employees and a railroad company or other employer of labor, does not and can not come within the provisions of the bill, for it is manifest and clear that whenever the difficulty or conflict attains a proportion as set out in the second section of the bill, the conflict on the part of the laborers is conducted and carried on by the labor organizations. I will read from the second section. It provides—

> That whenever a controversy concerning wages, hours of labor, or conditions of employment shall arise between a carrier subject to this act and the employees of such carrier, seriously interrupting or threatening to interrupt the business of said carrier, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, etc.

A controversy between an individual or individual laborers and the common carrier or employer of labor will not interrupt or threaten to interrupt seriously the business of a common carrier, and it is only when the conflicts assume proportions where they are taken hold of by the labor organizations that the arbitration is provided for. The whole matter is voluntary from commencement to finish. Whenever labor organizations take hold of a controversy between the employers and the employees, then provision is made for mediation.

That mediation failing, then the parties to the controversy, the labor organizations on the one hand and the employers of labor upon the other, each voluntarily select an arbitrator. If the arbitrators can not compose the differences between the parties, what then? If they can not compose the differences, and if they can not agree upon an umpire, whose award shall be final in the premises, provision is made for the selection of that umpire by the employers of labor on the one side and the employees on the other from an established commission already provided for in the act.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that this bill has exhausted ingenuity, that it has exhausted every device whereby the just thing and the impartial thing can be done in the matter of these controversies between labor and the employers of labor in settling their disputes. If there is any distrust of the umpire they need not submit in the first instance to arbitration; they can decline it; it is not a forced matter. Any laborer or organization of labor that submits the controversy with capital under the terms of this bill does so entirely upon a voluntary basis. The bill makes no provision for compulsory arbitration, but the bill does make provision for that very thing without which the bill would be utterly useless, for the umpire has to decide as between the arbitrators when they can not agree.

That is a common thing in law. When parties choose to submit their disputes to arbitration and the arbitrators can not agree, an umpire is provided for under certain jurisdiction. I know in my State it is so. The award of the umpire, being one of the arbitrators, is final; and when that award is filed in court, it is made the basis of a judgment, precisely as the bill provides.

The difficulty that I see in the bill is the difficulty of holding dissatisfied laborers to the findings of the award if they choose to violate it, because their action is wholly independent. You can not control them even by a judgment. Suppose you file the award, which is equivalent to a judgment, and the individual laborers do not choose to abide by it. Where is the remedy? Where is the recourse?

But this is a step in the right direction, in my opinion, to settle the controversy between labor and capital. And there will be controversies as long as capital employs labor. It must be so in the very nature of things. An intelligent organization of laborers designed for the laborers' benefit is the best safeguard that labor can have against the encroachment of capital. When these labor organizations on the one side and capital upon the other agree upon certain terms of adjustment either in the initial proceedings through the arbitrators chosen by either party or in the final proceedings through an umpire, it occurs to me that it is the best solution and the only solution that can be made of these very complicated questions between labor and capital.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], as he always does, injects into this discussion his theory of falling prices on account of a gold standard. It occurs to me that labor and capital have their disputes whether the medium of exchange in the standard of value is paper or copper or gold or silver. The disputes arise out of the very nature of things; and whatever the standard of value may be, whether it is silver or gold or any other metal money or no metal money, there ought to be some sort of tribunal that can settle amicably the differences between labor and capital.

I think this is a step in the right direction. As stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], it is an experimental step, but it is one that I believe will be fraught with good. Whenever the parties to these controversies get accustomed to settle them upon an amicable basis without a resort to strikes and compulsory methods, I believe that a good end will have been effected and a great step in advance will have been made, and labor and capital, under an intelligent settlement and an honest settlement of their differences between each other through the tribunal provided for in the bill, will arrive at a happier solution than by means of strikes, which in their very conception and end are necessarily compulsory and forcible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 18, after the word "arbitration," it is proposed to strike out the following:

> But, in the event of their failure to name such arbitrator within five days after their first meeting, the third arbitrator shall be named by the commissioners named in the preceding section.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MALLORY. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 8 of the bill in the following words:

> SEC. 8. That in every incorporation under the provisions of chapter 567 of the United States statutes of 1885 and 1886 it must be provided in the articles of incorporation and in the constitution, rules, and by-laws that a member shall cease to be such by participating in or by instigating force or violence against persons or property during strikes, lockouts, or boycotts, or by seeking to prevent others from working through violence, threats, or intimidations. Members of such incorporations shall not be personally liable for the acts, debts, or obligations of the corporations, nor shall such corporations be liable for the acts of members or others in violation of law; and such corporations may appear by designated representatives before the board created by this act, or in any suits or proceedings for or against such corporations or their members in any of the Federal courts.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I have studied this section with considerable care and I have not been able to understand what it is doing in this bill. The purpose of the section is undoubtedly a good one, but when we bear in mind the object of the bill set forth in the title—that is, "A bill concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees"—the question arises, what is there germane in that to the provision contained in section 8?

Section 8 provides a method for the organization of national trades unions. In 1886 Congress passed an act providing for the organization of national trades unions, setting forth the purposes for which such trades unions should be organized and what had to be done by those seeking to organize them in order to effect an incorporation.

This section 8 proposes to amend that law, which of itself is sufficient undoubtedly for the purpose for which it was designed, by requiring that—

> In the articles of incorporation and in the constitution, rules, and by-laws, that a member shall cease to be such by participating in or by instigating force or violence against persons or property during strikes, lockouts, or boycotts, or by seeking to prevent others from working through violence, threats, or intimidations.

I do not wish to be understood, Mr. President, as being antagonistic to the end which is sought to be reached by section 8, which is, as I understand it, to prevent the use of force or violence or threats or intimidation in cases of strikes, by organized labor, for the purpose of preventing the members thereof from doing what the organizations are opposed to; but it seems to me that this is not a proper subject for legislation to be brought in on a bill of this kind. Certainly it is not logical or consistent, and it is not in keeping with the old methods of legislation which have prevailed in Congress since the beginning of this country.

There is nothing at all germane to the main subject of this bill which is found in section 8. I do not wish to be understood, as I have said, as opposing such legislation; but it should come up in a legitimate way, and should not be embodied and hidden away in a measure of this kind, which has for its object a very different thing.

I think, if Senators will give their attention to that section, they will see that it is entirely unnecessary for the purpose of carrying out the beneficent purposes of this bill, and that it properly has not place in this legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 8, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. GORMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MURPHY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired, as heretofore announced, with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. In his absence from the Chamber, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GEAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], which I will transfer to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to state that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has been called away from the city by the dangerous illness of his father.

Mr. NELSON. With the permission of the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], I transfer my pair to his colleague [Mr. ELKINS], so that he will stand paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], with whom I have a general pair. I vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE. I inquire if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, as I am paired with that Senator, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. TURNER. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that we exchange our pairs, and that both of us vote for the purpose of making a quorum.

Mr. PENROSE. Very well.

Mr. TURNER. I vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE. I vote "nay."

Mr. BACON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and as he is not present I withhold my vote.

Mr. LINDSAY (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. As he seems not to have voted, unless my vote is necessary to make a quorum, I desire to withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator withdraws his vote.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Bate,	Heitfeld,	Pasco,	Turner.
Berry,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Clay,	Money,	Tillman,

NAYS—37.

Allen,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Sewell,
Burrows,	Gorman,	Nelson,	Spooner,
Caffery,	Hale,	Penrose,	Stewart,
Carter,	Hanna,	Perkins,	Teller,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Pettigrew,	Thurston,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Pettus,	Turley,
Deboe,	Kyle,	Platt, Conn.	Wilson.
Fairbanks,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Faulkner,	McEnery,	Quay,
Frye,	Mason,	Roach,

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Smith,
Allison,	Foraker,	Mallory,	Turpie,
Bacon,	Gear,	Mantle,	Vest,
Baker,	Gray,	Martin,	Warren,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Wellington,
Cannon,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Wetmore,
Chilton,	Jones, Ark.	Morrill,	White,
Clark,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Wolcott.
Cockrell,	Kenney,	Platt, N. Y.
Daniel,	Lindsay,	Proctor,
Davis,	McBride,	Shoup,

So the amendment of Mr. MALLORY was rejected.

Mr. TURNER. I move to strike out the fourth paragraph of section 8 as it now stands.

This is a paragraph which provides that after the awards have been made it shall be unlawful for employees dissatisfied with the award to quit the service of their employers within three months, unless they shall give thirty days' notice of their intention beforehand, and also providing that it shall be unlawful for the railroad companies to dispense with the services of their employees because of dissatisfaction with the award until they shall have given a like notice.

This provision as reprinted will be entirely ineffectual. It is a blot on the bill; it is mere brutum fulmen which can not be enforced and ought not to be in the bill, because it declares a vicious principle—that men may be held to service without their consent for three months, or, in case they give notice, for thirty days.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] proposed an amendment on yesterday, which was adopted this morning, doing away with this defect in one portion of the bill. My amendment is really supplemental to that of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The provision ought to be stricken out for the further reason that it is an invitation both to the employees and the railroad companies to disregard the award by giving thirty days' notice, while other provisions of the bill require that the award shall remain in force for one year—a provision which I consider a very valuable one if this legislation is to prove effective at all—but I do not think we ought to retain in the bill a suggestion to them that they may at the end of thirty days disregard the provisions of the award. If the award is carried into force at all, as has been suggested on all hands here, it will be by virtue of the public opinion forcing them to accept the award if it be just and fair. That being the case, they ought not be in a position to decline to abide by the award by giving thirty days' notice.

I hope the amendment I propose will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the fourth paragraph of section 8, beginning in line 24, on page 5, as follows:

> Fourth. That employees dissatisfied with the award shall not by reason of such dissatisfaction quit the service of the employer before the expiration of three months from and after the making of such award without giving thirty days' notice in writing of their intention so to quit. Nor shall the employer dissatisfied with such award dismiss any employee or employees on account of such dissatisfaction before the expiration of three months from and after the making of such award without giving thirty days' notice in writing of his intention so to discharge.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. Not knowing how he would vote on this amendment, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I will again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], but I will transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LINDSAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], and, unless it be necessary to make a quorum, I prefer to withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I noticed that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] voted, I suppose, under the understanding for the transfer of pairs which we made upon the last vote. If so, I shall vote; but otherwise I will withhold my vote. I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he voted under the agreement we had to transfer our pairs?

Mr. PENROSE. That was my understanding and that was the reason I voted when my name was called.

Mr. TURNER. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH]. That Senator not being present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BACON. I wish to announce that I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], who is not present. Therefore I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Allen,	Clay,	Pasco,	Tillman,
Bate,	Heitfeld,	Pettigrew,	Turner.
Berry,	Money,	Rawlins,

NAYS—34.

Burrows,	Hanna,	Morgan,	Sewell,

Deboe,	Lodge,	Pettus,	Thurston,
Faulkner,	McBride,	Platt, Conn.	Turley,
Frye,	McEnery,	Pritchard,	Wilson.
Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Quay,
Gorman,	Mason,	Roach,

NOT VOTING—43.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Kenney,	Proctor,
Allison,	Elkins,	Lindsay,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Fairbanks,	McMillan,	Smith,
Baker,	Foraker,	Mallory,	Turpie,
Butler,	Gear,	Mantle,	Vest,

Cockrell,	Harris,	Morrill,	White,
Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Murphy,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Jones, Nev.	Platt, N. Y.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TURNER. I have one other amendment to offer which will explain itself, and which I think will commend itself to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 8 it is proposed to add:

> That as to individual employees not belonging to a labor organization or organizations, which shall enter into the arbitration the said arbitration and the award made therein shall not be binding unless said individual employees shall assent in writing to become parties to said arbitration.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURLEY. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, on page 5, line 13, after the word "thereto," it is proposed to insert "certified under the hands of the arbitrators, and which shall have the force and effect of a bill of exceptions."

Mr. KYLE. The committee will accept that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. KYLE. I now move to take up the House bill on the same subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota moves to take up the House bill on the same subject, the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4372) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KYLE. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and substitute the Senate bill as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and substitute for it the Senate bill as amended, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert the following:

That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers and their officers, agents, and employees, except masters of vessels and seamen, as defined in section 4612, Revised Statutes of the United States, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, for a continuous carriage or shipment, from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States.

The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

The term "employees" as used in this act shall include all persons actually engaged in any capacity in train operation or train service of any description, and notwithstanding that the cars upon or in which they are employed may be held and operated by the carrier under lease or other contract: Provided, however, That this act shall not be held to apply to employees of street railroads and shall apply only to employees engaged in railroad train service. In every such case the carrier shall be responsible for the acts and defaults of such employees in the same manner and to the same extent as if said cars were owned by it, and said employees directly employed by it, and any provisions to the contrary of any such lease or other contract shall be binding only as between the parties thereto and shall not affect the obligations of said carrier either to the public or to the private parties concerned.

SEC. 2. That whenever a controversy concerning wages, hours of labor, or conditions of employment shall arise between a carrier subject to this act and the employees of such carrier, seriously interrupting or threatening to interrupt the business of said carrier, the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor shall, upon the request of either party to the controversy, with all practicable expedition, put themselves in communication with the parties to such controversy, and shall use their best efforts, by mediation and conciliation, to amicably settle the same; and if such efforts shall be unsuccessful, shall at once endeavor to bring about an arbitration of said controversy in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That whenever a controversy shall arise between a carrier subject to this act and the employees of such carrier which can not be settled by mediation and conciliation in the manner provided in the preceding section, said controversy may be submitted to the arbitration of a board of three persons, who shall be chosen in the manner following: One shall be named by the carrier or employer directly interested; the other shall be named by the labor organization to which the employees directly interested belong, or, if they belong to more than one, by that one of them which specially represents employees of the same grade and class and engaged in services of the same nature as said employees so directly interested: Provided, however, That when a controversy involves and affects the interests of two or more classes and grades of employees belonging to different labor organizations, such arbitrator shall be agreed upon and designated by the concurrent action of all such labor organizations; and in all cases where the majority of such employees are not members of any labor organization said employees may by a majority vote select a committee of their own number, which committee shall have the right to select the arbitrator on behalf of their employees.

The two thus chosen shall select the third commissioner of arbitration; but, in the event of their failure to name such arbitrator within five days after their first meeting, the third arbitrator shall be named by the commissioners named in the preceding section. A majority of said arbitrators shall be competent to make a valid and binding award under the provisions hereof. The submission shall be in writing, shall be signed by the employer and by the labor organization representing the employees, shall specify the time and place of meeting of said board of arbitration, shall state the questions to be decided, and shall contain appropriate provisions by which the respective parties shall stipulate, as follows:

First. That the board of arbitration shall commence their hearings within ten days from the date of the appointment of the third arbitrator, and shall find and file their award, as provided in this section, within thirty days from the date of the appointment of the third arbitrator; and that pending the arbitration the status existing immediately prior to the dispute shall not be changed: Provided, That no employee shall be compelled to render personal service without his consent.

Second. That the award and the papers and proceedings, including the testimony relating thereto, certify under the hands of the arbitrators, and which shall have the force and effect of a bill of exceptions, shall be first in the clerk's office of the circuit court of the United States for the district wherein the controversy arises or the arbitration is entered into, and shall be final and conclusive upon both parties, unless set aside for error of law apparent on the record.

Third. That the respective parties to the award will each faithfully execute the same, and that the same may be specifically enforced in equity so far as the powers of a court of equity permit: Provided, That no injunction or other legal process shall be issued which shall compel the performance by any laborer against his will of a contract for personal labor or service.

Fourth. That employees dissatisfied with the award shall not by reason of such dissatisfaction quit the service of the employer before the expiration of three months from and after the making of such award without giving thirty days' notice in writing of their intention so to quit. Nor shall the employer dissatisfied with such award dismiss any employee or employees on account of such dissatisfaction before the expiration of three months from and after the making of such award without giving thirty days' notice in writing of his intention so to discharge.

Fifth. That said award shall continue in force as between the parties thereto for the period of one year after the same shall go into practical operation, and no new arbitration upon the same subject between the same employer and the same class of employees shall be had until the expiration of said one year if the award is not set aside as provided in section 4. That as to individual employees not belonging to the labor organization or organizations which shall enter into the arbitration, the said arbitration and the award made therein shall not be binding unless the said individual employees shall give assent in writing to become parties to said arbitration.

SEC. 4. That the award being filed in the clerk's office of a circuit court of the United States, as hereinbefore provided, shall go into practical operation, and judgment shall be entered thereon accordingly at the expiration of ten days from such filing, unless within such ten days either party shall file exceptions thereto for matter of law apparent upon the record, in which case said award shall go into practical operation and judgment be entered accordingly when such exceptions shall have been finally disposed of either by said circuit court or on appeal therefrom.

At the expiration of ten days from the decision of the circuit court upon exceptions taken to said award, as aforesaid, judgment shall be entered in accordance with said decision unless during said ten days either party shall appeal therefrom to the circuit court of appeals. In such case only such portion of the record shall be transmitted to the appellate court as is necessary to the proper understanding and consideration of the questions of law presented by said exceptions and to be decided.

The determination of said circuit court of appeals upon said questions shall be final, and being certified by the clerk thereof to said circuit court, judgment pursuant thereto shall thereupon be entered by said circuit court.

If exceptions to an award are finally sustained, judgment shall be entered setting aside the award. But in such case the parties may agree upon a judgment to be entered disposing of the subject-matter of the controversy, which judgment when entered shall have the same force and effect as judgment entered upon an award.

SEC. 5. That for the purposes of this act the arbitrators herein provided for, or either of them, shall have power to administer oaths and affirmations, sign subpœnas, require the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents material to a just determination of the matters under investigation as may be ordered by the court; and may invoke the aid of the United States courts to compel witnesses to attend and testify and to produce such books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents to the same extent and under the same conditions and penalties as is provided for in the act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, and the amendments thereto.

SEC. 6. That every agreement of arbitration under this act shall be acknowledged by the parties before a notary public or clerk of a district or circuit court of the United States, and when so acknowledged a copy of the same shall be transmitted to the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who shall file the same in the office of said commission.

Any agreement of arbitration which shall be entered into conforming to this act, except that it shall be executed by employees individually instead of by a labor organization as their representative, shall, when duly acknowledged as herein provided, be transmitted to the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who shall cause a notice in writing to be served upon the arbitrators, fixing a time and place for a meeting of said board, which shall be within fifteen days from the execution of said agreement of arbitration: Provided, however, That the said Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall decline to call a meeting of arbitrators under such agreement unless it be shown to his satisfaction that the employees signing the submission represent or include a majority of all employees in the service of the same employer and of the same grade and class, and that an award pursuant to said submission can justly be regarded as binding upon all such employees.

SEC. 7. That during the pendency of arbitration under this act it shall not be lawful for the employer, party to such arbitration, to discharge the employees, parties thereto, except for inefficiency, violation of law, or neglect of duty; nor for the organization representing such employees to order, nor for the employees to unite in, aid, or abet, strikes against said employer; nor, during a period of three months after an award under such an arbitration, for such employer to discharge any such employees, except for the causes aforesaid, without giving thirty days' written notice of an intent so to discharge; nor for any such employees, during a like period, to quit the service of said employer without just cause, without giving to said employer thirty days' written notice of an intent so to do; nor for such organization representing such employees to order, counsel, or advise otherwise. Any violation of this section shall subject the offending party to liability for damages: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any employer, party to such arbitration, from reducing the number of its or his employees whenever in its or his judgment business necessities require such reduction.

SEC. 8. That in every incorporation under the provisions of chapter 567 of the United States Statutes of 1885 and 1886 it must be provided in the articles of incorporation and in the constitution, rules, and by-laws that a member shall cease to be such by participating in or by instigating force or violence against persons or property during strikes, lockouts, or boycotts, or by seeking to prevent others from working through violence, threats, or intimidations. Members of such incorporations shall not be personally liable for the acts, debts, or obligations of the corporations, nor shall such corporations be liable for the acts of members or others in violation of law; and such corporations may appear by designated representatives before the board created by this act, or in any suits or proceedings for or against such corporations or their members in any of the Federal courts.

SEC. 9. That whenever receivers appointed by Federal courts are in the possession and control of railroads, the employees upon such railroads shall have the right to be heard in such courts upon all questions affecting the terms and conditions of their employment, through the officers and representatives of their associations, whether incorporated or unincorporated, and no reduction of wages shall be made by such receivers without the authority of the court therefor upon notice to such employees, said notice to be not less than twenty days before the hearing upon the receivers' petition or application, and to be posted upon all customary bulletin boards along or upon the railway operated by such receiver or receivers.

SEC. 10. That any employer subject to the provisions of this act and any officer, agent, or receiver of such employer who shall require any employee, or any person seeking employment, as a condition of such employment, to enter into an agreement, either written or verbal, not to become or remain a member of any labor corporation, association, or organization; or shall threaten any employee with loss of employment, or shall unjustly discriminate against any employee because of his membership in such a labor corporation, association, or organization; or who shall require any employee or any person seeking employment, as a condition of such employment, to enter into a contract whereby such employee or applicant for employment shall agree to contribute to any fund for charitable, social, or beneficial purposes; to release such employer from legal liability for any personal injury by reason of any benefit received from such fund beyond the proportion of the benefit arising from the employer's contribution to such fund; or who shall, after having discharged an employee, attempt or conspire to prevent such employee from obtaining employment, or who shall, after the quitting of an employee, attempt or conspire to prevent such employee from obtaining employment, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district in which such offense was committed, shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $1,000.

SEC. 11. That each member of said board of arbitration shall receive a compensation of $10 per day for the time he is actually employed, and his traveling and other necessary expenses; and a sum of money sufficient to pay the same, together with the traveling and other necessary and proper expenses of any conciliation or arbitration had hereunder, not to exceed $10,000 in any one year, to be approved by the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, is hereby appropriated for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1898, and June 30, 1899, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 12. That the act to create boards of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate or Territorial transportation of property or persons and their employees, approved October 1, 1888, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ALLEN. Let us have a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the bill. ["Oh, no!"] There has been so much discussion pro and con upon this bill that I hope we may all have an opportunity to put ourselves on record in regard to it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). Under the arrangement made with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], my colleague will stand paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. Under that arrangement I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I again announce that I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], which pair I transfer to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa, as he is paired with the Senator from New Jersey and I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], that we transfer our pairs, so that both of us may vote.

Mr. GEAR. That is agreeable to me, and I vote "yea."

Mr. LINDSAY (when his name was called). I understand that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], if present, would vote "yea" upon this question. I therefore take the liberty of having my vote recorded. I vote "yea."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MURPHY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. I am informed that he would vote "yea" if present. So I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. Since announcing my pair I have been informed that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] would vote for the bill if he were present, and I therefore take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is necessarily detained from the Chamber, and is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR. My colleague [Mr. ALLISON] is detained from the Senate necessarily. I announce his pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is absent, and that if he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 3; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. KYLE. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. KYLE, Mr. GEAR, and Mr. LINDSAY were appointed.

Mr. KYLE. I move that the bill (S. 3662) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF TO THE INHABITANTS OF CUBA.

Mr. HAWLEY. I feel it my duty to present a conference report which, I think, it will not take us long to consider.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4518) to provide assistance to the inhabitants of Cuba and arms, munitions, and military stores to the insurgent forces, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows, viz: After the word "effective," in the last line of the amendment to the text, insert the word "fighting;" and after the word "war," in the same line, add the words "against Spain;" so that the section as amended will read:

"SEC. 2. That the President and general officers commanding troops in Cuba are hereby authorized to furnish to the Cuban people such arms, ammunition, equipments, and military stores and supplies as they may require in order to increase their effective fighting force in the existing war against Spain."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House amending the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

J. R. HAWLEY,
THOMAS H. CARTER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

B. F. MARSH,
M. GRIFFIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like a brief explanation from the Senator from Connecticut showing what the Senate has agreed to that it did not concede originally.

Mr. HAWLEY. It has agreed to the amendment to the title, and it has put in the word "fighting" and the words "against Spain." I have not the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. It was read.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was read.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to have the whole bill read. It is a short bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is a short bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the whole bill may be read as it will stand when amended.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will first give a word of explanation. The first section applies to the supply of provisions, in the discretion of the President or generals commanding our forces in the Island of Cuba, to the suffering people there who otherwise might perish. The second section applies to judiciously granting arms and munitions of war to the people, that they may increase their effective fighting force against Spain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read as it will read when amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill to provide assistance to the inhabitants of Cuba, and arms, munitions, and military stores to the people of the Island of Cuba, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That while serving in Cuba during the existing war, officers of the Army of the United States exercising separate commands may, by special order, cause subsistence, medical, and quartermaster's supplies to be issued to, and other aid rendered to, inhabitants of the Island of Cuba who are destitute and in imminent danger of perishing unless they receive the same.

SEC. 2. That the President and general officers commanding troops in Cuba are hereby authorized to furnish to the Cuban people such arms, ammunition, equipments, and military stores and supplies as they may require in order to increase their effective fighting force in the existing war against Spain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 16, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 12, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that in the Journal the word "identically" is used——

Mr. DINGLEY. The word "identically" is used instead of the word "substantially."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the correction has been made. Without objection the Journal will stand approved.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. BENNETT. On yesterday an important telegram called me away from the House before the vote was taken on the resolution providing for the election of Senators by the people. If I had been present, I would have voted "aye," and to make the law mandatory in all the States. I am informed that Mr. BENNETT would have voted the same way.

SUPERVISING INSPECTORS OF STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Treasury Department, Steamboat-Inspection Service, 300 copies each of the proceedings of the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels for the years 1897 and 1898.

The SPEAKER. This is not privileged.

Mr. PERKINS. No. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE PORT OF SABINE PASS.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for information concerning the port of Sabine Pass, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish Congress as soon as possible all information and copies of such reports as he may have relative to any enterprise or construction, in the way of a ship canal or otherwise, known to him to be in process of completion in or about the harbor of Sabine Pass, and as to whether any plans or estimates have been submitted to and approved by him or the Department of Engineers for any such enterprise or construction; and whether, in the opinion of the United States Engineer Department, there is any possibility of any such enterprise or construction obstructing or lessening the depth of the harbor of Sabine Pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill No. 4073, known as the industrial commission bill.

The bill (H. R. 4073) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital was read, with the amendment reported by the Committee on Labor.

Mr. GARDNER. I wish to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. This is the same bill, I believe, that passed the House in the last Congress—I think unanimously.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Consent has not yet been given, I understand, for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That question has not yet been submitted.

Mr. GARDNER. In reply to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], I will say that this is the bill which passed both the Senate and the House at the last session.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that it passed the House unanimously.

Mr. GARDNER. That is a fact. I ask that the amendment which I propose to offer to the amendment of the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment of the committee by inserting, after the word "pay," in line 10, page 3, the words "unless he shall be reelected;" so as to read: "but shall serve until the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, drawing pay, unless he shall be reelected, from the time his term as Senator or Representative expires."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why should not traveling expenses be allowed to members of Congress who may serve upon this commission as well as to the commissioners appointed by the President?

Mr. GARDNER. I do not quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I observe that at the top of page 3 it is provided that—

The salary of each member of this commission appointed by the President shall be $3,600 per annum and actual traveling expenses.

On the other hand, I understand that members of Congress who may be appointed upon this commission by the Vice-President and the Speaker will get no allowance for expenses.

Mr. GARDNER. That point has never been raised. It has been presumed that under section 4 all members of the commission will receive reimbursement for their expenses.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If it is proposed that Congressmen serving on the commission shall, like the other commissioners, have their expenses allowed, the gentleman had better make an amendment to that effect.

Mr. GARDNER. If there is any doubt about that point, the gentleman can submit an amendment to cover it, and the committee will be glad to assent to it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not propose to amend the bill, but suggest to the gentleman that he will hazard very much his request for unanimous consent if such an amendment be not made.

Mr. GARDNER. It seems to me that the point made by the gentleman is not good.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Perhaps the bill had better come up under the rule, at any rate.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will not object.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am not inclined to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet put the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, it has always been supposed, when the bill was before the House and the Senate heretofore, that the item to which the gentleman refers was covered by the term "necessary expenses."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But the gentleman must see now that it is not.

Mr. GARDNER. The form of language which is used in the bill in reference to the allowance of expenses of members of Congress was originally embraced in an amendment of the Senate. To meet the difficulty suggested, I will, if unanimous consent be granted, move an amendment to insert, after the word "same," in line 6, page 2, the words "including traveling expenses." Those words will free the matter from all doubt.

Mr. SIMPSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman move an amendment to the bill before consent has been given to consider it?

Mr. GARDNER. I am giving notice of an amendment which I will offer if consent be given.

Mr. SIMPSON. I should like to ask a question. This bill proposes that the power to appoint these labor commissioners shall be lodged in the President, the Vice-President, and the Speaker of the House. Can a commission thus constituted be fairly called "a nonpartisan commission?" Does not the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] think that an important commission like this, charged with the consideration of the interests of labor, ought to be nonpartisan, at least as far as that result can be secured? And how can we have a nonpartisan commission if the members are to be appointed entirely by gentlemen who all belong to one political party?

Mr. GARDNER. The provisions of this bill are the same as were agreed to by both Houses in the last Congress, the bill having passed this House twice. Under these circumstances the committee thought it could do nothing more safe and satisfactory than to present the bill again in the form in which it had been twice passed without objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. OSBORNE. I object.

ASSISTANCE TO INHABITANTS OF CUBA.

Mr. MARSH. I move to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 4518. This bill, having passed the Senate, came to the House, was amended here, went back to the Senate, and the Senate disagreed to the House amendment. I now move to take the bill from the Speaker's table, in order that the House may insist on its amendment and agree to the conference which has been asked by the Senate.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman state what the bill is?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill (S. 4518) to provide assistance to the inhabitants of Cuba, and arms, munitions, and military stores to the insurgents, and for other purposes, was read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the sections of the bill as proposed to be amended reported, so that we may understand how it will stand.

Mr. MARSH. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the House has amended the Senate bill. The Senate disagreed to the House amendment and asked for a conference.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was seeking information to ascertain what the amendment was.

Mr. MARSH. I move simply that we insist on our amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have no objection to that.

The motion of Mr. MARSH was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MARSH, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. COX as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

VOLUNTEER SIGNAL CORPS.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent to take from the table the bill (S. 4567) to organize a volunteer signal corps and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to organize a volunteer signal corps, for service during the existing war, which corps shall receive the same pay and allowances as are authorized by law for the Signal Corps of the Army.

SEC. 2. The volunteer signal corps shall consist of 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 1 major as disbursing officer, and such other officers and men as may be required, not exceeding 1 major for each army corps, and 2 captains, 2 first lieutenants, 2 second lieutenants, 5 first-class sergeants, 10 sergeants, 10 corporals, and 30 first-class privates to each organized division of troops: Provided, That two-thirds of all officers below the rank of major and a like proportion of the enlisted men shall be skilled electricians or telegraph operators.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of this matter what necessity exists for the passage of the bill at this time?

Mr. MARSH. I will answer the gentleman from Texas by having read communications from the Department, which explain, better than I can myself, the necessity for prompt action upon this measure. I ask the Clerk to read the letters I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SIGNAL OFFICE, Washington, May 11, 1898.

MY DEAR MR. MARSH: The extreme pressure of public business prevents me from calling in person to urge prompt action on the volunteer signal corps bill, which passed yesterday. I send as my representative, Lieutenant-Colonel Dunwoody, my senior assistant, who will explain any doubtful points.

I have only seven officers, and can absolutely do nothing for the Volunteer Army until this bill passes. A San Francisco signal corps is ready to accompany the Manila expedition as soon as it can be enlisted. I need officers for censors in the cable offices at Key West and New York City and such other offices as from time to time must be occupied. Electrical experts are needed to assist my own officers in laying projected cables along the Cuban coast and in operating and constructing field telegraph land lines in Cuba. Each corps now assembling must have telephonic service for its interior economy and administration.

The engineering wants of the Volunteer Army have been met by the organizing of a brigade, while I ask for only a few hundred men to do the telegraphing, signaling, and other work essential for the management of any large army, whether in the camp or in the field.

This legislation has no personal advantage to me and only entails additional work, but I know professionally that an army unprovided with means of speedy intercommunication is at a fearful disadvantage in its operations. As a practical man, you realize with me that our Army should have the same advantages in transmitting orders and receiving information as is possessed by every town of 10,000 inhabitants in the United States.

Asking the speedy passage of the bill in its present shape,

I am, yours truly,

A. W. GREELY,
Chief Signal Officer.

Hon. BENJAMIN F. MARSH,
Military Committee, House of Representatives.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 10, 1898.

SIR: Through an unfortunate omission section 10 of act of April 22, 1898, failed to provide for signal officers on the volunteer staff, where every other corps of the Army is represented. To remedy this omission, I recommend that legislation be had giving the Chief Signal Officer on the staff of the commanding general of an army corps the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Very respectfully,

R. A. ALGER, Secretary of War.

Hon. J. R. HAWLEY,
Chairman Senate Military Committee.

Mr. MARSH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say that this bill has not been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House; but I have conferred with a number of gentlemen attached to the committee on both sides—quite a number of them—and I find that they are unanimously in favor of the proposition presented here.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, while it is probably, and doubtless is, true that the services of some such corps will be needed in case of war, yet what perplexes me is as to how such an unreasonable number of officers can be needed.

Mr. COX. What is the statement of the gentleman?

Mr. BAILEY. I find in looking over the bill that we have one officer for every nine men. I can not understand the necessity for such a proportion. This, it seems to me, should require some explanation.

Mr. MARSH. While the gentleman from Texas is entirely correct in his statement regarding ordinary military affairs—say, for instance, as to the infantry regiments—yet in this condition, and in the service proposed here, there are circumstances which render the number of officers entirely necessary. While in this corps I am not prepared to say that the number of officers is not somewhat disproportionate, apparently, to the number of men, yet I must take the judgment of men who are more familiar with the matter, and who know decidedly more about it than I do.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, in a matter like this we must all rely on the opinions of those who have experience in these matters; and believing that something of the kind is necessary, I am not willing, in any way, to obstruct operations which may be found necessary by those in command of the troops, and I will make no objection to the consideration of the matter. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I was about saying, Mr. Speaker, that it is somewhat extraordinary that we should pass a bill of this character without having any consideration on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs, on whose judgment we are compelled to rely in these matters. We ought to have the benefit of their action and their researches. While we have the letters from the Chief Signal Officer explaining the nature of the proposition and the necessity for it, still they are general in their character and do not go into detail sufficiently and explicitly, as I think we have a right to expect.

I do not like to be captious and do not desire to be, but we ought to do things, even in time of war, in a businesslike manner. Now, for instance, I would like to know how many men will be allowed to enter the service under this provision of law? There are several matters of that kind that we certainly have a right to consider and ought to consider.

Mr. MARSH. I will state to the gentleman, if he will allow me, that I will send to the desk to have read the exact number of men who will be called into service under the provisions of this proposition, which I think will answer fully his question. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement showing number of enlisted men and officers provided for in bill organizing volunteer signal corps, Senate bill 4567.

* * * * * * * *

The entire Volunteer Army, which is to be composed of seven army corps, would have:

One colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 8 majors, 42 captains, 42 first lieutenants, 42 second lieutenants, 105 first-class sergeants, 210 sergeants, 210 corporals, 540 first-class privates.

This organization will provide means for establishing telephone and telegraphic connection between each regiment and corps headquarters through the brigade and division headquarters. The officers and men of each division will be supplied with field telegraph trains in addition to field signal equipments. The whole Army will be within speedy communication with the Commanding General.

Mr. McMILLIN. But that does not give the information. Is that as the corps will exist after the present additions are made?

Mr. MARSH. That will cover the full number that will be enlisted under this provision.

Mr. McMILLIN. What was the custom in the late war? Were they enlisted as soldiers?

Mr. MARSH. Yes; we had a telegraph corps in the last war.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the principal part of that work was done by civilians.

Mr. MARSH. But that was a very imperfect system in comparison with what we now have. This is a regular telegraph and telephone system.

Mr. McMILLIN. The telephones add no complications to it, though.

Mr. SAYERS. In regard to this measure, I will say that I look upon it as a very important one. The chief of that Bureau, General Greely, was before the Committee on Appropriations some days ago in reference to an appropriation, and his explanation of the work of this force satisfied me that it is absolutely necessary. The Army can not possibly get along without this force; and while I do not state it as absolutely accurate, my information is that all of these men are to be enlisted under the law.

Mr. COX. That is right.

Mr. SAYERS. So that they can be the better controlled.

Mr. MARSH. And I will say now to the gentleman that the reason why I am disposed to hurry the consideration of this bill is that our forces are liable to be ordered from San Francisco to Manila this week, and at San Francisco there is a thoroughly organized volunteer signal corps, which, if this bill passes, can be mustered into the service of the United States and accompany it, such members of it as may be necessary to go with that expedition.

Mr. McMILLIN. My recollection is——

Mr. MARSH. I will say, moreover, that while I do not speak ex cathedra, yet it will not be very long before our troops will be upon the Island of Cuba, and with an enlarged force this corps is important, if not absolutely necessary.

Mr. McMILLIN. Can the gentleman give us some reason why there is such a large proportion of officers to be enlisted, as compared with the privates? If privates soldiers can do it, they ought to be allowed to do it, and if not, then it strikes me that you have no need for the privates at all, but should make them all officers.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] allow me to suggest to my colleague [Mr. McMILLIN] in that connection that this organization furnishes the arteries of communication between different parts of the Army, and you will not be able to get privates to perform the work of electricians, and duties of that sort. That is the trouble. The urgency of the matter is that if you send troops to the Philippine Islands or to Cuba without this organization you will have no effective means of communication between the divisions, brigades, and regiments of the Army. Now, I admit that it looks to me as though there were too many officers, but you will not be able to get the men to perform that duty upon the pay of privates.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the peculiarity of the soldier, I think my colleague will remember, is that, whatever his pay is, he does his work as a soldier.

Mr. COX. Oh, that is true, but you know as well as I do that the men who are educated as specialists in these lines are not to be found very often among the private soldiers.

Mr. McMILLIN. But I would rather, if I could have my way, give the price of a civilian employee, as we did in many instances during the war, and have him as a civilian officer, so that he is not retired at a certain age on three-fourths pay, so that he is not pensioned after a certain age, as he is if you make him a military officer.

Mr. HAY. The first section of the bill provides that these men are only to serve during the war.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand; but they go to the pension roll and to the retired list if their disability comes during that time.

Mr. MARSH. No; they never go to the retired list, unless they are specially provided for. My colleague [Mr. McMILLIN] is mistaken.

Mr. McMILLIN. I feel very slow to object to a measure that is in the hands of other gentlemen, but it does seem to me that on as important matter as this, where you are increasing officers abnormally, as compared with the men, we ought to have the benefit of the deliberations of a committee concerning it.

Mr. COX. Personally I have no objection to that.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that would be the better course. They can report to-morrow, and we can act upon their report.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important measure and ought to be passed at once. It is just as essential to have these men mustered in immediately to go to Cuba with the invading force as anything that can be done at this time; and the question of whether the number of officers are more than the ordinary number of officers in the infantry or more than the ordinary number of officers in the cavalry, is immaterial in my judgment. There is no analogy. The circumstances are entirely different.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The proportion is no greater than the ordinary Signal Service.

Mr. SULZER. I am so informed and believe. Let me say to the members of this House that these are the most important men that General Miles can take into Cuba. Their services are invaluable. There should be no objection to this bill, and I hope there will be none.

Mr. COX. Let me say to my colleague [Mr. RICHARDSON] you can not organize it with less officers. I just want to say that.

Mr. MARSH. Let me say one word further. I am informed that the proportion of officers provided for in this bill is just the same as in the existing Signal Corps. I do not vouch for that, but I understand that to be the case.

Mr. SULZER. That is so. At least, I am so informed.

Mr. DE VRIES. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I understand that some of the signal corps that are to be used in this service are the signal corps of California in the service at the Philippine Islands; and I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, having served as a major in the signal service on the brigade staff of the Third Brigade of the National Guard of California for a number of years, that the number of officers required in this bill, as I gathered the same from its reading, is exactly proportionate to the number of officers required in the signal corps under the laws of that State. So that this bill does not increase the proportion of officers in relation to the proportion of persons serving in this corps, but preserves the efficiency of those corps.

Gentlemen understand that the efficiency of a signal corps is more important than any other branch of the military service. Upon these corps and their efficiency depend often the success or failure of numbers of soldiers and possibly many lives. An error in a single wave of a flag or a single flash of the heliograph at times may result in disaster or decide the issue of a battle or possibly of a war. Their qualifications are not those of an hour or a day or a month. Their requirements are secret, peculiar, difficult, and responsible. The corps should be composed not of the inexperienced, when possible, but of those who are already drilled and experienced. Their maneuvers are peculiarly difficult and often multifarious, requiring not only qualified privates, but many and experienced officers. The different signal corps of the National Guard of California are, as I heard this bill read, organized substantially upon the lines of this bill. Their officers are not too many for efficient service in these responsible positions.

The signal corps of California, as will the National Guard of that State, will perform at an early day important service in the Philippines. They, the corps, and the whole of said guard are qualified, valorous, and anxious to serve their country in this war. I hope, therefore, that this bill will pass at once as presented, that the Signal Service of the Army may be maintained as organized and be placed in actual service in its present efficiency without disorganization or reorganization. I hope no member will object to the present consideration or passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLIN. I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I hope where we are called upon in matters of this importance that we will at least have a painstaking report from a committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MARSH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BUILDING FOR RELIGIOUS WORSHIP ON WEST POINT MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6149) to authorize the Secretary of War to exercise a discretion in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may authorize the erection of a building for religious worship by any denomination, sect, or religion on any military reservation of the United States: Provided, That the erection of such building will not interfere with the uses of said reservation for military purposes. Said building shall be erected without any expense whatever to the Government of the United States, and shall be removed from the reservation whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, military necessity shall require it.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may authorize the erection of a building for religious worship by any denomination, sect, or religion on the West Point Military Reservation: Provided, That the erection of such building will not interfere with the uses of said reservation for military purposes. Said building shall be erected without any expense whatever to the Government of the United States, and shall be removed from the reservation, or its location changed, by the denomination, sect, or religious body erecting the same whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, public or military necessity shall require it, and without compensation for such building or any other expense whatever to the Government."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is proposed to authorize the erection upon public reservations of churches which shall remain the property of private denominations?

Mr. MAHANY. For special reasons on this one reservation. It has no reference to the other military reservations of the United States, because that part of the bill was stricken out. The part inserted was passed by the unanimous vote of the committee. If the gentleman desires it, I will have the report read.

Mr. MOODY. I should like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. MAHANY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6149) to authorize the Secretary of War to exercise a discretion in certain cases, have had the measure under consideration, and respectfully report thereon as follows:

The purpose of the original bill was to empower the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to authorize the erection of a building for religious worship of any denomination, sect, or religion on any military reservation of the United States. The committee find that prior to the rendition by the Attorney-General of a recent opinion concerning the right and power of the Secretary of War, without specific legislation, to grant such permits, it had been the custom of the War Department to do so, and in many cases this authority was exercised. However, when the question was submitted to the Attorney-General his decision was adverse to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary of War in the matter of these permits, and thereby rendered further legislation necessary.

The investigation made by the committee in reference to the propriety and advisability of enacting such legislation developed, so far, at least, as the West Point Military Reservation is concerned, the advisability of conferring on the War Department the necessary power to authorize a structure of the character described, because, inasmuch as that reservation is set aside for the military school of the nation where cadets are educated not only in the art of war, but trained to the responsibilities of command, your committee believe it to be in line with wisdom and public policy that, as a part of such training, the cadets should be afforded an opportunity for religious instruction.

In respect of this matter, the military reservation at West Point is an exception to all the other seventy-nine military reservations of the United States—

First, in the fact that it is remote from every city or even from any town or village of considerable size, and hence church facilities are extremely limited.

Secondly, the West Point Reservation is, of all our military reservations, the least likely to be changed in location or altered as to its general purpose. In other words, its conditions are, so far as human foresight can estimate, fixed, and therefore the erection of a place of worship is not at all likely to interfere with either the present or prospective military uses of the reservation. Even this remote contingency is carefully covered by the provisions of the proposed legislation.

In view of these considerations the committee have deemed it proper to submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War, in his discretion, may authorize the erection of a building for religious worship by any denomination, sect, or religion on the West Point Military Reservation: Provided, That the erection of such building will not interfere with the uses of said reservation for military purposes. Said building shall be erected without any expense whatever to the Government of the United States, and shall be removed from the reservation or its location changed, by the denomination, sect, or religious body erecting the same, whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, public or military necessity shall require it, and without compensation for such building or any other expense whatever to the Government."

This amendment limits the scope of the original bill to the West Point Military Reservation instead of extending the legislation to cover all the reservations, the committee believing it wise that each reservation should make its request to Congress as its necessities in this respect may arise.

The committee therefore recommend the adoption of this amendment, and that when so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from New York in charge of the bill, does this give the right to all denominations to build upon that reservation? I understand there are fifteen, twenty, or thirty different denominations. Now, does this give the right to each of those to go upon that reservation and build churches? Is that the scope of your bill, or is it to confine it to one or two denominations?

Mr. MAHANY. The bill gives to the Secretary of War authority to grant, if the proposition appeals to his sense of fitness and necessity, a permit to erect a building for religious worship on this reservation.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We may as well be plain about this matter. There is some one denomination that wants to build a church on that reservation. Suppose a dozen more go and ask the same privilege?

Mr. MAHANY. All can have it if in each individual case the Secretary of War should deem a permit advisable or necessary.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. We have a chapel and chaplain there, do we not?

Mr. MAHANY. There is a chaplain who belongs to the Episcopal Church.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Of one denomination?

Mr. MAHANY. Certainly; as I understand it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I did not understand it to be denominational.

Mr. MAHANY. That is the fact nevertheless. The chapel services are conducted by an Episcopalian clergyman.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Well, I think this will end in having 50 or 60 churches.

Mr. MAHANY. The gentleman is needlessly alarmed. The Secretary of War can be depended upon not to multiply church edifices to the detriment of the institution.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think it is a very dangerous discretionary power to give to the Secretary of War. It will end in sectarianism on every one of our reservations. First, there will be a Secretary of War who is a Methodist, and then he will be succeeded by a Presbyterian, and so on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the Secretary of War discretion in this bill to terminate the permit for this church at any time?

Mr. MAHANY. At any time he sees fit.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And then this denomination has the right to go into court for damages.

Mr. MAHANY. Not at all. The bill particularly provides:

Said building shall be erected without any expense whatever to the Government of the United States, and shall be removed from the reservation or its location changed by the denomination, sect, or religious body erecting the same whenever, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, public or military necessities shall require it, and without compensation for such building or any other expense whatever to the Government.

So it will be seen that the building must even be removed, at the expense of the denomination erecting it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think we ought not to give any such power. This is an encroachment on the question of church and state.

Mr. MAHANY. On the contrary, it is a separation of church and state.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This is the entering wedge of a church on that land. There is no question about that.

Mr. MAHANY. Why, as the gentleman has just been told, there is a church there already. The question involved is simply whether we will permit the cadets and officers of the West Point Reservation an opportunity to enjoy——

Mr. LIVINGSTON Let me ask my friend this question.

Mr. MAHANY. Pardon me for answering the other first. [Continuing:] The right of religious liberty guaranteed to every citizen of the Republic by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is all right.

Mr. MAHANY. If there is any union of church and state in this matter, it exists under the present conditions at West Point, where the Government has practically established an Episcopalian chapel, and yet denies to cadets and officers professing other creeds the opportunity to worship God in their own way.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is there not sufficient land adjacent to the reservation that can be bought for this purpose?

Mr. MAHANY. Land outside the reservation would be neither convenient nor advisable as the site for an edifice such as that proposed. To erect a chapel in the town would necessitate the granting of permits to enable the cadets to leave the confines of the reservation, and this has not found favor with the officers of the Academy. The practice has been tolerated; that is all.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They have been going outside of the reservation?

Mr. MAHANY. Yes; to attend services in a rickety and dilapidated building made over into a temporary church.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MAHANY. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. How far is it?

Mr. MAHANY. Oh, a considerable distance, and in an undesirable part of the town.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. How many denominations are there in the United States?

Mr. MAHANY. Well, I am not familiar with the multitudinous number of religious sects. Perhaps the gentleman himself can answer.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is suggested by a gentleman near me that there are about 600 different denominations. If that is the case, each one would have a right to go to the Secretary of War and ask for the privilege of erecting a building upon this reservation.

Mr. MAHANY. If the gentleman will read the report of the committee——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have. I have carefully listened to it. That would give each one of these denominations the same right, and if that is the case, 600 different houses can be erected on this reservation.

Mr. MAHANY. Let me answer the gentleman before he becomes too enthusiastic over his own deduction. The committee in the report say, "Therefore the erection of a place of worship is not at all likely to interfere with either the present or prospective military uses of the reservation." To guard against any such contingency, the matter in every phase is left to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Would not that necessitate a discrimination against some of the denominations?

Mr. MAHANY. Not at all, either in theory or in fact.

Mr. MOODY. Do I understand—I did not quite catch the explanation—that this gives equal rights to all denominations to erect upon the reservation a place of worship?

Mr. MAHANY. If in the judgment of the Secretary of War the permits so requested do not interfere in any way with the military uses of the reservation.

Mr. MOODY. What provision is made for public worship under the auspices of the Government?

Mr. COX. They are complete.

Mr. MAHANY. That is an error. They are not complete. This bill aims to complete them. The Government, as I understand it, has a chapel there and a chaplain, but the services are in accordance with the Episcopalian ritual, and students professing other religions are debarred by the tenets of their faith from worshiping there.

Now, the committee have had this bill under careful consideration, have gone over every possible point of criticism, have weighed every objection, and their report is unanimous in favor of the measure. We contend that it is not fair, that it is not consistent either with the justice or the dignity of the United States, to afford religious instruction to a portion of the cadets and force the rest either to go without such instruction or attend a church which teaches doctrines contrary to their faith and their beliefs. That is an absolute deprivation of their religious rights.

Mr. MOODY. Upon the statement by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY] that this bill is reported by the unanimous vote of the Committee on Military Affairs, by whom it received careful consideration, I shall not interpose my own personal individual opinion so far as to object to its consideration by the House, but I shall vote against it, as I believe it is vicious legislation, and I hope it will not pass.

Mr. MAHANY. So carefully did the committee consider this bill after it was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ODELL], that it underwent a change in toto, as the report shows, and the amendment is practically a new measure, framed to meet all possible objections.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MAHANY. With pleasure.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Do I understand the gentleman from New York to say that there would be room enough on the reservation for one church or more?

Mr. MAHANY. There is plenty of room on the ground.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Would there be room enough for all the churches?

Mr. MAHANY. It is hardly conceivable that any such question will ever arise, for few denominations would find any great necessity for the privilege; but accepting the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], that there are 600 denominations in the country, I would naturally assume that there would not be room enough for all of these.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then this would be a case of first come on the ground, first served, and the others will be excluded. So that some might be excluded from exercising their religious rights by attending the church they wanted to attend.

Mr. SULZER. The whole matter is in the discretion of the Secretary of War. There should be no objection to this bill. It is absolutely fair and ought to pass.

Mr. MOODY. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to our trouble with the Indian schools. We began by granting equal privileges to all denominations, which was apparently a fair proposition, but we got into trouble about it, and we are now engaged in getting out of that trouble, if we can. Conflicts and religious jealousies between one sect and another arose, and that is just what will happen in case a private chapel is built at West Point. One denomination will establish a chapel there, and then another must establish a chapel there, and another, and so on.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. MAHANY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection for a moment, at least, until I can answer the contention of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ARNOLD. I withdraw my objection for that purpose.

Mr. CORLISS. I call for the regular order.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. FERGUSSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10296) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 18 of an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by the act approved February 21, 1893, be, and the same is hereby, further amended by striking out the words "within two years after the 1st day of December, 1892," as they stand in said act as amended, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "before the 4th day of March, 1901," so that the first clause of said section shall read as follows, namely: "That all claims arising under either of the next two preceding sections of this act shall be filed with the surveyor-general of the proper State or Territory before the 4th day of March, 1901, and no claim not so filed shall be valid."

Mr. CORLISS (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, pending the demand for the regular order, is it in order for a member to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Michigan has demanded the regular order, which is the call of committees.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will let this bill be considered. It is very important to New Mexico.

Mr. CORLISS. This request, I understand, is made by a Delegate; and that being so, I withdraw for the present the demand for the regular order.

Mr. BLAND. It is a very important bill to the constituents of the gentleman from New Mexico.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. This private land claim act has been already once extended, I understand.

Mr. FERGUSSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. And it is now proposed to extend the time for filing claims three years longer?

Mr. FERGUSSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. It seems to me there ought to be some end of this business.

Mr. FERGUSSON. If the gentleman will allow me, I will explain this matter in a moment.

The original act provided that all those persons who should be entitled to get their titles from the Government (which they had supposed themselves to own by virtue of a grant that was rejected by the land court) might apply for such title within two years from the passage of that act, which expired in 1893. The land court in the meantime was in operation all the while, passing one grant after another. The time was then extended to 1894, but a large number of grants have been passed on since 1894. In the meantime a great many of these poor people who were intended to be protected by the act of Congress were ignorant of their rights, and parties interested in grants which had been passed on before 1894 failed in many cases to make the proper application.

This bill has been very exhaustively examined by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims. This land court is still in operation, passing on grants.

Mr. DINGLEY. This extends the time for the filing of claims three years?

Mr. FERGUSSON. No, sir. It only extends the time within which the holder of a home affected by one of these grants may take the necessary measures to secure title. In some cases a grant which for a hundred years had been supposed to be valid has been pronounced invalid by the land court and the land ordered to be restored to the public domain. This bill provides that in such cases the holder of a little home whose title has been affected by the decision of the land court may go to the land office of the district and upon suitable application get his title without any expense whatever.

Mr. DINGLEY. The original act was passed in 1891, and it was then stated that two years would be sufficient for the purposes contemplated.

Mr. FERGUSSON. I think not.

Mr. DINGLEY. In 1894 the act was extended——

Mr. FERGUSSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DINGLEY. And it is now proposed to extend it to 1901.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Permit me a moment. The original act provided that the settlers who had lived on their little homes of less than 160 acres for more than twenty years must file their claims within two years after the passage of that act. The land court in the meantime was going on rendering judgments until the expiration of the two years.

This bill does not affect the land court at all, but under it these particular claimants who have been in actual occupation of these small tracts of land for twenty years or more will be allowed the right to make their filings as these judgments proceed. This bill simply extends the time within which proceedings to obtain title may be taken by the settler. The whole of the judgments of the court will have been completed by 1901.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman think it necessary to make so long an extension as that? If we now make an extension to 1901, the act will by that time have run ten years.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the judgments have not been running for ten years; in many instances they have been entered since the expiration of the time originally limited.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is this bill unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. It is not only unanimously reported by the Committee on Private Land Claims, but it has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the Land Office and has been approved by both of those officers.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BLAND, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

AUXILIARY NAVAL FORCE.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and which is a matter of absolutely urgent importance to the Navy Department at this time.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 257) providing for the organization and enrollment of the United States auxiliary naval force for coast defense.

Resolved, etc., That a United States auxiliary naval force for coast defense is hereby authorized to be established, to be enrolled in such numbers as the President may deem necessary, and to serve for a period of one year, unless sooner disbanded by direction of the President.

SEC. 2. That the chief of the United States auxiliary naval force shall be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy from the active or retired list of the line officers of the Navy not below the grade of captain, who shall receive the highest pay of his grade while so employed.

SEC. 3. That enlistment into the United States auxiliary naval force shall be made by such officer or officers as the Navy Department may detail for the purpose, who shall also select from merchant vessels and other available sources such volunteers as may be deemed best fitted for service as officers in said force, and shall report to the Secretary of the Navy, for his action, their names and the grade for which each is recommended.

SEC. 4. That for the purposes of this organization the coast line shall be divided into districts, each of which shall be in charge of an assistant to the chief of the United States auxiliary naval force; and such assistant chiefs may be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy from the officers of the active or retired list of the line of the Navy, or appointed by him from civil life, not above the rank of lieutenant-commander.

SEC. 5. That the officers and men comprising the United States auxiliary naval force shall receive the same pay and emoluments as those holding similar rank or rate in the Regular Navy; and all matters relating to the organization, discipline, and government of men in said force shall conform to the laws and regulations governing the United States Navy.

SEC. 6. That the chief of the United States auxiliary naval force may, with the consent of the governor of any State, in a similar manner enlist men in said force from the Naval Militia of that State, and recommend names of officers for appointment therefrom under the regulations hereinbefore prescribed.

SEC. 7. That the officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and enlisted men and boys of the United States auxiliary naval force thus created shall be paid from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy;" and said force shall constitute the inner line of defense; and the sum of $4,000,000, or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase or hire of vessels necessary for the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think that should go to the Committee of the Whole. It is too important a bill.

I make the point that it must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I was just about to ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, inasmuch as it carries an appropriation. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri and other gentlemen present that the resolution is urgently demanded at the present time. The Department has called for it with an earnestness that is emphasized by the defenseless state of some parts of our coast.

This is intended to supply an inner line of defenses. I will say that the organizations to which reference is made in the bill are practically perfected in a large portion of the States. Their distribution, however, is delayed by the lack of the necessary legislation. It is absolutely necessary that we should at once provide for the organization of this force.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine what number of men provision is made for in this bill? That is to say, how many can be enlisted?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee I will state that no limit is placed on the number of men.

If the House will permit me, I would like to read letters from the Secretary of the Navy stating the exact effect and object of the legislation in question. They are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 20, 1898.

SIR: Referring to your communication of the 15th instant, in relation to the joint resolution providing for the organization and enrollment of the auxiliary naval force for coast defense, the receipt of which was acknowledged on the 16th idem, I have the honor, in response to your request for further information as to the practicability of the plan proposed, and as to whether there are precedents for the organization contemplated, to inform you that it is the purpose of the Department to make up the auxiliary naval force for coast defense from that class of seafaring men who have served on tugs and small vessels in local waters, and whose services, therefore, would be more valuable in their own localities than on the high seas. Many men who would not enlist regularly in the Navy for a period of three years can be counted upon to join, by short enlistments of a year or less, the "mosquito fleet."

The plan of the Department for the organization of this force is to appoint an officer of the Regular Navy, of or above the rank of captain, to act as chief of the auxiliary naval force. The coast is to be divided into a certain number of districts in charge of assistants to said chief. These officers are to examine the local vessels capable of being used as small gunboats or torpedo boats. They are to enlist the men and to appoint the officers, subject to the approval of the Navy Department. In this manner the Department is of opinion that unity of control and rapidity of mobilization will be attained.

In States having naval militia it is proposed to similarly enroll, with the consent of the governor, the State organizations, leaving their selection to the chief of the auxiliary naval force. This is rendered necessary by the fact that the naval militia are not all equally efficient, some of the States having appropriated little or nothing for their maintenance. For example, the naval militia of Ohio, being a comparatively new organization, and never having had service on the seaboard, could not be utilized in the same manner as could the older organizations of New York and Massachusetts. This force should, therefore, be entirely under Federal control.

The auxiliary naval force for coast defense should not be confused with the provision for the appointment of volunteers for the Regular Navy, a clause providing for which has been inserted in the naval appropriation bill as reported in the Senate.

In response to your specific question as to whether there are precedents for the organization contemplated, I have to state that there appears to be no precedent therefor. It may properly be added that there has never before been a naval militia which could form in part the basis of such an organization.

The entire measure should, in the opinion of the Department, be considered as an urgency war expedient. We can not man all our ships or provide for an efficient system of coast patrol without such a measure.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

HON. CHARLES A. BOUTELLE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 23, 1898.

SIR: Referring to our conversation of yesterday in relation to the draft of a joint resolution "providing for the organization and enrollment of the United States auxiliary naval force for coast defense," and to previous correspondence in the matter, I inclose herewith a draft of a section to be added to said resolution, which is intended to meet your views by prescribing the particular purpose for which the auxiliary force thereby created is to be used, and providing for the pay of the personnel from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy," as well as for an appropriation of $4,000,000 for the purchase of the vessels necessary to the carrying out of the resolution.

It has been decided by the Department that the plan of coast defense shall be carried out by dividing the seaboard into districts, according to the present arrangement of light-house districts, as follows:

First district, from St. Croix River, Maine, to and including Hampton Harbor, New Hampshire.
Second district, from Hampton Harbor to off Warren Point, New Jersey.
Third district, from Warren Point to off Shrewsbury Rocks, New Jersey.
Fourth district, from Shrewsbury Rocks to off Metomkin Inlet, Virginia.
Fifth district, from Metomkin Inlet to New River Inlet, North Carolina.
Sixth district, from New River Inlet to Jupiter Inlet, Florida.
Seventh district, from Jupiter Inlet to Perdido Entrance, Florida.
Eighth district, from Perdido Entrance to the southern boundary of Texas.

This plan involves placing gun vessels, torpedo vessels, and patrol boats, armed and manned, along the entire coast, and the defense of the coast will then consist, first, of the regular fleet; secondly, of the auxiliary fleet, the vessels of which have been acquired chiefly by purchase; and thirdly, of the flotilla to be established under the authority of the proposed resolution.

While the vessels to be purchased for the carrying out of the resolution will individually be inexpensive, the large number required will make the aggregate cost approximately $4,000,000. The appropriation of $50,000,000 for national defense is so far allotted that it will be necessary to otherwise provide for this line of vessels.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

HON. CHARLES A. BOUTELLE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

SEC. 6. The personnel of the United States auxiliary force thus created shall be paid from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy," and said force shall constitute the inner line of defense; and the sum of $4,000,000, or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase or hire of vessels necessary for the national defense.

I am informed that the Naval Militia in New York, for instance, is to-day organized and ready to be utilized and go into service as soon as this legislation is enacted.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask first if there is objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have made the point of order that it should be considered in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAND. No. I object to that. This is a very important matter, and it should be considered under the rules in the proper way. Let it go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Then, without objection, the gentleman from Maine will move the consideration of the joint resolution in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move now that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Clerk will report the title of the bill which has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. R. 257) providing for the organization and enrollment of the United States auxiliary naval force for coast defense.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I will state that it is proposed by the Department under the resolution to divide the seaboards into districts, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 23, 1898.

SIR: Referring to our conversation of yesterday in relation to the draft of a joint resolution "providing for the organization and enrollment of the United States auxiliary naval force for coast defense," and to previous correspondence in the matter, I inclose herewith a draft of a section to be added to said resolution, which is intended to meet your views by prescribing the particular purpose for which the auxiliary force thereby created is to be used, and providing for the pay of the personnel from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy," as well as for an appropriation of $4,000,000 for the purchase of the vessels necessary to the carrying out of the resolution.

It has been decided by the Department that the plan of coast defense shall be carried out by dividing the seaboard into districts, according to the present arrangement of light-house districts, as follows:

First district, from St. Croix River, Maine, to and including Hampton Harbor, New Hampshire.
Second district, from Hampton Harbor to off Warren Point, New Jersey.
Third district, from Warren Point to off Shrewsbury Rocks, New Jersey.
Fourth district, from Shrewsbury Rocks to off Metomkin Inlet, Virginia.
Fifth district, from Metomkin Inlet to New River Inlet, North Carolina.
Sixth district, from New River Inlet to Jupiter Inlet, Florida.
Seventh district, from Jupiter Inlet to Perdido Entrance, Florida.
Eighth district, from Perdido Entrance to the southern boundary of Texas.

This plan involves placing gun vessels, torpedo vessels, and patrol boats, armed and manned, along the entire coast, and the defense of the coast will then consist, first, of the regular fleet; secondly, of the auxiliary fleet, the vessels of which have been acquired chiefly by purchase, and thirdly, of the flotilla to be established under the authority of the proposed resolution.

While the vessels to be purchased for the carrying out of the resolution will individually be inexpensive, the large number required will make the aggregate cost approximately $4,000,000. The appropriation of $50,000,000 for national defense is so far allotted that it will be necessary to otherwise provide for this line of vessels.

Very respectfully, JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES A. BOUTELLE, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. HUNTER. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine in charge of this proposition whether these men, provided for in the bill, are to be regularly enlisted as naval officers, or naval cadets, for this service?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that they are to be appointed, if he will observe the provisions of the bill, in accordance with their present organization. The bill provides specifically——

Mr. HOPKINS. That is, that the State organizations of Naval Militia are to be kept in their present form?

Mr. HUNTER. One moment——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HUNTER] first.

Mr. HUNTER. The matter on which I seek information is this: Shall the men in the particular districts who are allowed to enter this service be confined to their several districts?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Not absolutely so, because, as the gentleman will understand, an emergency might arise for a vessel to carry information beyond the line of the district in which it serves. But the general object is to conform as far as possible to the laws of the different States in regard to the organization and employment of the Naval Militia.

Now, in regard to the officers, I will state that the bill provides that this whole force shall be under the command of a regular naval officer not below the rank of captain. I think one of the rear-admirals—a very competent officer—is now detailed for that purpose. Each of the districts is to be under the control of an assistant to the chief of the auxiliary force, and those assistants are to be appointed——

Mr. HUNTER. By the President, I presume from the reading of the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine (reading)—

That for the purposes of this organization the coast line shall be divided into districts, each of which shall be in charge of an assistant to the chief of the United States auxiliary naval force; and such assistant chiefs may be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy from the officers of the active or retired list of the line of the Navy, or appointed by him from civil life, not above the rank of lieutenant-commander.

Mr. HUNTER. Now, I notice from the reading of the letter of the Secretary of the Navy that he speaks of gathering these troops from New York and Massachusetts. There seems to be a limitation there in that law.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; the gentleman misunderstood. That was merely used as an illustration that they wanted the scope of this bill to be such that the Secretary would have discretion as to the organization, as to the enlisting or mustering in of the Naval Militia, because some of the Naval Militia were better adapted for coast-line service, having been drilled in those operations, and others had not, and he contrasted Ohio, for instance, with Massachusetts or New York, as illustrating that fact.

Mr. HUNTER. I wanted to combat the idea that there was to be a limitation upon the selection of these officers and men for this particular service.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Not at all as to locality; simply giving the Secretary of the Navy the discretion.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. When we organized the land force we put a limit to the discretion of the President in the organization or in his calling for troops, I believe. Is there any objection to a limitation upon this?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In numbers?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Why, I do not know that there is, except that it is very difficult to limit it. It would seem to be better to trust to the discretion of the Department. They have an organization which they are perfecting, and they will not go beyond it. The provision is this:

That a United States auxiliary naval force for coast defense is hereby authorized to be established, to be enrolled in such numbers as the President may deem necessary, and to serve for a period of one year, unless sooner disbanded by direction of the President.

Mr. McMILLIN. Under that he could enroll half a million men.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, such number as he may deem necessary, to serve for a period of one year. It is an emergency measure, and is based upon exactly the same principles as the other legislation by which we have put into the hands of the Executive discretionary power to meet the exigency.

Mr. McMILLIN. But, Mr. Chairman, the bill makes no limitation as to when this shall be done.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Immediately.

Mr. McMILLIN. Immediately; but he may do it five years from now.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, no; for one year.

Mr. McMILLIN. They serve for one year.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. They serve for one year, but there is no limitation upon the time within which the President shall exercise this authority; and whereas he can not under the general law go out and organize a great army now, he may organize this reserve force in time of peace, if I caught the reading of that bill correctly.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman suggest a modification which would meet his objection?

Mr. BLAND. Let it be amended so that it will not be in force beyond one year or the war.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, we will say—

And to serve during a period of one year from the passage of this act.

Mr. BLAND. Under the bill as it is worded the authority would last forever.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will try to prepare an amendment that will cover the objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think that would meet it—

To serve for one year from the passage of this act.

Mr. CAPRON. Unless sooner discharged.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Unless sooner discharged.

Mr. McMILLIN. I want to limit the time during which the President can operate under this rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman will prepare an amendment which will meet his objection, he can offer it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will do so.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maine if this keeps the State naval organizations intact? Or, if they enlist under this, does it absolutely destroy the State organizations?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of what?

Mr. HOPKINS. Of the Naval Reserve?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. One way of answering that is not by a direct answer, but by stating that the Naval Militia are clamorously urging the passage of this bill. Some of them are waiting to be mustered in because of the nonexistence of legislation of this kind. As a specific answer, I will read the terms of the bill and the amendment prepared by the Department at the suggestion of the Naval Militia.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If I can answer one question completely, it will be better.

SEC. 6. That the chief of the United States auxiliary naval force may, with the consent of the governor of any State, in a similar manner enlist men in said force from the naval militia of that State, and recommend names of officers for appointment therefrom under the regulations hereinbefore prescribed.

That was the provision of the original bill. By the suggestion of the organized naval militia of a number of States there is recommended this amendment, which I interpret to be intended to provide for the exigency to which the gentleman from Illinois refers—the enlistment of these men in one body, or as nearly so as practicable.

In section 6 thereof, after the words "that the chief of the United States Auxiliary Naval Force," strike out the remainder of the section and substitute the following:

"Or such officers as the Navy Department may detail for such service, may, with the consent of the governor of any State, muster into the said force the whole or any part of the organizations of the naval militia of any State to serve in said Auxiliary Naval Force, and shall report to the Secretary of the Navy for his action the names and grades for which commissions in said United States Auxiliary Naval Force shall be issued to the officers of such naval militia, and shall have the power to appoint and disrate the petty officers thereof."

It is my purpose to offer this amendment at the proper time. I understand that meets the condition to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. In the Volunteer Army bill that we passed the direct result is that the National Guard constitutes the volunteer force of the United States Army. While they are the men who constituted the National Guard, they ceased to be National Guard and became the volunteer soldiers in the Volunteer Army. Now, is it not the purpose of this bill to put the Naval Reserve upon precisely the same footing?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; I will state to the gentleman that is hardly the fact, because this is a special force, intended for special service of patrolling, and these men are not intended to be available for full service in the Navy. They are to serve in this auxiliary force for this specific service along a certain line of coast, and it was intended to recruit men for this purpose from certain men who would not be available for enlistment for a long time of service in the Navy or to make them eligible to be sent to any part of the world.

Mr. DALZELL. This transfers the Naval Reserves into the service of the United States.

Mr. STEELE. If it does not, it ought to.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman state that again?

Mr. STEELE. I think it does put them in the United States service, subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy; and if it does not give him any authority, it ought to do so.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will state to the gentleman that it does so precisely, but not in the comprehensive manner in which the suggestion was first made. It does not put the full Naval Reserve force into the service of the United States.

Mr. DALZELL. When they go into the United States service, they cease to be the Naval Reserves of the States, do they not?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They become subject to the United States law and United States control.

Mr. SULZER. For how long?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. For one year. I will state to the gentleman from New York we have information from the executive of that State and gentlemen representing the Naval Militia that to-day the organization is completed and control by the Navy Department has been organized by Admiral Erben, who has been selected to command the Naval Militia. The organization is ready, but the vessels have not been secured. Now, the organization has not been perfected to utilize the men who, I understand, are under arms to-day awaiting this legislation.

Mr. SULZER. I will state that the Naval Militia approve of this bill, and are anxious to have it passed as early as possible.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They are urging its passage in the strongest possible terms.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. If this bill were to pass, how many men would it bring into the service of the United States?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I can not state.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Approximately?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I can not do that. It is intended to be a patrol service along the whole coast, taking in tugboats and ferryboats and vessels of that class that are available for the purpose of establishing this patrol.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. A mosquito fleet.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A mosquito fleet, all up and down the coast, making our inner line of defense.

Mr. SHANNON. Would it be the duty of this force to patrol that portion of the coast and harbors that are mined?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understand that a portion of the Naval Militia of New York are to be utilized for this purpose. Of course, the mines of our great harbors are under the official control of the United States Government, necessarily, and under the Army Department.

Mr. SHANNON. The necessity of that patrol is, of course, imperative.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course; it is obviously so. It is intended to organize the force so as to be able to carry rapid communications of any possible danger, and to perfect the system of signaling along our coast, and in all other ways do that patrol duty that is familiarly known by every member of the committee as the duty of the skirmish line, and to provide for emergencies that may occur, and to enable the assembling of any power of the Navy which may be necessary to defend threatened portions of our coast.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did not the gentleman from Mississippi ask a moment ago what the number of Naval Reserves was?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; but how many we would enlist under this bill.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman from Maine whether this would be acceptable as an amendment, that the provisions of this law shall cease to be operative upon the declaration of peace between the Government of Spain and the United States?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Undoubtedly. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], because you are all leading up to the same point, and it would be well to have a consensus——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that I have drawn up what I consider will relieve the objectionable features of the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Did the gentleman from Tennessee just hear the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE]?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes; but that only covers one defect. I think there ought to be two provisions added to this bill—first, that the power of the President to organize under it shall extend only during this war——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MCMILLIN (continuing). And if the war terminates in less than a year the troops shall be immediately mustered out.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes; as soon as the exigency for them shall cease.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have drawn up amendments which I think will cover it. They are as follows:

On page 1, line 5, after the word "necessary," insert the words "for the exigencies of the present war with Spain."

Also in line 6, page 1, after the word "year," strike out the words "unless sooner disbanded by direction of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or less, and shall be disbanded by."

Also in line 7, page 1, after the word "President," insert the words "at the conclusion of the war."

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. The only objection to that would be this, that if the men had been enlisted for one year's service, it would be hardly practicable to muster them out before the close of the service for which they enlisted.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I want no contracts, either in the Army or Navy, that men shall be kept in the service after the object for which they enlisted is attained. Let us, in the act organizing the force, give notice to these men that their services will be required only during the war. Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is in order at this time, I will offer these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. PAYNE in the chair). It is not in order at the present time. This is general debate.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill as to the proposed expenditure of $4,000,000. How is that to be expended, and for what purpose?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. For the purchasing and chartering of such vessels as necessary to form this patrol.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the appropriation recommended by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Undoubtedly. The Secretary says, "While the vessels to be purchased for carrying out the resolution will individually be inexpensive, the large number required make the aggregate cost approximately $4,000,000."

Mr. DOCKERY. I supposed it was the policy of the Navy Department to secure such scouts as the City of Paris and other steamers of like speed to do this work.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Those vessels are the outer line; that is, the auxiliary force, or what we call the regular naval auxiliary force; they are fighting ships. Those vessels are liable to be dispatched at any time off to sea in any direction as scouts and commerce destroyers or whatever service they may be sent upon; but this patrol will be a permanent patrol up and down the coast, keeping in touch with one another, and keeping in signal communication with points of headlands along the coast, to guard against such raids as were made in the past by Paul Jones and that have been threatened to be made upon our coast in the present war.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is obvious that the provisions of this bill can be executed in such a way as to be of service in defense of the country, and yet there is a wide-open door in the purchase of boats and vessels that might involve us somewhere along the line in scandal.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I thought of all that, but we are now in war.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not object to the bill with the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], but I do want to say to the Secretary of the Navy and to the Secretary of War in this connection that they can not exercise too close a scrutiny in expending the money that is committed to them in such enormous amounts.

I do not think any people in the world have ever shown more faith and more patriotism or confided more implicitly in executive officers than we have since Congress on the 8th day of March passed the $50,000,000 appropriation bill. I desire, therefore, to suggest to the Departments the dangers that may come to the Treasury under the guise of patriotism and result in scandals. I hope there will be none; and yet the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War can not be too careful in the expenditure of the immense amounts committed to their discretion.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not incorporated any suggestion of that kind in my remarks, because——

Mr. HOPKINS. I think all gentlemen feel that as keenly as the gentleman from Missouri does.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; I think everybody does. I hope it is no offense to the gentleman from Illinois to suggest it.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I appreciate the fact that we are all American citizens.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I did not incorporate any suggestions of advice of that kind in my remarks, because in the first place I am not exactly aware how I can exercise any authority over the executive officers. I am not prepared to indulge in criticism in advance; and I generally address myself to the situation as I find it. The question to-day is not whether ordinarily in time of peace we would grant such latitude of appropriation as we do now. "It is a condition, not a theory, that confronts us"—a very practical condition. We find from one end of the coast to the other a constant demand and appeal that something be done by the Navy Department to furnish protection to the coast against hostile assaults. The Navy Department is answering the appeals of the governors of States and the mayors of cities, North and South, on our Atlantic coast by the statement that the Department is doing what it can with our auxiliary cruisers to furnish protection, and will do more as soon as it obtains this legislation.

Under this condition of things, it seemed to our committee, and it seemed to me, an imperative duty to furnish the Department that which it says is necessary in order to organize a defensive patrol on the coast. Whether it costs money or not is another consideration. Whether the executive department is going to exercise the wisest discretion or not is a matter for which we must trust that department. But to-day this demand comes here from our Executive, who has been commanded by Congress to put the country in the condition in which it is to-day. He has received instructions from the legislative body to enter upon this war. We are now engaged in it; and we have to meet the expenses of it; we have to pay the bills. I believe this is one of the measures on which I would not be justified in hesitating to meet the imperative and earnest demands of the executive department for means to furnish a defensive patrol of our coasts. Hence I have brought this bill before the House, with the assent of our committee.

Mr. LOVE. Will such vessels as is proposed to be purchased under this bill be sufficient to resist a foreign foe?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They would not individually. They are intended for a patrol, for an inner line of defense.

Mr. LOVE. Does this measure provide for the enlistment of sailors for one year?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. For one year.

Mr. LOVE. Would it not be well to say, "for one year or for the war?" Suppose the war should close in a few months, shall the Government continue the pay of these men for a year?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] whether he could not meet the suggestions just made by the gentleman, as well as the conditions which he has indicated, by inserting a few words in the first section rather than by adding a new section. The bill now reads:

In such numbers as the President may deem necessary, and to serve only for a period of one year or during the continuance of the existing war, unless sooner disbanded by direction of the President.

Mr. STEELE. The language of the volunteer act was "for one year unless sooner discharged."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The terms of this bill are similar—

To serve for a period of one year or during the continuance of the existing war, unless sooner disbanded by direction of the President.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am entirely willing to have my amendment inserted as a proviso to the first section instead of being submitted as an independent section. It would read, I think, in about this form:

Provided, That the provisions of this act shall cease to be operative after the conclusion of the present war with Spain; and the forces, officers, and men enlisted under this act shall be mustered out of the service immediately on the conclusion of such peace.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think there will be no trouble in arranging this provision so as to meet the views of gentlemen who have made these suggestions. I will ask the Clerk to take down the amendment as I will read it:

Insert in line 6—

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is not now open to amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understand this proceeding is by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask that the general debate be considered as closed, and that we go on now to consider the bill for amendment.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will not the gentleman allow me a few minutes?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, I hope we shall not make speeches on this bill. Let us put the bill through as speedily as possible.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I should like to be heard for a few minutes. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have nothing to yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I want to support this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks that general debate be now closed.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I hope the gentleman will allow me one or two minutes in support of this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I suggest to the gentleman that the debate under the five-minute rule will allow ample opportunity for any remarks which he may desire to submit.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest that the gentleman from Maine can reserve his time and allow other gentlemen who may want to occupy a little time to do so. I do not think there is any disposition to waste time on this subject.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. How long does the gentleman desire?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I desire but a very few moments.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from Maine will allow the debate to proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I wish to yield to the gentleman from Washington a reasonable time.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I shall not want but a very few moments.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I yield five minutes, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Washington, if I may be permitted to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman from Maine will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the fact, of course, that I would have been entitled to the floor in my own right, under the rules, but I desired only a very few moments to express what I recognize to be the views of the State which I have the honor to represent on this floor upon the pending question, and which views I believe will meet the approval, generally, of our people.

My position as to such increase of forces as that provided for in the pending joint resolution has been frequently expressed on the floor heretofore, and it seems scarcely necessary that I should again voice those opinions. I am one of those who believe that the Navy of the United States should be increased to the full strength necessary for the defense of our country against foreign foes [applause], and to this end I have ever given my voice and vote.

I believe also, Mr. Chairman, that the fighting in the interior, if fighting shall be necessary in the interior of our country, should be done by our volunteer forces, and for that reason I have been opposed steadily to any unnecessary increase in our standing Army. I do not believe it to be necessary in time of peace, and scarcely necessary in time of war, to perpetuate any Regular Army which would supplant the volunteers.

But there are other considerations which we must recognize: The time, the surrounding conditions, and the present necessities. The bill which is now before us presents an entirely new situation of affairs. The ships provided by the same are regarded as absolutely necessary to protect our coastwise commerce and many of our coast cities. It is a kind of a patrol service in the Navy, which is regarded by those who have charge of the naval service as being absolutely essential and one which I myself believe to be important and necessary.

The State I have the honor to represent, Mr. Chairman, has an exceedingly large seacoast line and very important interests upon the seacoast which need protection, and the measure proposed here seems to me to be in the interest of the protection of the commerce of Seattle, Tacoma, and other cities on Puget Sound which comes to us or departs from us to the Alaskan ports.

It is therefore important that that region of the country should be protected in that regard against privateers and ships of war of a hostile nation, which may be commissioned to prey upon that commerce.

There has come to me in the last two days frequent telegrams and a number of letters from merchants and others in my section informing me that they believed that privateers were being fitted out in South American States—at the instance of, or at least with the indorsement of, the Spanish Government—to prey upon their commerce on our Western coast.

Our merchants feel that there is a certain degree of danger, at least, in the threatening conditions. They have been fearful lest there should be no protection afforded to them, and have urged me to bring before the House such suggestions, in the way of legislation, as will afford them ample protection.

I may state that the measure now under consideration seems to me to be one that will meet their approval and afford them, if danger should arise, the necessary protection which our great commerce on the coast demands. To my mind it is a protective measure which will not only save, to a large extent, the commerce on the Western coast, but will also act as the eyes of the Navy in advertising the approach of such vessels of a foreign foe as may be likely to injure our cities and towns along the coast, and particularly in the entrance to Puget Sound.

If there be a well-grounded fear that the effect, which has been suggested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], of too great an expense will follow, it seems to me that a remedy can easily be applied by limiting the expenditures to the actual demand.

Speaking, therefore, for the constituency I represent, and for the Pacific coast generally, I give my most hearty indorsement to the measure before the House, and trust that generally looking to the interest of the Pacific as well as to the Atlantic coast, this matter will receive the approval and the unanimous vote of this side of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. Good for you, LEWIS!

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. It was for the purpose of expressing this approval as the Representative of that portion of the coast, and giving the House the news of the fears which prevailed there as further reasons, that I arose. Having no other object, I shall consume no further time. I thank the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] for his courtesy and the House for its attention.

Mr. SIMPSON. It suits LEWIS. So I am for it. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That a United States auxiliary naval force for coast defense is hereby authorized to be established, to be enrolled in such numbers as the President may deem necessary, and to serve for a period of one year, unless sooner disbanded by direction of the President.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine] to the proposition involved in this bill, for the purpose of getting a distinct understanding of it. Do I understand that the proposition in this bill is to charter and employ in the United States a certain character of vessels to patrol the coast along the United States?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman assents to that proposition. Now, I want to ask him, what is the character of the vessels which are to patrol the coast of the United States? And what kind of an opposition could they make to armed cruisers of the Spanish naval forces?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that it is not, of course, intended to organize a force of war vessels that will be capable of engaging or resisting the powerful armed ships of the enemy.

Mr. COX. Then they must be a force that simply reports what is going on.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Substantially.

Mr. COX. Well, literally. Now, when you organize this force to patrol the coast of the United States from one point to another, and they report, does not that turn the whole organization which you propose to make into a police force, to observe and see what the Spanish fleets are doing?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The word "patrol" of course expresses it.

Mr. COX. Let us be fair.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want to qualify an answer that I made a moment ago to this extent, that while, of course, it is not expected that we can put a cordon of heavy fighting war vessels around our shores, yet it is proposed that a portion of these vessels shall be fitted out as torpedo boats, and in that respect they would be aggressive and in many places would be formidable.

Mr. COX. Now, I ask my friend the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs do you believe that a Spanish naval force will ever approach the United States coast?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, that is a pretty difficult question, because up to the present time our experience with Spanish naval forces has been very exceptional.

Mr. COX. Yes; and you know as well as I do that they will not come to our waters to fight us.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to the gentleman that, perhaps injecting a little American notion into my idea of what the Spaniards would do, I did anticipate the probability of some raids upon our coast.

Mr. COX. Well, now, let me ask you one question. They will never come here. I have no doubt about that, but probably you will disagree with me on that. But do you want to organize this force, that will cost the Government $4,000,000 a year, in anticipation of the probability that a Spanish fleet will approach the American shores?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is exactly what we are advised to-day by the executive branch.

Mr. COX. And you do not believe, and I do not believe, that you will ever see a Spanish flag in sight of an American port, do you?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not want to say that. I do not feel so sure. At any rate, I do not feel that we will be justified in avoiding every precautionary measure that we can take to prevent the possibility of having severe loss inflicted upon us by such an assault.

Mr. COX. If you are going to make appropriations upon possibilities, you will never get to the end of it. I think we ought to legislate upon the idea of some probability.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, I will say to the gentleman that we are obliged to take our idea of the probabilities largely from the technical departments of the Government which are charged with giving judgment upon these subjects. While I may have my own opinions upon various points, it seems to me that, especially in a time of actual hostilities, I am bound to pay a great deal of deference to the judgment formulated by those gentlemen upon whom the great responsibility rests.

Mr. COX. That is right; but I should like to have the judgment of the chairman of the committee himself, for I have great confidence in it. I should like to ask him if he thinks we need a fleet to watch our coast against a Spanish squadron that will not dare meet us on the seas?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not think it is an unwise precaution to patrol our coast.

Mr. COX. You do not think it is unwise, but do you think it is a practical expenditure of this large amount of money, when I believe your judgment about it is that a Spanish fleet will never attack a point on the American coast?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, I will say that I should not feel any regret at having made such a wise precautionary expenditure, even if it should prove in the future to have been unnecessary.

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I should feel a great sense of responsibility——

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. And it would be a responsibility that I am unwilling to take. This is the recommendation of the representatives of the executive department of the Government and an appropriation which they state the experts of the department believe to be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That enlistment into the United States auxiliary naval force shall be made by such officer or officers as the Navy Department may detail for the purpose, who shall also select from merchant vessels and other available sources such volunteers as may be deemed best fitted for service as officers in said force, and shall report to the Secretary of the Navy, for his action, their names and the grade for which each is recommended.

Mr. McMILLIN. Before we pass over section 3, if the gentleman from Maine will permit——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. In section 3 this provision is found:

That enlistment into the United States auxiliary naval force shall be made by such officer or officers as the Navy Department may detail for the purpose, who shall also select from merchant vessels and other available sources such volunteers as may be deemed best fitted for service as officers in said force.

From what source is it contemplated that these officers shall come?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Why, there may be more or less men who can serve in this force who are not on board vessels. They are men who have served most of their lives on ships, but may have taken service in the docks or in various other places.

Mr. McMILLIN. What compensation would they get?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They are to be paid from the appropriation for the pay of the Navy. It is contained in the last section of the bill:

SEC. 7. That the officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and enlisted men and boys of the United States auxiliary naval force thus created shall be paid from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy."

Section 5 provides that they—

Shall receive the same pay and emoluments as those holding similar rank or rate in the Regular Navy.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the highest rank to be given in this service?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The highest rank is that of a detailed officer.

Mr. McMILLIN. This also speaks of an assistant. What rank is it contemplated that assistant shall bear?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Not above the rank of lieutenant-commander. He—shall be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy from the active or retired list—

Or shall be from civil life, not above the rank of lieutenant-commander.

Mr. MOODY. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the fisheries furnish available resources for the appointment of both officers and men. There is a very large fleet of vessels required by the Northeastern fisheries, and the men are splendid seamen.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not see any provision in this bill, though there may be one, as I have not had an opportunity to look over the bill fully, providing for giving preference to the militia of the Navy, the militia now organized in the States.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will call the gentleman's attention to an amendment that I propose to offer.

Mr. McMILLIN. That is an amendment the gentleman contemplates offering later on?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes; and I will explain it then.

Mr. McMILLIN. It is well to give that preference where it should be given.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It is intended to do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purposes of this organization the coast line shall be divided into districts, each of which shall be in charge of an assistant to the chief of the United States auxiliary naval force; and such assistant chiefs may be detailed by the Secretary of the Navy from the officers of the active or retired list of the line of the Navy, or appointed by him from civil life, not above the rank of lieutenant-commander.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

While I am in favor of a bill of this kind, I desire to ask a question in regard to the purpose of the bill. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether when this force is organized and enlisted, in case of necessity, is there any provision in the bill that will authorize the President or Secretary of the Navy to use these men for other purposes not coast defense? I do not see that any such provision is now in the bill; but, like my friend from Tennessee, I have only casually glanced over the bill. Such a provision ought to be incorporated in the bill, because we might go into a long war; and where we have an auxiliary force that is to cost us $4,000,000, it may be necessary for them to be used outside of the waters of the United States and for other purposes not coast defense.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to the gentleman I do not understand just how the general law might affect men in the service, but the intent of the bill is not to enroll men for general purposes of the Navy. It is intended to make them especially available for coast defense, with the end of enlisting a class of men, as the Secretary suggests, who might not volunteer for service in the Navy, which requires enlistment for several years.

Mr. OGDEN. I understand that fully, but as we propose to offer amendments to the Naval Reserve of the different States, and they were in this organization, it seems to me wise to intrust a little further power in case of absolute emergencies, so that they can be used for other purposes not coast defense. I believe it would be wise to do so, and I suggest that to the chairman.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is a limitation on the use of the force in the character of the vessels that are to be employed. It is intended to employ a class of vessels that would not warrant making them available for distant cruising.

Mr. OGDEN. But we might need the men on other vessels who had learned seamanship on these vessels.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We can get those men. The idea of the Department was in this time of exigency, as we needed the patrol, we could probably secure the services of a large number of men who would be adapted and fit for the purpose who might not be willing to enlist for a term of three years in the naval service. That was the basis of this organization, and while it is to be under the naval control, it is to be a special force for a special purpose.

Mr. OGDEN. I favor the general provisions of the bill, but my idea was that it might be right enough to incorporate a provision in the bill that would allow these men to volunteer from the service provided for by this and be transferred to other service, because they would be a valuable addition. The experience that they receive here will enable them to go upon ships of war, and they will be far better qualified to fill the duties of seamen upon ships of war after this preliminary practice in coast duty than they otherwise would be.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Undoubtedly. I discussed that with the Navy Department, but the Secretary of the Navy thought it was advisable to have the division as it was provided for here.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to inquire whether the provision is made for the governor to appoint——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman from Missouri will pardon me, I am going to read a proposed amendment for that section.

Mr. BLAND. If that is the intention of the section, it will have to be amended.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman will give me his attention, I would like his judgment on this proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 6 thereof, after the words "that the chief of the United States auxiliary naval force," strike out the remainder of the section and substitute the following:

"Or such officers as the Navy Department may detail for such service, may, with the consent of the governor of any State, muster into the said force the whole or any part of the organizations of the Naval Militia of any State to serve in said auxiliary naval force, and shall report to the Secretary of the Navy, for his action, the names and grades for which commissions in said United States auxiliary naval force shall be issued to the officers of such Naval Militia, and shall have the power to appoint and disrate the petty officers thereof."

Mr. BLAND. That does not give the governors of the States any authority to appoint.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; it compels this officer to agree with the governor of the State and obtain his consent to muster in an organization, and when mustered in it may come under the authority of the United States. It provides for the retention of their officers, the particular officers chosen from the organization.

Mr. HUNTER. That amendment states that they may take in organizations or parts of organizations. It seemingly does not contemplate the mustering in of enlisted individuals, nothing less than parts of organizations. Whereas an individual might wish to enroll himself under the provisions of this statute, seemingly he could not do it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, yes; any man can enlist who chooses, but when it comes to a naval militia organization under the statute creating them, in most of the States they are organized under State law and are restricted to service within the State.

Mr. HUNTER. In our State we have some Naval Militia, but other parties would be very glad to volunteer in that service that would be fully qualified under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Individually any man is eligible to enlist in this force. This was proposed by a gentleman representing the Naval Militia and the executives of some of the States, who desire, if possible, to maintain the autonomy of some militia organization where it could be done, and as it could not always be done, and could not be done in every case, because the force is liable to be divided up for use on board of small craft, the discretion is given to the enrolling officer, and by consent of the governor of the State he may enroll the whole or part of an organization.

Mr. McMILLIN. When I made my inquiry of the gentleman from Maine, I did so in the hope that some means would be devised of keeping in a considerable degree these organizations together after they go into the service. For this reason our policy has always been not to have a top-heavy navy or an immense standing army, and in order to do that we have stood ready to furnish all the militia needed as soon as the regulars were ready to do the first part of the work of the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well, Mr. Chairman, I will take the floor in my own right and then yield the balance to him. I think we will add much luster to that long and glorious future which I think is before the American people if we act with the wisdom that our fathers did. There is much encouragement to these organizations in the future if in this emergency after they are taken into the service of the country and kept in the service, and if we can devise the means for the Naval Reserve to be kept together, as has been devised in militia, I think we shall perform a great service to them and to the State.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This is for an emergency. The organization for a naval militia is in its infancy, but up to date it has been organized in a sporadic way. The exigency having arisen, the relations of the militia to war have been peculiar and their assistance has been availed of in different ways.

I understand that one of our regular cruisers is now manned by the Naval Militia; in other words, a division of the Naval Militia has gone on board one of the regular auxiliary vessels of the Navy and formed a crew. It is now proposed to utilize others of those organizations in this patrol force. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that several measures are now before Congress and under consideration having for their purpose the national organization of a Naval Militia; but they are still in an unprepared and unfinished state.

Mr. BELKNAP. Allow me to ask a question for information. I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Maine that this measure meets the approval and wishes of the Naval Militia as giving them an opportunity to get into service—to have the actual sea service, which they now have not.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course I have not heard from all of the Naval Militia, but I have had communications and personal conference with some of the principal representative men of that organization; and I will say that as a matter of fact the amendment which I have just offered was recommended by a prominent member of the Naval Militia of the State of New York, with the assent and in conformity to the desire of the governor of the State.

Mr. BELKNAP. Is it not a fact that the passage of this bill will give the Naval Militia who can not now get into service an opportunity to be called upon?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Undoubtedly it will furnish the members of the Naval Militia, who, I understand, are now ready to participate in active service, an opportunity to be utilized at once.

Mr. SOUTHARD. It provides as far as possible with reference to the Naval Militia just what a clause in section 10 of the Volunteer Army bill provided with reference to the land militia.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next section of the bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 7. That the officers, warrant officers, petty officers, and enlisted men and boys of the United States auxiliary naval force thus created shall be paid from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy;" and said force shall constitute the inner line of defense; and the sum of $4,000,000, or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase or hire of vessels necessary for the purposes of this resolution.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit me once more to make a suggestion in regard to section 1, I would like to read to him an amendment which I have drafted, to see whether it does not cover the ground which he desires to cover:

That a United States auxiliary naval force for coast defense is hereby authorized to be established, to be enrolled in such numbers as the President may deem necessary for the exigencies of the present war with Spain, and to serve for a period of one year or less, and shall be disbanded by the President at the conclusion of the war.

Mr. McMILLIN. That would seem to cover the case, yet I would not like to leave any doubt whatever as to the authority of the President in this matter. I do not want the President (whoever he may be) to be authorized to continue this organization beyond the existence of the present war. If the gentleman's amendment accomplishes that object, I am content.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does this meet the gentleman's view?

Mr. McMILLIN. I have proposed an amendment which I thought met the case; but if the gentleman's proposition is satisfactory——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I thought the limitations would better be inserted where the authorizations are made.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no desire to offer my amendment if the gentleman's amendment covers the purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The object of the gentleman from Tennessee and myself is, of course, to confine this organization to the present exigency.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the gentleman's amendment covers the point desired. My amendment embodied the same idea, but in somewhat different language.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The meaning in the two cases is the same. I have thought it well that the limitations be coupled with the authorizations. I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] asks unanimous consent to return to the first section for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine was read, and agreed to.

Mr. LOVE. I desire to make an inquiry in regard to section 7. I observe in line 10 this language: "For the purchase or hire of vessels necessary for the purposes of this resolution." I wish to inquire whether the vessels which it is proposed to purchase or hire will be of such a character that they can be used by the Government in any way after the war. Suppose the war should soon terminate, could these vessels be used hereafter by the Government in any way?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That question can not be answered determinatively any more than the same question could be answered with regard to vessels already bought. Of course, vessels obtained by the Government for a special purpose and under circumstances of urgency are not always the best adapted for the desired purposes. We have got to take our chances about that. It is expected that these vessels will not in all cases, or even in a large number of cases, be adapted to warlike purposes. Under existing circumstances the Government will probably acquire control of tugboats and small craft of that description which have speed and reasonable seagoing qualities to form this patrol, but which may not be permanently useful.

Mr. LOVE. The probability is, then, that the Government will get hold of a very inferior class of vessels that will be almost worthless after the war and add nothing to the strength of our Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Undoubtedly we shall get many vessels which we should not acquire if we had time to build such as would be in all respects desirable.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. McCALL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. H. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1910) conferring on the supreme court of the District of Columbia jurisdiction to take proof of the execution of wills affecting real estate, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FAULKNER, Mr. BAKER, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice-President had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW a conferee on the part of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 9008) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, in place of Mr. FAULKNER, excused.

AUXILIARY NAVAL FORCE FOR COAST DEFENSE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to be known as section 8, providing for the keeping of accounts of moneys expended under this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment, which the Clerk will read, to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as section 8:

"That accounts shall be kept and reports made of the expenditures made under this act."

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, while I am willing to vote every dollar of appropriation that seems to be dictated by prudence, wisdom, or necessity, under the present circumstances, for the purpose of strengthening our military power or increasing the efficacy of our Navy during the pending war or in any case where we shall be involved in difficulties, I do not believe, as far as the present war with Spain is concerned, that there will be any necessity for the expenditure of a single dollar of the public money in this direction and under the present bill.

But believing that, I know that there will be a determined pressure of hundreds of pounds to the square inch—speaking in the engineers' phraseology with reference to the strain on boilers—on the officers of the Government to buy, in the first place, vessels that can not be sold elsewhere for the price, and that the Government would have to pay an unnecessarily large price for the purpose of taking into its service these vessels that would be utterly useless, possibly, in a few days or a few weeks. We will have more "tramp" vessels offered to us under this measure than could be inspected in many weeks, and hence the amendment I have offered is submitted with the desire of helping the officers of the Government to resist that pressure to which I have referred—a pressure that is sure to come under the operation of such a bill as this—and to place here a restriction that we ought to have placed in the $50,000,000 appropriation, if we did not, that the officers charged with the expenditure of the money shall render strict and rigid accounts of every dollar of that expenditure.

I believe that provision, Mr. Chairman, should go into every appropriation bill where a new line of appropriation is inaugurated. I do not believe that temptation should be thrown before the people of the country in any respect, or that the officers of the Government should be placed in a position where danger of the kind which menaces here should come to them. I believe that there ought to be one single, solitary line of operations in regard to all of the expenditures of the Government.

As a matter of fact, it must be evident to all that this war is going to be an expensive war. It will probably be the most expensive war, as far as the results, I mean, that we are going to obtain from it are concerned, that ever we have inaugurated. We have got to pay out a large sum of money, and very little return can be expected. It will take hundreds of millions of money to pay the cost of the war, as far as the Navy is concerned, whether we have a single land battle or not, and it is doubtful whether we will ever have one in any form; but, at all events, whether we do or not, the war is bound to cost an enormous sum of money.

The people of the United States will have to pay dearly for whatever they get out of the war, at all events, whatever form it may take. Hence we ought to have strict and careful accounts rendered of expenditures which are made by our officials. And in saying this there is no possible reflection on any of the officers of the Government who are charged with the duties of the expenditure of this money. We all know that in times of war matters have to be put through in a hurried form. We ought therefore to have strict and careful accounts of all these expenditures.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee——

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow an interruption?

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Kansas, and will then yield to the gentleman from Maine with pleasure.

Mr. RIDGELY. I will ask the gentleman if he proposes in his amendment to restrict or regulate the purchase price of any vessels which may be purchased by the Government?

Mr. McMILLIN. I think the amendment carries out the suggestion of the gentleman. It provides that accurate reports shall be made of expenditures——

Mr. RIDGELY. My point, to which I wish to attract the attention of the gentleman, is that the Government may be compelled to pay a very much larger price than is necessary for such vessels as it may purchase.

Mr. McMILLIN. In any event, a return must be rendered, a full return of all expenditures made.

Mr. RIDGELY (continuing). I have a statement from a gentleman in whom I have confidence that he himself was offered an opportunity to buy a vessel a few weeks ago which was offered to him for $150,000, and for which the Government afterwards paid $260,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What is the name of the vessel, and who was the party?

Mr. RIDGELY (continuing). If that be the case, we ought to know something about it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has been saying something doubtless of interest, and I would like to know what it is. I ask for order.

Mr. RIDGELY. I repeat for the benefit of the gentleman from Maine, as I was stating to the gentleman from Tennessee, that I had information from a gentleman in whom I have confidence that a vessel was offered to him for $150,000 which has since been purchased by the United States Government for $260,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman state who the party is who made this statement? Because this is an arraignment of the officers of the Government——

Mr. RIDGELY. I have not made inquiry as to the truth of the matter, but believe the party to be reliable.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. You ought to make inquiry before you state a matter of that kind, and ought to give the name of the man who made the suggestion. If you will give me the name of the party who made that statement, I will investigate the matter in the committee instantly.

Mr. RIDGELY. I can not give the name of the vessel from memory, or the name of the party without his consent.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, give the name of the vessel, or anything connected with it, and I assure the gentleman that there shall be prompt action in the committee upon the matter, which will investigate thoroughly and fully the statement he has made.

Mr. RIDGELY. I can only state to the gentleman what was told me, and which I believe to be true. I am stating what was stated to me.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There used to be an adage that the truth as one believes it ought not always to be spoken; and one of the occasions when it ought not to be spoken is when you can not speak it authoritatively and in a manner to enable it to be met.

Mr. RIDGELY. Certainly, and I will say in answer to that——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A gentleman who arises in the House of Representatives and charges by implication, in an ambiguous manner, that somebody connected with the Government has paid an excessive price for a piece of property ought, in my judgment, to refrain from stating it, or to state it so particularly that the case can be looked up and brought home.

Mr. RIDGELY. In answer to that I will say that there seems to be great sensitiveness on the part of certain gentlemen here because somebody gets up and mentions what is current statement. I think we have a right to mention what is current report; and furthermore——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Who is the man? Is he a reputable man?

Mr. RIDGELY. He is a reputable man.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A responsible man?

Mr. RIDGELY. A responsible man.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want his name.

Mr. RIDGELY. I will give you the name of the man, with his consent, and the name of the vessel. I will furnish it to you as the chairman of our Naval Committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Let us have it now.

Mr. RIDGELY. I will not give it to you now.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Why can you not give it now? You have made the statement. Now, are you willing to let this libel go out to the country without giving any specific information in support of it?

Mr. RIDGELY. I will furnish the name of the man and the name of the vessel.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. When will you furnish it?

Mr. RIDGELY. Within a week.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh!

Mr. RIDGELY. As soon as I can see the man.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Why did you not wait a week before you made this charge?

Mr. RIDGELY. Because there was no such legislation up.

Mr. DALZELL. We ought to have the man's name now.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think any member of Congress who takes the pains to get up upon the floor and make a charge by implication that somebody has been cheating the Government ought to make his charge good or give his authority on the spot.

Mr. KELLEY. Can not the gentleman take his own time, in his own way, to do these things?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; not when he is able to take his time to fortify his statement before making it.

Mr. KELLEY. It is the gentleman's right on the floor of this House, notwithstanding the bombastic gentleman from Maine. And I have the same rights as every other member.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; I can not yield for any such purpose.

Mr. KELLEY. I want to impress that upon the mind of the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. McMILLIN. I believe I had the floor, but I intended to yield it back to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. RIDGELY. I hope the gentleman from Maine will allow a word. I do not regard it fair to be denied the right to reply to his remarks.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to address a word to the gentleman from Tennessee in regard to his amendment, and to state that of course every dollar appropriated by this bill or by any other bill passed by Congress, except in a contingent fund, has to be accounted for, dollar for dollar, item for item. I am perfectly willing to have that precaution put on the bill; but I will say to the gentleman that I do not think it at all necessary, for, in my judgment, and I think his own experience will verify mine, not one dollar can be expended under this act except by that specific authorization, accounting, and auditing which is required by the general laws of the Government.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the gentleman think that expenditures could be made under the $50,000,000 appropriation which we passed a few days ago that would not require audit or report?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My information——

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask could it not be done?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want to state what I understand to be the case. I will not state it officially, because I am not quite sure, but I have a very strong impression that the President of the United States, immediately after the passage of that bill, gave instructions that no money should be expended under it except on his own authorization, and that specific and separate accounts should be kept of every dollar expended. That is my understanding.

Mr. McMILLIN. This simply makes certain that which would have to be inferred without it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think it is no more necessary in this bill than it would be on any appropriation bill that Congress might pass. Will the Chair cause the amendment to be reported again?

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Would it not be better to make it a separate account?

Mr. McMILLIN. I suppose that would cover it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman——

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. I accept the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. I take the floor for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Tennessee the special object of his amendment. I will be glad to have it reported again.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. And, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, before reporting the amendment, I would like to have his particular attention for a moment. I know the gentleman has paid a great deal of attention to the system of expenditures. I stated to the gentleman from Tennessee that in my judgment, without any amendment whatever, every dollar of this appropriation will necessarily be expended under the specific kind of guaranty required by the laws in the Navy and the Treasury Departments.

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not hear the colloquy between the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Tennessee and caught indistinctly the reading of the amendment, and for that reason requested to have the amendment reported again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me suggest to my friend from Tennessee that the law now fully covers the matter of reports, unless he desires to incorporate the word "separate." In that event there would be a separate report; otherwise, under the existing statute, on the first Monday of January the Secretary of the Treasury would report an itemized statement of these expenditures.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Under this act?

Mr. DOCKERY. Under this act in connection with the statement of receipts and expenditures he is required to make.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The suggestion coming from both gentlemen, I think it is well to accept it as a part of the amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to have the gentleman from Tennessee give me a reason why this amendment should be adopted; why he makes a departure in regard to this particular matter. Does he know of any expenditure that can be made where there is not an account made and report made?

Every expenditure is so treated; and it is utterly impossible for a dollar of this money to get out of the Treasury without a rendition of account; an account that will be approved by some one of the accounting officers. I can see no reason for trying to make an exception of this case. I do not see anything on which to base the necessity of having this account separately made when he understands there will be an account stated and report made.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does the gentleman think the $50,000,000 we appropriated for under the provisions of that act will be accounted for item by item?

Mr. HEPBURN. Every item of it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman construes that law differently from what I do.

Mr. HEPBURN. You will be able to find in the Treasury Department where every cent of it has gone, and a separate account is kept.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am not stating what will be done, nor do I intend that anything that I am endeavoring to do here shall be taken as a reflection on any officer; but as an indication of the course that we thought should be taken, and where so much is being done by discretion, it ought to be done on statute or authority.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me say, in reply to the statements of the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee, that every dollar appropriated will be accounted for under an express provision of the statute requiring the Secretary of the Treasury, on the first Monday of each year, to report to Congress under separate heads of receipts and expenditures the items of receipts and expenditures for the prior fiscal year.

Now, as I understand it, the appropriation of $50,000,000 for the national defense being unusual and an emergency appropriation, the President directed, if I am not wrongly advised, that a separate account should be kept on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Because it was a general appropriation.

Mr. DOCKERY. And involved very large discretion, and he very properly desired that a separate report should be made. Of course that will be made a part of the general report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the first Monday of next year, but will be segregated in the report so as to show the exact items of expenditures of the $50,000,000. I do not know the purpose of the gentleman from Tennessee. If he desires a separate account of the expenditure of the four millions, the word "separate" should be incorporated in the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That was my purpose, and I have accepted the amendment.

Mr. DOCKERY. Otherwise the $4,000,000 would be reported, as required by law, because not one cent of money can be expended by any officer of the United States without being reported to Congress on the first Monday of each year.

Mr. LOVE. An itemized account?

Mr. DOCKERY. An itemized account, under the separate heads of appropriation and receipts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I presume the gentleman from Tennessee will hardly care to incorporate exceptions to the law in this bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think in these appropriations, where made as extraordinary appropriations, they ought to be accounted for separately. If it was right to make that provision in the case of the $50,000,000 appropriation, it is right here. That is why I put in the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The President made that order in respect to the $50,000,000 because he wanted to be particularly careful.

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have a division, Mr. Chairman, and see who do not want it.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. This completes the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House resolution 257 and reported the same back with sundry amendments with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments. If no separate vote is asked for, the Chair will put the two amendments together.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CORRECTION.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I find that on page 5410 of the RECORD I am credited with having introduced yesterday H. R. 10289, entitled "A bill to provide for strengthening the public credit, for the relief of the United States Treasury, and for the amendment of the laws relating to national banking associations."

As shown by the minutes of the Banking and Currency Committee, this bill is H. R. 9725, prepared by the special subcommittee of which I was chairman, which bill was introduced by me, amended by the committee, and adopted by it as the committee bill, becoming H. R. 10289. Under instructions of the committee on Banking and Currency the bill was introduced by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts]. The RECORD should be corrected to show that it was introduced by him.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I rise to an inquiry. I did not hear what was said by the member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I am troubled to know what that committee has been doing. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that that was the subject of the gentleman's statement. It was not what the committee had been doing, but what the clerks had been doing.

Mr. COX. I beg the pardon of the Speaker, but I did not hear what the Speaker said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has made a correction of the RECORD in regard to the bill on the subject of banking and currency.

Mr. COX. What was the report?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, perhaps, will inform the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MCCLEARY. The bill (H. R. 9725) upon which H. R. 10289 is based, having been introduced by me, bore my name upon its back, where the Clerk's indorsement is placed. The bill H. R. 10289, under instruction of the committee, was introduced by the chairman of the committee [Mr. WALKER] as a committee bill. The fact that the bill was introduced by the chairman was plainly indicated on the face; but, not being changed on the back, the Clerk by inadvertence credited it to me. My request is that the RECORD be corrected to show that it was introduced by the chairman [Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts].

Mr. COX. The trouble is, Mr. Speaker, they do not know how to report their bills. [Laughter.]

SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF LAW RELATING TO QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10121, and I move to insist on the amendments of the House and consent to a further conference.

Mr. BAILEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if that is the bill authorizing the suspension of the requirement of thirty days' publication of notice?

Mr. MARSH. It authorizes the suspension of several sections of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BAILEY. Relating to the advertisement required for the purchase of property.

Mr. MARSH. It was amended by both Houses, and finally the conference report was made upon it. That conference report the Senate rejects and asks for a further conference.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand the progress of the various stages of the bill, but it is the bill that authorizes the purchasing of property without the thirty days' advertisement.

Mr. MARSH. That is the bill.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask that the bill be read as it will be if the House amendments are adopted?

The SPEAKER. The bill has been reported to the House a number of times. The Senate has disagreed to the conference report. If there be no objection, however, the bill will be reported again. The Chair hears no objection, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. COX. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. What is the status of that bill? Is it a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The committee of conference agreed upon a report, and the Senate disagreed to that report. The bill now comes back to the House for whatever action the House may see fit to take.

Mr. MARSH. The Senate disagreed to the report and asked for a further conference.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH], who will be one of the conferees, allow me a suggestion? I think the contention of the Senate in respect to this matter is a sound one. I understand the Senate objects to the repeal of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and I think properly, because that section, which relates to advertising for supplies, now contains an emergency clause; that is to say, the Secretary of War under that section has authority, if in his judgment an emergency exists, to so declare; and that relieves him from the necessity of advertising in such cases.

Mr. MARSH. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri that the reason the House conferees consented to a suspension of the section referred to was that under this section, as the gentleman will find by reading the language, the Secretary of War is not allowed to exercise his discretion except where the materials purchased are to be delivered immediately. Now, there is sometimes necessity to contract for the delivery of goods five or six weeks in advance.

Mr. HAY. Permit me to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] that he is entirely mistaken as to the grounds on which the conference report has been disagreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I have been incorrectly informed.

Mr. MARSH. I think the gentleman from Missouri must see the force of the point I just suggested. That section provided that where the Secretary of War availed himself of an emergency to dispense with the ordinary advertising the goods which it was desired to purchase must be delivered immediately.

Mr. HAY. That was an amendment put on the bill by the Senate itself, and the House agreed to it. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be allowed to state just what were the two points on which the House and the Senate conferees disagreed.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] yield?

Mr. MARSH. Oh, yes.

Mr. HAY. I happened to be a member of the conference committee, and the two points on which the two Houses have failed to agree are these: In the first place, the House bill provided that the provision of the Revised Statutes should be suspended at the discretion of the Secretary of War. When the bill went over to the Senate they amended the bill in that respect. It was urged there that an executive officer ought not to have the power to suspend the operation of any statute.

When we went into conference on the bill the Senate conferees receded from the amendment which had been made by the Senate on that point. On another point the Senate had amended the bill so as to take from the Department presided over by Major Ainsworth certain clerks whom he is now using.

The House conferees refused to agree to this amendment of the Senate upon the ground that those clerks are needed in order to keep up the work of the present Bureau. On that point the Senate conferees agreed to recede. Those are the two points that were in controversy between the conferees of the two Houses.

Mr. DOCKERY. As I understand the gentleman, those were the chief points of difference between the conferees.

Mr. HAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. But my statement relates to the contention of the Senate itself. I understood that the Senate—perhaps I have been incorrectly informed——

Mr. HAY. What I meant to say was that the House conferees agreed to the amendment put on the bill by the Senate as to section 3709.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes. But as I understand (I may have been incorrectly advised), the Senate declined to agree to the conference report on the ground that section 3709 ought not to be modified as proposed by the conference report. I may be in error on that point.

Mr. MARSH. I will say to the gentleman that that matter will have careful consideration in the next conference.

Mr. DOCKERY. I only desired to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to that point. As I understand, the position of the Senate—and I think it a correct one—is this: That where the Secretary of War desires to make an immediate purchase demanded by military necessity he should have the discretion so to do. But where supplies are contracted for to be delivered some time in the future—after an interval of two, three, or four weeks—the law should not be repealed in regard to such contracts.

Mr. MARSH. That matter will have careful consideration in the conference.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the further conference asked.

The motion of Mr. MARSH was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MARSH, Mr. GRIFFIN, and Mr. HAY as conferees on the part of the House.

NAVAL HOSPITAL CORPS.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill I send to the desk.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, before that I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does it refer to the present motion? Otherwise it would not be in order.

Mr. OSBORNE. It relates to the proceedings in the House during the day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. OSBORNE. I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, having this morning objected to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4073) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan labor commission, and being desirous of withdrawing that objection, if it would be in order for me now to do so?

The SPEAKER. It could not be withdrawn now, because the objection has had its effect to prevent consideration at the time the measure was proposed.

Mr. OSBORNE. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that I desire to withdraw the objection, having examined the bill proposed.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill called up by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10220) to organize a hospital corps of the Navy of the United States, to define its duties, and regulate its pay.

Be it enacted, etc., That a hospital corps of the United States Navy is hereby established, and shall consist of pharmacists, hospital stewards, hospital apprentices (first class), and hospital apprentices; and for this purpose the Secretary of the Navy is empowered to appoint twenty-five pharmacists with the rank, pay, and privileges of warrant officers and to enlist, or cause to be enlisted, as many hospital stewards, hospital apprentices (first class), and hospital apprentices as in his judgment may be necessary, and to limit or fix the number, and to make such regulations as may be required for their enlistment and government. Enlisted men in the Navy or the Marine Corps shall be eligible for transfer to the hospital corps, and vacancies occurring in the grade of pharmacist shall be filled by the Secretary of the Navy by selection from those holding the rate of hospital steward.

SEC. 2. That all necessary hospital and ambulance service at naval hospitals, naval stations, navy-yards, and marine barracks, and on vessels of the Navy, Coast Survey, and Fish Commission, shall be performed by the members of said corps, and the corps shall be permanently attached to the Medical Department of the Navy, and shall be included in the effective strength of the Navy and be counted as a part of the enlisted force provided by law, and shall be subject to the laws and regulations for the government of the Navy.

SEC. 3. That the pay of hospital stewards shall be $60 a month, the pay of hospital apprentices (first class) $24 a month, and the pay of hospital apprentices $18 a month, with the increase on account of length of service as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law to other enlisted men in the Navy.

SEC. 4. That all benefits derived from existing laws, or that may hereafter be allowed by law, to other warrant officers or enlisted men in the Navy shall be allowed in the same manner to the warrant officers or enlisted men in the hospital corps of the Navy.

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill under the motion proposed by the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this measure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine desires to move that the House consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. Which motion would not be in order.

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order, of course, without consent.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have moved, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. But preceding that there must be unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

I am only asking the gentleman for some explanation as to the objects and effect of the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This bill, I will state to the gentleman from Texas, is to reorganize the hospital force of the United States Navy. It is a matter that is regarded as exceedingly important at present, and I have waited for some little time to get an opportunity to bring it before the House for consideration.

The Department is exceedingly anxious to secure prompt action upon the matter, and the Medical Department is pressing it on me for consideration and immediate passage with great earnestness.

Of course it is unnecessary for me to say that such a reorganization of such a service is more than necessary under present conditions, and that if action is to be taken at all it should be taken promptly.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine if this has been considered by any committee of the House; and if considered, if it is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that this has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, on the recommendation of the Surgeon-General, as well as the Secretary of the Navy.

It is simply a reorganization of the present hospital service in the Navy, which has been recommended heretofore. This reorganization is based, to some extent, on the plan of the organization of the Army service, making that service more efficient, but involving, at the same time, necessarily a small expense.

Mr. BAILEY. Is there any increase in the salaries proposed by the bill?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is a change in the rating and, of course, a slight increase in the compensation.

Mr. BAILEY. Does it involve a provision that this force shall be continued after the close of the present war?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This hospital service, I will explain to the gentleman, is intended to be a permanent service, and a reorganization is necessary for that purpose. It has become especially necessary by reason of present conditions, to which I need not refer, and a recommendation to this effect was made in the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy. There were several propositions in the shape of resolutions for this reorganization of the service proposed and considered by the committee. The committee have given the matter careful consideration, and have acted with due deliberation, as far as possible, in presenting the matter to the House. This is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. What I desire to know is if the bill expressly provides for the disbandment or disorganization of any such corps when the war is over?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; it places the organization on a permanent footing. It does not increase the force, however, beyond what is necessary.

Mr. BAILEY (interrupting). It does not increase the establishment as it now exists?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Not to any material extent.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman tell us how much it does increase the service?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine, Has this report been printed?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The matter has been before the committee for some time and is ready for consideration. I will state to the gentleman from Texas confidentially, and to the gentleman from Tennessee as well, that I thought it desirable to get into Committee of the Whole in order to make a brief explanation of the matter. But if desired, I will make the statement now in full.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I say to the gentleman from Maine frankly, if it was a bill merely and only reorganizing this particular branch of the naval service, I think it ought to wait until normal conditions are restored; whereas, if it is a bill to provide for the emergency now upon us, I am willing that it should be considered in an unusual way.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to the gentleman right there that that is exactly the condition in which I bring it forward; that while it is a proposed reorganization that would be desirable in any event, it would not, perhaps, have met with such immediate favor at the hands of Congress (as all reorganizations are looked upon somewhat askance) but for the fact that it is absolutely necessary now. The existence of hostilities has rendered this imperative at the present time, while perhaps in time of peace we might have felt that we would pass it this month or during the next six months. It is absolutely essential to-day. The Surgeon-General's Department are urging it upon us in the most pressing manner, and so is the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to object, but I want to say——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This is not a reorganization of the Medical Department of the Navy.

Mr. BAILEY. It is just the hospital arm of the Medical Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes; those men who have to do with the sick and wounded.

Mr. BAILEY. In view of the fact that we must incur such extraordinary expenditures, and in view of the fact that we must create so many new places for the present emergency, I do not believe that any committee of the House ought to ask us to vote to add men or to increase the money required for the ordinary administration of any department.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say frankly to the gentleman from Texas that I agree with him fully, and I would not bring before the House at this time any matter that was simply a reorganization for convenience. But this reorganization is of the men who are to take care of the sick and the wounded, and I believe it is absolutely important at this time.

Mr. BAILEY. I am willing that it be considered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report that accompanies it read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The report is simply a formal one, but I have here memoranda containing all the information, which I intended to read as soon as we got into committee.

Mr. McMILLIN. If we do not get the statement before consent is given, then we are powerless to object if the information does not turn out to justify the proposed action.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman prefers, I will make the statement now.

Mr. GAINES. We certainly prefer it now.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, if "we" prefer it now, we shall have it. Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Navy, in transmitting a draft of this bill, says:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 27, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of a bill "to organize a hospital corps of the Navy of the United States, to define its duties, and regulate its pay," together with a memorandum in relation thereto, prepared in the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery for the information of the Department, and which it is thought will be useful to the committee.

It is understood that the operations of the Hospital Corps now existing in the Army are of a very satisfactory character, and for the reasons urged in the memorandum above mentioned, the Department regards the proposed organization of a similar corps for the Navy as a very desirable one, and, particularly as such organization can be accomplished and maintained with practically no additional expense, the measure in question is recommended to the favorable consideration of the committee.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

The Surgeon-General of the Navy presents this memorandum to the Secretary of the Navy:

The proposed hospital corps bill for the Navy is modeled after the Hospital Corps bill of the Army, which corps was established by an act approved March 1, 1887. It has placed the Medical Department of the Army on a footing of efficiency that is in marked contrast with the Medical Department of the Navy. In the Army there are now men enlisted, educated, and trained for the especial purpose of caring for sick, disabled, or wounded men. They have an esprit du corps, an aptitude for their work, and are zealous in the performance of their duties, having always before them the hope of promotion for efficient service in their own department.

The idea of a hospital corps for the Navy is not a new one. It has been advocated by the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery for many years, but for various reasons has always failed of accomplishment. With the advent of the new Navy and modern battle ships, antiseptic surgery, and higher medical education, the present organization, or lack of organization, of the attendants on sick and wounded men, ashore and afloat, is a constant source of regret and humiliation to the medical officers of the Navy. It is, however, the best we can do under the present laws and regulations. I may be pardoned for referring to just one incident of personal experience under present conditions. The vessel of which I was surgeon was steaming into port; the assistant surgeon was absent on leave. One of the assistant engineers slipped in the engine room, was caught in the machinery and his thigh crushed just above the knee, the bone broken and all the soft parts crushed to a jelly. Immediate amputation of the thigh was necessary.

There was one apothecary and one nurse attached to the medical department. The nurse was a man who had been transferred from the force on deck; as soon as he saw the injury he ran away and hid himself. I had the injured officer moved to the steerage country, where I prepared to amputate, without any other assistance than that of the apothecary, to whom I gave the ether sponge after I had etherized the patient. At the first incision the apothecary fainted and fell on the deck. A lieutenant who had been looking down the hatch, seeing what had happened, came down and offered to assist me, but in a few moments he, too, had fainted and was lying on the deck alongside of the apothecary. Another lieutenant took his place, and with his assistance I completed the operation. The officer made a good recovery and went on the retired list. The possibility of such an occurrence should not exist in any well-regulated naval service; but it is liable to happen to any medical officer, more especially in time of war, under our present lack of organization. It could not happen after the establishment of a hospital corps with trained assistants.

Under present conditions our hospitals have very inefficient nursing service. The nurses are civilians, receiving very small pay, and without any hope of increase. They are not under military discipline, and are too often shiftless or intemperate.

For service at sea the baymen are shipped by the Bureau of Navigation, which Bureau has certainly endeavored to get the best class of men possible under the circumstances, but in consequence of the limited force allowed they are sent to sea without adequate instruction, and often prove inefficient and discontented when they see men of the deck force promoted for good service to positions of responsibility and increased pay, while for them there is no promotion.

The bill submitted for your consideration proposes the appointment of twenty-five pharmacists, with the rank, pay, and privileges of warrant officers. This is considered a fair and just recognition of ability and faithful service, and opens a grade for the advancement of a limited number of the present apothecaries, many of whom are graduates of a college of pharmacy, and all of whom would compare favorably in education and intelligence with the warrant officers now in the service. It is proposed to make them all available for sea service, but only to have one detailed for each flagship. They will alternate in sea and shore duty.

The hospital stewards will take the place of the present apothecaries at sea, on receiving ships, and at the smaller shore stations, and will eventually all be men promoted from the rate of hospital apprentice, first class.

Hospital apprentices, first class, will be men promoted from the rate of hospital apprentice, and will be the senior nurses at hospitals and on larger vessels, and alone in vessels only entitled to one man having the present rate of bayman.

Hospital apprentices will be newly enlisted men, who will be the junior nurses at hospitals and on vessels where two baymen are at present allowed.

It is proposed to abolish the present rates of apothecary and bayman.

It is not intended to increase materially, if at all, the present number allowed, but the proposed organization will allow immediate expansion in case of war or sudden emergency without in any way modifying or interfering with the general plan. It will immediately add about 200 men to the enlisted force of the Navy.

They will be appropriated for under pay of the Navy, which will be increased by the amount necessary for the pay of enlisted men of various ratings.

The increase of pay attendant upon the promotion of twenty-five present apothecaries to the grade of warrant officer is but slight, as is shown on schedule annexed.

I can not too strongly urge your favorable consideration of the proposed plan of organization. It is due to the country as a progressive nation; it is due to the Navy to bring the Medical Department in accord with advancement in other departments; it is due to the officers and men of the service, who are entitled to careful and intelligent nursing when sick, disabled, or wounded, and it is due to the working force as a reward for faithful and conscientious work.

W. K. VAN REYPEN,
Surgeon-General United States Navy.

Mr. McMILLIN. Who holds the analogous offices now?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The apothecaries. This is a change of name.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Are there twenty-five apothecaries now?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There are ninety.

Mr. McMILLIN. Are the apothecaries now enlisted?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Yes, and rated.

Mr. McMILLIN. On the regular naval rolls?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, yes; they are rated as apothecaries.

Mr. McMILLIN. How many of them are there now? If the gentleman has a statement showing the increases that are made, and the increases for salary, that is the point I want to get at.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The memorandum given by the Surgeon-General is this:

Memorandum in regard to pay in connection with the proposed hospital corps bill.

PRESENT MONTHLY PAY.

Apothecaries, 90, at $60 per month	$5,400
Baymen, 90, at $18 per month	1,620

PROPOSED MONTHLY PAY.

Pharmacists, 20, at $75 per month	$1,500
Pharmacists, 5, at $100 per month	500
Hospital stewards, 65, at $60 per month	3,900
Hospital apprentices, first-class, 30, at $30 per month	900
Hospital apprentices, 60, at $20 per month	1,200

It makes the monthly pay $8,000, as against $7,020 now.

Mr. McMILLIN. About $12,000 a year increase.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. An increase of $980 a month, or $11,760 a year, to be accurate to a cent. Now, this bill proposes a reorganization of this entire force upon a modern, scientific basis. At the present there are 180, one-half of whom are apothecaries and one-half of whom are called "baymen," because the place where sailors are treated on a man-of-war is called the "bay." We have 180 divided into these classifications.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Maine permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Are surgeons of the Navy concerned in this bill at all?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This does not affect the rank, pay, or condition of the surgeons themselves, but they are intensely interested, all of them, in having this bill enacted, because of the advantages it furnishes their corps. This is the corps of assistants to the surgeons.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to what seems to me to be an anachronism, or strange thing. Some time since I received a communication from a doctor who had had yellow fever, who had treated yellow fever on a great many occasions, and had been through four or five epidemics. I communicated with the Navy Department and with the War Department his desire to enter the service as surgeon for service in Cuba during the war. I received a notification saying that he would have to go through a certain process, and I ascertained that he had to be under 29 years of age in order to be admitted.

Mr. LOVE. That is true. The act we passed a few days since makes the limit 29 years.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It was less than that. I will say to the gentleman that the age limit was less than that up to the time of the recent passage of the naval appropriation bill, when we changed it to 30.

Mr. LOVE. To 29.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wanted to call attention to this. The doctors who will accompany the Army and Navy to Cuba will have more cases of yellow fever to treat than anything else. The doctor should be one who is skilled in the treatment of yellow fever, and there are no physicians who have been through epidemics of that kind who are not 29 years of age. Therefore it seems to me that that limit ought to be changed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That was called to our attention, and we have changed the law in the recent appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What is the new age limit?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My recollection was that it was 30 years, but gentlemen around me seem to think that it is 29.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Thirty years would not admit these men. The last great epidemic of yellow fever was in 1878, when it was in Memphis, the State of Mississippi, and in seven or eight different places, and it seems to me that if you want men skilled in the treatment of yellow fever, you want to remove that limit.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My impression is that in appointing volunteers the President is not limited about the age. This is only for the regular service. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the provision made in the regular naval appropriation bill for the appointment of volunteer officers simply says "volunteer officers of the line and staff," and the President, I think, can exercise discretion in regard to their appointment, but they are appointed to meet the exigencies of the war. The provision for surgeons is a general statute of the Government and a naval-service regulation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Of course the gentleman will understand me. I do not know what the provision was. I addressed a communication to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy stating that this gentleman volunteered to serve in the Army or the Navy, and to serve until the close of the war. I received this reply, and I understand that three or four such replies have been received by other gentlemen.

Mr. LOVE. I had two similar replies.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And that was the volunteer service, because he wanted to volunteer to serve during the war.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My impression was that there was no limit.

Mr. CLARDY. Is it not a fact that this does not apply to the volunteers? Some of the surgeons that have been appointed by the governors of the States are largely over 30 years, and I am satisfied that it does not apply to the volunteers.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think if the gentleman from Mississippi will make further inquiry he will find that there has been some misapprehension about the matter. I will take pleasure in inquiring into the matter myself.

Mr. LOVE. I have received two letters of that kind.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. But that can not be affected by this bill, which is simply for the regular hospital corps.

Mr. CLARDY. The Surgeon-General of the Army stated distinctly only the other day in an interview that the surgeons of the Volunteer Army were appointed by the governors of the States on the recommendation of other parties of the State, and consequently this rule would not apply in those cases.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. To which service did the gentleman apply—the Army or the Navy?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I applied to both. He said that he wanted to volunteer as an immune to serve during the war.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Did he get a reply from the Navy Department?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I got a reply from both—or from one of them.

Mr. LOVE. I received a reply from both the Army and the Navy Department in the last day or two to that effect.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Maine has stated that this bill is for the permanent organization of this branch of the service. I want to call his attention to a portion of it. He will observe that he is authorizing the officers "to enlist or cause to be enlisted as many hospital stewards, hospital apprentices (first class), and hospital apprentices as in his judgment may be necessary, and to limit or fix the number and make such regulation as may be required," etc. You give absolute power to enlist all he wants, no limit in law, no limit to the discretion which he is given. It strikes me that it is a loose way of doing business at the best, and while I am willing to do it in raising an army in defense of the country, in the establishment of a permanent bureau I do not think it ought to be done, and I shall object to the consideration of the bill that does it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. McMILLIN. We have given to-day discretion for the enlistment of any number of soldiers, marine reserves. Now, it is proposed, in a permanent branch of the Government, in this bill to give permission to enlist any number of officers wanted; there is no limit to the number. It strikes me that it ought not to be done. The gentleman's report does not show anything about the facts.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I was not permitted to read the statement of facts, although I struggled hard enough to do so. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that there is no objection to limiting the force in any way.

Mr. McMILLIN. When we get into the consideration of a bill of this kind, then the power to limit goes away. We have tried that and it did not work.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will make the suggestion that we provide for enlisting the same number——

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not know the number.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say 180. We have to bring bills up or we never could get them passed.

Mr. McMILLIN. You are asking unanimous consent here to pass this bill in an extraordinary way, and in reply to that I wish to say that no member of the House has had an opportunity to investigate it. If we find on investigation at the Departments that there ought to be a discretionary power given, it would undoubtedly be consented to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What limit does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. McMILLIN. You put it in the power here in this bill to make the number unlimited. I do not know the number that is necessary and I can make no suggestion. I will look into it and make up my mind in regard to it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am performing my duty, as the gentleman understands, in trying to get the House to pass a bill to organize a force that is stated to me and my committee as absolutely necessary to take care of our sick and wounded in the very next emergency.

Mr. McMILLIN. I understand that; but the gentleman can not place me in any awkward attitude, and I know he would not do so intentionally. But you have said this is for the permanent government of the country, and yet you put no limit to it; you bring it up as an emergency measure and still say it is for permanent use.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This is merely a tentative form of the bill. I am willing to go into Committee of the Whole and have it subjected to the scrutiny and modification and suggestion of the members of the House, and I want the cooperation of the gentleman from Tennessee. I am not asking for anything extraordinary. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if we are not here for the purpose of considering legislation and perfecting legislation, what are we here for?

Mr. McMILLIN. That is the supposed object, but sometimes it fails.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Can you conceive a better object than making provision the day beforehand for the care of the sick and wounded that may be on the hands of the Government in a short time?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will not give an open field for what may be made a new bureau, to unload people and employees upon that the Government does not need. There ought to be a limit placed to the appropriation. I realize that the branch of the army service when enlisted for sixty or ninety days ought sometimes to be given discretion. But where you are providing for a permanent bureau that is to last forever you ought to place the proper brakes upon it and not allow men to be unloaded upon it that are not needed by the Government.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman is mistaken when he says that. This bill says that the Secretary of the Navy is empowered to appoint twenty-five pharmacists with the rank, pay, and privileges of warrant officers and to enlist or cause to be enlisted as many hospital stewards, hospital apprentices (first class), and hospital apprentices as in his judgment may be necessary——

Mr. McMILLIN. If that is not unlimited, I should like to know where there is a word that limits it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It says twenty-five pharmacists.

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes; but in the other grade it is unlimited.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to say to my friend that there is no limit to-day to the petty officers in the Navy. We limit the number of men in the aggregate, but for years past absolute discretion is vested in the Navy Department to appoint the petty officers at will.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does not the gentleman know that other Departments of the Government are conducted under civil-service rules, and where men who apply can not be appointed under those rules there is always a tendency to appoint them in other Departments where there is an open field?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say that in Committee of the Whole I shall be perfectly ready to specify the number that shall be enlisted, say 90 apothecaries and 90 others, making 180 men; that they shall be organized and subdivided into 20 pharmacists, 5 of another rate, 65 hospital stewards, 80 hospital apprentices of one grade and 60 of another.

Mr. McMILLIN. And even that increases the expenditure of this branch of the Government 10 per cent.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Eleven thousand dollars.

Mr. McMILLIN. Which is 10 per cent of the whole cost.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the House of Representatives does not want to increase the expenditure for the hospital service of the United States Navy by eleven or twelve thousand dollars, it can vote not to do so. But it is my duty to ask the House to consider this subject, lying directly at the basis of the care of the sick and wounded, and to impress upon the House that we can not occupy time better this afternoon than in considering—modifying, if you like—and perfecting this beneficent measure.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman persists in trying to put me—unintentionally I hope—in the attitude of objecting to the care of the sick and wounded. What I object to is the establishing of a bureau which you say ought to run for all time, and giving to its officers unlimited discretion to appoint as many people as they please—loading down the Government with useless employees. I object to any such thing and will always object to it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does not the gentleman think that he is unjust to me in saying that I am trying to "load down the Government with useless employees?"

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not believe the gentleman would himself do any such thing, but his bill does it. It puts it in the power of another officer to do it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What officer?

Mr. McMILLIN. The officer who is to appoint these employees—the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The executive administration.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not care who it is. I am not willing to put such power in anybody's hands. I do not want such power put in my hands; the gentleman would not want such power put in his hands, and we ought not to be willing to put it in the hands of others.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We have got to provide for these men either in this way or some other way. I have simply brought this measure forward to be discussed. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to suggest in what other way we shall do this necessary thing.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman will let the matter pass over until I can investigate it. His report does not give us the full information to which we are entitled. If we come down to the plain facts, the rules of this House require that there shall accompany every important measure a report stating what the measure purports to do and the reasons for it. We get nothing of that kind from this report of ten lines. If I am to be put in the attitude of making objection improperly, I plead as my excuse the rules of the House and the insufficiency of this report. I have sent for a copy of this report in order that I might read it. It shows nothing concerning the merits of this measure. Therefore I shall have to wait until I can get information from other sources.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The report is entirely correct, regular, and customary. This is a technical matter. It is a matter which is to be explained upon its merits. I hold in my hand, and had partially completed the reading of, a better explanation of this whole subject than I could possibly make myself, because it is made by the head of this Bureau.

Mr. McMILLIN. When we have had an opportunity to see that document in print in the RECORD, so that we may read it and study it, we may not then find it necessary or proper to make objection. But in order that I may not be put in the attitude of making a statement in regard to this report which the facts do not bear out, I will read the three, six, nine, ten lines of this report.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does the gentleman from Tennessee propose to make a criticism on the number of lines that are devoted to the reporting of a bill? I am astonished that a man of his experience should undertake to make a point of that kind.

Mr. McMILLIN. Oh, no. I simply maintain that this report does not give what the rules intend should be given in a case of this kind; it does not give an idea of the measure that it is supposed to indorse.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly it does give a correct idea of it by stating what the measure is.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not wish to do injustice to the gentleman nor to myself——

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman may read and criticise the report if he wishes. I have no pride about it at all. If he had suffered as much as I have from the infliction of long-winded reports upon this House, reports which conveyed no information, he would appreciate and be grateful to me for refraining from submitting in this case a lengthy report. I could give the gentleman more concrete information about this bill in five minutes, standing here and orally explaining it, than I could by occupying a week in the preparation of typographical rot. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Well, in order that the House may appreciate how much credit is due to the gentleman for brevity and that "soul of wit" that is said to lie in it, I will read this report:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10220) "to organize a hospital corps of the Navy of the United States; to define its duties and regulate its pay," which is recommended by the Surgeon-General of the Navy as especially urgent at this time, hereby recommend its passage with the following amendments:

On page 2, in line 15, strike out the word "twenty-four" and insert the word "thirty."

In line 16 strike out the word "eighteen" and insert the word "twenty."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman from Tennessee can not do better than adopt that as a model for his reports and speeches.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman seems to suppose that my speeches would be as much improved by having a model as his might be.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Perhaps not quite so much.

Mr. McMILLIN. Until I can investigate the subject more closely, Mr. Speaker, I must interpose an objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, until I can get the information which the report fails to give us I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman from Tennessee objects?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION, CAYUGA ISLAND, NEW YORK.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield for a moment to permit me to submit a request for unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 141, regarding the holding of a Pan-American Exposition in the year 1901 upon Cayuga Island, between the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, in the State of New York, to illustrate the development of the Western Hemisphere during the nineteenth century.

Mr. CORLISS. I will yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas there has been duly incorporated, under the laws of the State of New York, by citizens of said State, a company organized for the purpose and with the object of preparing and holding a pan-American exposition on Cayuga Island, near Niagara Falls, N. Y., in the year 1901, to fittingly illustrate the marvelous development of the Western Hemisphere during the nineteenth century and to appropriately celebrate the opening of the twentieth century by a demonstration of the reciprocal relations existing between the American Republics and colonies; and

Whereas the legislature of the State of New York has, by unanimous vote, memorialized Congress to encourage the holding of said pan-American exposition; and

Whereas the proposed exposition, being confined in its scope to the Western Hemisphere, would unquestionably be of vast benefit to the commercial interests of the countries of North, South, and Central America: Therefore, Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proposed pan-American exposition to be held on Cayuga Island, between the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, in the State of New York, in the year 1901, merits the encouragement and approval of Congress and of the people of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the President of the United States, upon receiving from the directors of said exposition company a statement showing to his satisfaction that the financial resources of said company are assured and ample to carry out the objects of said exposition, is hereby authorized to cause the attention of all governments in the Western Hemisphere to be called to the intent and purpose of the proposed pan-American exposition in such manner as he may deem most appropriate to secure their cooperation and participation therein.

SEC. 3. That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at said exposition shall be admitted free of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful during said exposition to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported and actually on exhibition therein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their importation and to the terms of the tariff laws in force at that time.

SEC. 4. That in the passage of this joint resolution the United States does not assume any liability of any kind whatever, and does not become responsible in any manner for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability of the said exposition company, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or incident to or growing out of said exposition.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan withdraw the request for the regular order?

Mr. CORLISS. I have withdrawn it, Mr. Speaker, for this purpose only.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will withhold his objection for a moment, until I can make a brief explanation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the gentleman from New York that I am perfectly willing to allow a bill to pass which will permit the importation of articles without duty under proper limitations, but I am unwilling to see the Federal Government become sponsor for this or any other exposition.

We have reached a point now where State fairs are asking Federal aid. The request for such legislation as this comes up from many States, and I regret to say that one has come from my own State; and the time will come, if we continue the present practice, when these requests for special privileges will be made in behalf of county fairs.

The time is at hand, therefore, when this business should stop. We ought to take a determined stand against such legislation. For my own part I am willing, and perfectly willing, as I have said, to allow certain importations free of duty, but I think that is as far as we can go.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman will permit me, the only effect of the bill proposed is to authorize the President, when he is satisfied that the resources of the organization proposed in this bill are sufficient and assured, to invite the attention of the Central and South American Republics to the exposition, with a view to their taking part in it. It does not involve the Government in any expenditure whatever.

The bill distinctly defines and declares that nothing shall be appropriated. Furthermore, section 4 of the bill provides that the salaries of the customs officers who take charge of the exhibits brought into the country shall be paid by the exposition authorities and not become a tax upon the Government.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that all the gentleman has said has been stated in perfect good faith, and that he has given us all the facts in relation to this joint resolution as he understands them. But the gentleman from New York will recollect that the same was said in perfect good faith with reference to other expositions which have finally cost the Government millions of dollars.

I am free to say to the gentleman that I do not believe it is in the power of the Federal Government or that it is any part of its business to supervise expositions of this character in any part of the United States. The most such institutions should ask for is that the Government should make an exhibit itself, and pay the expenses of its own exhibition. It might be invited to exhibit such objects as are of interest to the people generally.

If the Government is going into the business of educating the people, I prefer to spend the money on the common schools rather than on these expositions; but I am unalterably opposed to spending it either way. These expositions are not the best way to educate the people, and if they were the way, public education is no business of the Federal Government, and that is the basis of my opposition to this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman hear me one moment longer? In this bill there is not a cent asked for or expected, either for a Government exhibit or for the bringing in of exhibits. We do not now want anything from the Government. We simply desire that the President, when he is satisfied that our resources are ample and assured, be authorized to notify the Central and South American Republics of an exposition to be held at Cayuga Island in 1901. We do not now ask the Government to go there and erect a building and make an exhibit.

Mr. BAILEY. The very fact that the gentleman seeks to have the invitation extended by the President evidences a purpose to identify the Federal Government with that exposition. Now, I am free to say that the cost is not the only thing to which I object. I believe you are going far beyond the proper functions of this General Government when you permit it or compel it to supervise expositions given by the people in the various States, and if I knew it would cost nothing, I should still object to this bill in its present form. But while I am sure the gentleman from New York believes there will be no request for an appropriation, yet his confidence in that respect is most childlike and bland [laughter], for we know that they always do come for additional appropriations.

I will say to the gentleman what I said to the committee—without divulging any of the secrets which belong to the committee room—if they will cut out of this bill the provision which identifies the Federal Government with it, and will simply ask permission that exhibitors may bring in their goods and carry them back again, duty free, or if they remain here and are sold that they pay the duty which the law levies, I am willing to suspend the tariff laws to that extent.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That would cut out all there is in it for our present purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. But it is not all you do, and to prove that it is not, if you will cut the other provisions out of it, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Cut out what provision?

Mr. BAILEY. The one which authorizes the President to extend an invitation to foreign countries.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That would be cutting out the whole bill.

Mr. BAILEY. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Do I understand the gentleman from Texas to say that he would object to the bill even if he knows there is no appropriation to be asked for in the future?

Mr. BAILEY. Undoubtedly, because I believe you are identifying the Federal Government with an affair that does not belong to it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Did the gentleman object the other day when we passed by unanimous consent a similar bill, or one which carried an appropriation, for the fair at Dallas, Tex.?

Mr. BAILEY. You did not pass this kind of a bill. You only permitted them to bring in the exhibits free. I propose to do that now. I want to say to the gentleman from New York, though, that I stood in my place and declared that if I had been in the committee room when it was considered I would have voted against the bill which even gave the Texas Fair that permission. My opposition does not depend on the latitude in which the fair may be held.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman objects because this bill authorizes the President to call the attention of the Central and South American Republics to the fact that a Pan-American Exposition is to be held in 1901, then it is useless to parley further for unanimous consent.

Mr. BAILEY. I am very free to say, if you can not make a success of your exposition without identifying the Federal Government with it, it would be well to leave it unheld.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask the gentleman if he believes that simply authorizing the President to invite the attention of Central and South American Republics to the fact that a Pan-American Exposition will be held in Buffalo in 1901 identifies or involves the Government with it?

Mr. BAILEY. The Secretary of State could do that without the authority of Congress, if he saw fit to communicate to our official representatives in those countries the fact that a great exposition was to be held at Buffalo. He would not need the authority of Congress to do that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. But the gentleman knows very well that this bill is a preliminary one, similar in character to those passed for Philadelphia in 1876, for Chicago in 1893, for Nashville and New Orleans and Omaha, and the others.

Mr. BAILEY. And I resisted every one of those, and "the gentleman from Texas" knows that this is apt to be followed with exactly the same succeeding proposals that followed the preliminary bill in the case of Chicago, on which there was over $3,000,000 of expense.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman withdraw his objection if I substitute Secretary of State for President?

Mr. BAILEY. The Secretary of State would be acting for the Federal Government, the same. My contention on that point is that this authority is not needed to call attention of foreign countries to the fact. And I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I do not believe the Federal Government ought to be asked to become an advertising agent for an exposition to be held at Buffalo.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Texas does not explain how the authorization of the President called for by this bill would identify or involve the Government with it.

Mr. BAILEY. I have been unfortunate in expressing myself if I did not make myself understood by the gentleman.

Mr. CORLISS. I suggest, as the gentleman is not likely to get this bill through, I shall be obliged to call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. I object.

HOUSE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. ODELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to make investigation with all convenient speed as to the number of House employees, under what officer employed, whether appointed under statute or resolution, who are annual and who are session employees, the compensation paid them, and the necessity for their employment; and said committee, for the purpose of carrying this resolution into effect, is hereby empowered to send for persons and papers. The expense of such investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House. Said committee, upon the completion of this investigation, to report to the House by resolution or otherwise for such action as may be deemed wise in the premises.

Mr. ODELL. This is a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this resolution is offered by direction of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. ODELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems in the right direction; but there ought to be some limitation upon the expenditure.

Mr. ODELL. The expenditure will only be the expense of the stenographer. That will be the only cost; therefore there is no necessity for making any limitation, and the expense will not amount to more than $200.

Mr. DOCKERY. We have committee stenographers of the House now, and if that is all the expense, it seems to me——

Mr. ODELL. Make it not to exceed the sum of $500.

Mr. DOCKERY. Make it $250.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that amendment will be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the expense shall not exceed the sum of $500.

Mr. EVANS. Two hundred and fifty dollars.

The CLERK. Two hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope it will not result in an increase of the force.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

On motion of Mr. ODELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The call rests with the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. Res. 245. Joint resolution declaring the lands within the former Mille Lac Reservation, in Minnesota, to be subject to entry under the land laws of the United States; and

H. Res. 238. Joint resolution to readmit Nellie Grant Sartoris to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3132. An act to provide for the disposition of abandoned imported merchandise.

SENATE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 38, providing for the printing of extra copies of report on the Alaskan gold fields and the opportunities they offer for capital and labor—to the Committee on Printing.

TRANSMISSION OF THE VOTES OF ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT, ETC.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consideration the bill H. R. 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8) to amend sections 140 and 145 and repealing sections 143 and 144 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to Presidential elections.

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 140 and 145 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 140. The electors shall dispose of the certificates thus made by them in the following manner:

"First. They shall, by writing under their hands, or under the hands of a majority of them, appoint a person to forward forthwith by express to the Secretary of State, at the seat of Government, who is authorized and directed to deliver the same to the President of the Senate, one of the certificates.

"Second. Such person designated as above shall forthwith forward by the post-office, through its registry department, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, at the seat of Government, one other of the certificates.

"Third. Such person shall forthwith cause the other of the certificates to be delivered to the judge of that district in which the electors shall assemble."

"SEC. 145. Every person who, having been delegated pursuant to sections 140 and 141 to deliver and forward the certificates as therein provided, and having accepted such services, shall refuse or neglect to perform the same, shall forfeit the sum of $1,000."

SEC. 2. That sections 143 and 144 be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That the cost of the transmission of said certificates as heretofore provided shall be paid, upon proper vouchers, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HANDY. Is there a report?

Mr. CORLISS. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MITCHELL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress respectfully report that they have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8) relating to a change in the mode of transmission of the votes of electors for President and Vice-President from the several States of the Union to the seat of Government.

This measure is commended as being in the interest of economy, as there seems to be no valid reason why the returns should not be transmitted by the Post-Office Department of the Government and by express, rather than by the expensive method now in vogue. The expenses of transmitting the returns amount, under the existing law, to many thousands of dollars, without material advantage, and, in the opinion of the committee, the transmission of the votes of electors for said offices can be more safely transmitted as provided by this measure.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the floor to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] who introduced the bill.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to rectify a statute which has been upon the statute books for over one hundred years. It provides an economic way of sending to the capital of this country the official returns of the electoral college every Presidential election. This bill was introduced substantially in its present form and passed by the Fifty-fourth Congress. Every four years, as members of this House know, Presidential electors assemble in the several States and vote by ballot, and a messenger is elected to convey the returns to the Capitol at Washington.

This method now costs the Government in the neighborhood of $18,000 or $20,000 every time such a proceeding takes place. Oftentimes it brings about conflicts and quarrels among electors over the selection of a messenger. When the legislation was placed upon the statute book which we now have, we had no railroads in this country, we had no express companies, and we had poor post-office facilities and the States were few and close together. This bill saves a large sum of money every Presidential election, and conforms the statutes of to-day to the existing conditions. I do not think any further remarks are necessary upon the measure at this time. Unless some one has a question to ask, I will ask for a vote.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND) there were—ayes 69, noes 55.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement, the following personal request was granted:

To Mr. NORTON, leave of absence for ten days, on account of important business.

The result of the vote was then announced, and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of U. W. Davidson, administrator of Chatham Davidson, deceased, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of William A. Lewis against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Methodist Episcopal Church, Friends' Meeting, and public-school teachers, of Falsington, Bucks County, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws and to forbid the interstate transmission of lottery messages by telegraph—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Friends' Meeting, Methodist Episcopal Church, and public-school teachers, of Falsington, Pa., favoring the bill which forbids the sale of alcoholic liquors in Government buildings—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 13, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, a privileged report——

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if that means no evening session?

The SPEAKER. It does not necessarily. It means that whenever the House adjourns, it adjourn until Monday.

ACTS IMPOSING DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present the following concurrent resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be printed, indexed, and bound in cloth, in one volume, all of the acts, as they appear in the United States Statutes, heretofore passed by Congress imposing duties on imports; 1,000 copies of said volume to be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4703.

Mr. BRUMM. I shall have to object.

Mr. GARDNER. It will take but a very few minutes.

Mr. BRUMM. I have agreed to ask for the committee to rise at an early hour, and this will involve discussion.

Mr. GARDNER. I do not think it will.

Mr. BRUMM. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls for the regular order, which is equivalent to an objection. The Clerk will report the first bill.

GEORGE H. SPAULDING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House as unfinished business the bill (H. R. 9210) granting an increase of pension to George H. Spaulding, with Senate amendments.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. WARNER, and Mr. DRIGGS.

MARY I. VALENTINE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 584) granting a pension to Mary I. Valentine, with Senate amendment.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

F. L. BOTKIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4692) to pension F. L. Botkin, with Senate amendment.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. That concludes the unfinished private business.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRUMM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering, under the special order, reports from the Committee on Claims on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. PAYNE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar under the rule. Pursuant to a special order heretofore adopted, reports from the Committee on Claims have precedence to-day.

WILLIAM H. CROOK.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 1768) for the relief of William H. Crook.

The bill was read.

Mr. BRUMM. As the gentleman in charge of this bill is not here, I ask that it be passed over for the present without prejudice.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

JOHN A. FAIRFAX.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3093) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] who has charge of this bill is not here at present, although he was here a while ago. I ask that this bill be passed over informally for the present without prejudice.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

J. C. RUDD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 637) for the benefit of J. C. Rudd.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay James C. Rudd, of Owensboro, Ky., the sum of $600, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the amount due said Rudd for the rent of a post-office building in the city of Owensboro, Ky.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. I am ready to make an explanation if anybody desires it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Let the report be read.

Mr. CLARDY. The bill simply provides for the payment of rent of a post-office for three years, the money allowed having never been collected from the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asks to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. CLARDY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 637) for the benefit of J. C. Rudd, submit the following report:

The proof in this case shows that J. C. Rudd, of Owensboro, Ky., was the owner of a building in said city which was used and occupied by the postmaster at Owensboro from 1861 to 1875 for the distribution of the United States mail. Only for the latter part of this time, and after the office had been moved into a new building erected by said Rudd for a post-office and banking house (one room being especially fitted up with letter boxes, etc., for the use of the post-office), was there any special agreement as to the rental between said Rudd and Jesse Moore, the postmaster. It was then fixed at $300 per annum, none of which has been paid.

Your committee attach hereto letters from the Post-Office Department in relation to this claim, and ask that they be printed as a part of this report.

Your committee is of the opinion that the proof in this case, with the statements of the Post-Office Department, clearly show that the claimant is entitled to $600 for three years' rental for his property, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. LOUD. I believe the Clerk has not read the whole of the report.

Mr. CLARDY. There are appended to the report some letters from the Post-Office authorities showing that this money for those three years' rent has never been paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], as the Chair understands, asks that the exhibits appended to the report be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 20, 1896.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the the receipt of your favor of the 10th instant relative to a claim for rent of premises occupied by the post-office at Owensboro, Ky., from 1861 to 1875, which has been presented by Mr. J. C. Rudd, and to inform you, in reply thereto, that prior to April, 1865, the said post-office belonged to the fourth class; that from that date until July 1, 1872, it belonged to the third class, and that since the latter date it has belonged to the second class.

There has never been any provision made by Congress for payment of rent by the Government for premises occupied by post-offices of the fourth class, nor was there any authority in law under which the Department could allow for rent of premises occupied by post-offices of the third class until October 1, 1874, when the act of July 24, 1888, became operative.

Upon the advancement of this post-office to the second class (July 1, 1872) an allowance of $200 per annum was made by the Department for payment of rent for premises in which the said post-office was then located. This allowance was unchanged until April 1, 1879.

Very respectfully,

WM. L. WILSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. T. M. MAHON,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 3, 1896.

SIR: I send you herewith for your information a copy of a letter which I have this day addressed to the Hon. J. D. CLARDY.

Very respectfully,

F. H. JONES,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. T. M. MAHON,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

APRIL 3, 1896.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 31st ultimo, I beg to inform you that I find by an examination of the records of the Auditor's office that the late postmaster at Owensboro, Ky., was not charged with any expenditure from the allowance made by the Department for rent of premises occupied by the said post-office prior to July 1, 1875.

Very respectfully,

____ ____,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. J. D. CLARDY,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CLARDY. In reference to this bill, I simply wish to say that no claim is made for any time except from 1872 to 1875, during which there was $200 a year allowed for the rent of this post-office, which the Post-Office Department here says was never paid. This bill proposes that the $600 due for the rent of that post-office and never paid shall now be paid. I ask a vote on the motion that the bill be laid aside to be favorably reported.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to hear from the gentleman some explanation as to why this money was not paid. This seems to be an extraordinary condition. The allowance was made; and why was it not paid in this particular case?

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman who occupied the position of postmaster died about the expiration of the term for which this rental is due, and he never made any application for payment. Why, I am not able to say. Possibly it was because that post-office had recently been changed to a second-class office; and the postmaster might not have been informed by the Department that he was entitled to make this claim for rent. I know of no other reason why the application was not made except the conditions which existed at that time.

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman know exactly or about what time this man died—in 1875, 1876, or 1877?

Mr. CLARDY. I can not tell the exact date, but my understanding from the affidavits in the case which are now on file is that he died about the expiration of those three years, and his term as postmaster expired about the same time. An affidavit from his son states that the postmaster never made any application for this amount and the money has never been paid. I do not think there is any doubt about the justice of the claim.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a suggestion or two in regard to this bill, and I will not take more than a few minutes.

The House must have ascertained, I think, from the reading of the report and affidavits that this is a case in which somebody in pawing around at the Post-Office Department has discovered that this office was entitled to an allowance of $200 a year rent from 1872 to 1875.

And now they come to Congress and make a proposition that the Government of the United States shall pay a certain sum, to whom? To one J. C. Rudd, a man who never had any connection with any contract of this character or any transactions with the Departments of the Government which would justify the claim. No allegation of that fact is made anywhere, as far as I have been able to discover, and nothing is presented to show that he ever had a claim to file against the Government of any character for the rent of a building, or that he had any dealing with the Government in any respect.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts with which we have to deal as they appear here of record? This building was occupied as a post-office in the city of Owensboro from 1861 to 1875, and used for the distribution of the United States mails.

Mr. CLARDY. I would like to correct the gentleman. The facts do not show that.

Mr. LOUD. I am simply citing the report.

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman is mistaken, because it is only for the latter part of this time and after the office had been moved into a new building, specially prepared for the post-office, that the claim was made. The building had been specially built and arranged for a post-office. He had occupied the other building during that time, but no allowance was made for the payment of rent on that building, and no demand for payment has been made.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I accept the correction of the gentleman in that regard. I was only reading what appeared of record in the report here. It may be that no claim has been made for any rent prior to the date mentioned. But it does appear of record, and that, I presume, will not be denied, that one J. C. Rudd was the owner of the building which was used and occupied by the postmaster at Owensboro from 1861 to 1875 for the distribution of the United States mails. Now, it appears that some time about the last-named period, in 1871 or 1872, a new building was erected and the post-office was moved into it. Now, if there was any agreement as to the rental to be paid at that time or at any previous time or for the future, it appears nowhere of record.

There is not a word of evidence to show that the postmaster took the post-office into that new building under any possible agreement between him and the owner of the building; but, on the contrary, it is manifest that there was no agreement, because if there had been this sum of money would have been paid before. It is altogether likely that when this building was occupied as a post-office building it was occupied just as a great many other buildings of the same character are occupied for such purposes; that is to say, because it improves or enhances the value of adjacent property and is an advantage to the locality.

Mr. CLARDY. I would like again to be permitted to correct the gentleman.

Mr. LOUD. Very well.

Mr. CLARDY. The report states positively that an agreement was made at the rate of $300 a year for the rent of the building.

Mr. LOUD. There is nothing whatever in the report to show it. There is merely a statement, which does not pretend to give dates or facts.

Mr. CLARDY. There is something, however, in the affidavits attached to the application for payment, which are before the House, to show the action of the parties in making the contract.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky by whom this contract was made—by the Government through its proper authorities with the owner of the building, or by the postmaster himself?

Mr. CLARDY. By the man owning the building and the postmaster.

Mr. HEPBURN. That would not place any obligation on the Government, in the absence of the right of the party to make the contract.

Mr. CLARDY. I do not want to mislead anybody or to permit any doubt to rest upon the minds of the members as to the exact status of this case; but, in my own judgment, there is no doubt whatever as to the validity of the claim.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, whatever may have been the intention of the parties in making this agreement, or whatever may have been the right of the postmaster, it is evident from the language of the report itself, if that is to be construed as embodying the evidence before the committee, that there was no compensation due to this party except for the latter part of the term and after the post-office had been moved to this new building.

The report says in reference to this new building, that one room was especially fitted up with letter boxes, etc., for the use of the post-office. Now, was there any special agreement as to the rental between said Rudd and Jesse Moore, the postmaster? And that is the only reference I see to any special agreement; that is to say, there was no agreement previous to that.

Mr. CLARDY. Well, we do not claim anything before that.

Mr. LOUD. Now, it has been the custom, as I have said before, in some of the larger towns throughout the country to donate property to the Government for postal purposes because of the fact that the adjacent property is thereby largely enhanced in value. I might instance a syndicate of landowners in my own city, where certain premises were leased to the Government at a nominal rental of $1 a year, light and fuel included, in order to secure the post-office in a certain portion of the city. Of course such rental was not made for profit. It was not made because the rental afforded any approximation of the value of the property. That would be absurd to assume. But it was done simply for the purpose of securing the location of the post-office at that point.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a case that has been pending, as I understand, for a great many years. There are suspicious circumstances connected with it, and especially is it suspicious that they should come to Congress and endeavor to collect from the Government this amount of money for this rental after all of these years. But, be that as it may, there is nothing to show that there was ever an agreement between this man and the Government for the payment of this money. I am quite positive after the reading of the report that there was none. I can not, therefore, view the introduction of this proposition other than as a measure, as I said before, which proposes to take from the Treasury a certain amount of money which somebody at this late date presumably discovers to be due. Somebody has found out that this amount was not paid, and although the claim has lain dormant for all of these years and no attempt has been made to secure the payment, the account is now resurrected and brought here for action by Congress.

Mr. CLARDY. I want to say to the gentleman that he is entirely mistaken. There is not a word of truth in the statement, so far as this case is concerned.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I am only quoting from the records as they appear.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to know what are the facts in this case. As I understand the case from a hurried reading of the letter from the Postmaster-General, Mr. Wilson, there is but a slight basis for the claim. I may misapprehend the basis on which it rests.

Mr. LOUD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. This office was a fourth-class office originally.

Mr. CLARDY. Yes.

Mr. DINGLEY. It then became a third-class office.

Mr. CLARDY. Yes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Postmaster-General Wilson says in his communication that prior to October 1, 1888, third and fourth class post-offices had no allowances for rent.

Mr. CLARDY. That is true, nor do we make any such claim.

Mr. LOUD. According to this report it was in the second class during the period for which they claim this $200. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. DINGLEY. What years is this claim for?

Mr. CLARDY. From 1872 to 1875. He states emphatically that from 1872 to 1875, $200 a year was allowed by the Department for the payment of rent for the premises in which this post-office was located. There is no doubt about the fact that the Government set aside $200 a year for the payment of this rent, and there is no doubt about the fact that it never was paid. There is no doubt that this gentleman is entitled to it as compensation for the rent of the building in which the post-office was located, because he never received anything. These are the whole facts in this case. What is the use in gentlemen coming up here and talking in the way they do about a little claim of this kind, when if they would think for five minutes and put a little common sense into these things they would be satisfied that it was a just and honest claim? If this is not an honest claim, then we never had one in this Congress since I have been here.

Mr. DINGLEY. I notice by the communication of the Postmaster-General to whom this claim was referred that there is no statement by him that this amount was not paid during that time.

Mr. CLARDY. If you will read the latter part of that you will see that it says:

> In reply to your letter of the 31st ultimo, I beg to inform you that I find by an examination of the records of the Auditor's Office that the late postmaster at Owensboro, Ky., was not charged with any expenditure from the allowance made by the Department for rent of premises occupied by the said post-office prior to July 1, 1875.

Mr. DINGLEY. But I am looking at the communication of the Postmaster-General to whom this was sent, and who was expected to present all the facts.

Mr. CLARDY. This that I have read was from the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. LOUD. That communication appears to be from the First Assistant, but it bears no signature.

Mr. CLARDY. It is a copy. I have the original. The letter was directed to me, and in a letter to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], which is printed just above that, you will see it says:

> POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
> OFFICE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
> Washington, D. C., April 3, 1896.
> SIR: I send you herewith for your information a copy of a letter which I have this day addressed to the Hon. J. D. CLARDY.
> Very respectfully,
> F. H. JONES.
> First Assistant Postmaster-General.
> Hon. T. M. MAHON,
> Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

Mr. LOUD. Was the letter ever signed?

Mr. CLARDY. The copy I received was signed.

Mr. PERKINS. Did the postmaster pay no rent to this Mr. Rudd during that time?

Mr. CLARDY. He never has paid for those three years.

Mr. PERKINS. The postmaster paid no rent to him during that time?

Mr. CLARDY. No; and the postmaster died insolvent, and unless this man gets it in this way he will never get it at all.

Mr. BRUCKER. Has this claim been passed upon by the Court of Claims?

Mr. CLARDY. It has never been in the Court of Claims that I know of, but it has been in Congress for fifteen or twenty years, I do not know just how long, and it has been favorably acted upon by committees two or three times and passed by the House once or twice. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion of Mr. CLARDY was agreed to.

JOHN A. FAIRFAX.

Mr. BRUMM. I now ask the Clerk to go back to the bill (H. R. 3093) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] is now here, and he has charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks now to take up the bill H. R. 3093. If there is no objection, the committee will return to that bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia, $502, being the amount found due the said Fairfax by the Court of Claims of the United States April 9, 1894, from the United States, for work and labor in building roads and streets in said District, under the late board of public works therein, the said sum to be taken and accepted by the said claimant as in full for said services: Provided, That the said sum shall be paid from the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated by the act approved June 20, 1878, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," to pay the workingmen employed in the public improvements under the late board of public works of the District of Columbia, or the contractors of the same.

Mr. RIXEY. The report in this case is very brief, and sets out so well the facts pertaining to this bill that I will ask the Clerk to read the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3093) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia, make a favorable report thereon.

The bill was referred to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and by them to the auditor. The auditor reports that—

"Looking at this question merely from a legal standpoint, and as an ordinary claim, I could not conclude otherwise than against the liability of the Government; but there is another view of the matter which, upon a reconsideration of the subject, I feel constrained from a sense of justice to bring to your attention."

The auditor goes on to explain that when the board of public works was summarily abolished in 1874, many laborers who had worked for the contractors of the board were unpaid. By the act of June 23, 1874, the sum of $75,000 was appropriated to pay these laborers, the amount thus paid being deducted in the final settlement from the amount found to be due the contractors. It was afterwards ascertained that a large number of persons who had labored for, or furnished teams to, the contractors had not been paid in cases where the contractors themselves had been settled with in full, and Congress appropriated $75,000 June 20, 1878, for the relief of all such claimants. This appropriation was a gratuity, pure and simple, to the workingmen.

Mr. Fairfax presented his claim under this act, but on the ground that it was for subsistence furnished the contractor's laborers, and not for labor nor for hauling for the contractor, it was rejected. A technical reading of the letter of the law justified the rejection of this claim, but the intent and spirit of the statute would as clearly have sanctioned its allowance.

"Believing thus, I have the honor to recommend that Congress be asked to take such action as will make available a sufficient amount of the unexpended balance of the appropriation aforesaid to settle the claim under consideration, and that the accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and directed to allow the same."

The claim has been submitted to the Court of Claims, and by them has been reported at the amount stated in the bill, namely, $502.

Mr. RIXEY. I will now ask the Clerk also to read the letters attached to the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 9, 1896.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a report of the auditor of the District of Columbia as their response to your reference to them of Senate bill 1604, "for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia." The Commissioners concur in the auditor's recommendation.

Very respectfully, JOHN W. ROSS,
President Board of Commissioners of District of Columbia.

Senator JAMES MCMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 8, 1896.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to return herewith Senate bill 1604, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, "for the relief of John A. Fairfax," referred to me, with the following report:

When this claim was considered by me in a report made to the Commissioners February 15, 1895, I took the ground that inasmuch as the record of the board of public works showed that Contractor Shrider was settled with in full by J. C. Lay, auditor of the board, on the 21st of March, 1873, and Mr. Fairfax did not file his claim against Shrider until the 28th of March, 1872, a full week thereafter, that he had no just ground of action against the Government.

As opposed to the record evidence, Mr. Fairfax produced the affidavits of J. C. Lay, auditor, and Thomas J. Scott, messenger, in the office of Treasurer Magruder. Lay, in his affidavit, made in 1886, averred that there were $2,000 due to Shrider on the day Mr. Fairfax presented his claim, and that he so informed Treasurer Magruder at the time; and Scott swore, in 1892, that he remembered this statement having been made to Magruder by Lay in the presence of Fairfax. In the issue thus presented between Lay's record as auditor and Lay's affidavit from memory thirteen years thereafter, I accepted the former as the more reliable.

Looking at this question merely from a legal standpoint and as an ordinary claim, I could not conclude otherwise than against the liability of the Government; but there is another view of the matter which, upon a reconsideration of the subject, I feel constrained from a sense of justice to bring to your attention.

When the board of public works was summarily abolished in 1874, many laborers who had worked for the contractors of the board were unpaid. By the act of June 23, 1874, the sum of $75,000 was appropriated to pay these laborers, the amount thus paid being deducted in the final settlement from the amount found to be due the contractors. It was afterwards ascertained that a large number of persons who had labored for, or furnished teams to, the contractors had not been paid in cases where the contractors themselves had been settled with in full, and Congress appropriated $75,000 June 20, 1878, for the relief of all such claimants.

This appropriation, it will be seen, on the part of the Government, was a gratuity, pure and simple, to the workingmen. Mr. Fairfax presented his claim under this act; but on the ground that it was for subsistence furnished the contractor's laborers, and not for labor nor for hauling for the contractor, it was rejected.

A technical reading of the letter of the law justified the rejection of this claim, but the intent and spirit of the statute would as clearly have sanctioned its allowance.

Believing thus, I have the honor to recommend that Congress be asked to take such action as will make available a sufficient amount of the unexpended balance of the appropriation aforesaid to settle the claim under consideration, and that the accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized and directed to allow the same.

Very respectfully,
J. T. PETTY,
Auditor District of Columbia.

The COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, the amount of this claim has been passed upon and ascertained by the Court of Claims, and it was recommended by the auditor of the District of Columbia and by the Commissioners of the District. I think there is no objection to it; and if no one has anything to say, I shall move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is the most astonishing claim that I have ever heard of yet being presented in this House. If I have caught correctly the intent of it from the reading of these papers, it is about this: A was a contractor to do certain work prior to 1873 in the city. B was a laborer employed by A. C is a groceryman that furnished supplies to B. Now, the Government has paid A. A did not pay B; but the Government then appropriated $75,000 to pay B. Now C, who is a groceryman, I take it, or furnished supplies of some kind to the laborers, comes in and insists that he shall be paid. The Government has twice paid the laborer, and now we are to pay the grocer, C, for supplies furnished the laborer, who failed to pay. Is not that a fair statement of the case?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not think it is.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is just as I gathered it from these papers. Now, if that is true, I submit, gentlemen, is not this a most extraordinary claim to be made, and is not this a wonderful comment upon the Committee on Claims, and another wonderful comment upon the Court of Claims? There can certainly be no responsibility upon the Government of the United States in any event to pay this bill.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing as to whether the criticism of the gentleman from Iowa upon the Court of Claims is just or not; but I do know that his criticism as to the Committee on Claims is absolutely gratuitous and without foundation. If there is a committee in this House that works hard and gets little credit, it is the Committee on Claims. [Applause.] It is a committee upon which no member of this House desires to serve; and I would not be serving there now except that, being a new member, I did not know what it was when I was assigned to that committee. [Laughter.] It is a committee, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen criticise and find fault with when in many instances they know nothing of the circumstances. Now, in this case this claim is to pay John A. Fairfax, a citizen of this District, a man who furnished supplies to the laborers who were employed upon the public works, and expected to be paid his bill when the works were completed and when the Government paid for that work.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. RIXEY. Let me get through.

Mr. HEPBURN. How did he expect to get paid? Was there any obligation on the part of the Government to pay? He expected payment from the men to whom he furnished the supplies, and there was a kind of gratuity given them.

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know what the law of this District is on this point. Whether the law would allow him to get his pay out of the Government on giving notice to the Government that he had furnished the supplies to these men, I can not say, but it is the law in most of the States, and I suppose it is the law here. When this work was partially completed, the board of public works was abolished by act of Congress. These laborers were not paid, the people who furnished the supplies were not paid, and Congress appropriated $75,000 to pay these laborers and pay these claims.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, the gentleman remembers that that was a pure gratuity.

Mr. RIXEY. That may be.

Mr. HEPBURN. To pay the laborers.

Mr. RIXEY. That may be. Instead of criticising the Court of Claims, the gentleman had better criticise the Congress of which he is a member for passing the bill to give this gratuity to the laborers. It was not a legal demand against the Government. But Congress thought proper to appropriate the money to pay these people, and instead of a criticism on the Committee on Claims it ought to be directed to Congress if that appropriation is an improper one. Fairfax presented a claim after the appropriation was made. It was rejected by the accounting officers, and the auditor of the District of Columbia says:

A technical reading of the letter of the law justified the rejection of this claim, but the intent and spirit of the statute would as clearly have sanctioned its allowance.

The auditor reports that the same reasoning which moved Congress to appropriate this $75,000 for the laborers was equally applicable to an appropriation for the people who had furnished these supplies.

It was a gratuity in either case. The appropriation has not been exhausted, the laborers have now been paid, and why should not Mr. Fairfax be paid for the supplies furnished by him?

Mr. BRUCKER. After paying the contractor and laborers, how much remains of the $75,000?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not know; but it is enough to pay this bill.

Mr. BRUCKER. Does this bill provide that it must be paid out of that balance?

Mr. RIXEY. This can not be paid at all unless it comes out of the unexpended balance. It seems to me that this bill, having been considered by the auditor of the District of Columbia and by the Commissioners, and recommended by them all, and being a meritorious and just claim, stands on the same footing as the claim of the laborers. The money is in the Treasury to pay it. I submit that it ought to be paid.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not understand that a judgment has been rendered by the Court of Claims. I understand nothing more has been done by the court than to say that if there were a liability at all this would be the amount of the liability of the United States. So much for the Court of Claims.

With reference to the committee, I judged from this claim as to the action of the committee. I believe that this action is absolutely indefensible; that there is no warrant upon the part of that committee to report to this House that this sum of $502 is in any manner due from the United States. The gentleman admits it. The gentleman admits that even the laborers, under the law of the District, had no mechanics' lien in this particular instance, because he says the $75,000 appropriated by Congress was a gratuity. What becomes of your mechanics' lien and your suit, under which claim could be made, if the payment made by Congress was an entire gratuity?

But the gentleman now wants to go a step farther. While he admits in that admission that the mechanic himself had no lien, he now claims that he who furnished subsistence to the laborers without a lien has some kind of a moral or equitable lien claim against the Government of the United States. Now, if the gentleman wants to put this simply on the ground of a gratuity, because the Government is rich and can pay and this man is poor and has not received his pay, that is one thing. If he is ready to put it on that ground alone, well and good. But when he puts it on the ground of moral or equitable claim, that is an entirely different thing. I say that he can not find a statute in the United States that carries the law of mechanics' lien as far as he is now insisting upon. You can find it nowhere. Mind you, these are not supplies furnished to the contractor; it is simply subsistence furnished to the laborers in the employ of the contractor. Where do you find any authority for stating that the laws of all the States recognize the validity of claims like this?

Mr. Chairman, it may be that the House in its large ideas of refined equity may pay this claim, but I insist that there is no legal right, and I believe there is no moral claim. I believe there is no justice whatever in it, and that every other creditor of every laborer that works for the United States or for a contractor of the United States has the same claim upon the Government as this vendor of groceries.

Mr. RIXEY. As to the judgment of the Court of Claims, it did ascertain the amount due. Of course the court could not go further than that, and I place this claim upon equitable and moral grounds as due to Mr. Fairfax. Congress in 1874 appropriated $75,000 to pay these people, and the gentlemen who voted for that appropriation must have considered that there was some equitable ground upon which to base the appropriation.

Mr. HEPBURN. You need not "shake your gory locks at me." I did not vote for it.

Mr. RIXEY. Then direct your criticism to those who did. The equitable claim of these people arises in this way: The board of public works, which was created by Congress, was abolished by act of Congress—abolished before the work was completed and before the laborers were paid, and before Fairfax, who is now presenting this claim, was paid. Congress had the right to abolish the board of public works, but when it exercised that right as it did and stopped the work before it was completed, I maintain it was its duty to appropriate the money to pay the people who were thus deprived of the means of securing their pay.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RIXEY. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Would you not carry this a little further? Suppose, now, the retail vender of groceries has not paid the wholesaler, has not the wholesaler a lien of the same character upon the Government?

Mr. RIXEY. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is unnecessary to consider questions of that sort which do not arise in this case. My friend stated that the laborers had all been paid twice.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; I said the contractor had been paid and the laborers had been paid.

Mr. RIXEY. Let me see if you are right in that. The auditor says:

When the board of public works was summarily abolished in 1874, many laborers who had worked for the contractors of the board were unpaid. By the act of June 23, 1874, the sum of $75,000 was appropriated to pay these laborers, the amount thus paid being deducted in the final settlement from the amount found to be due the contractors. It was afterwards ascertained that a large number of persons who had labored for or furnished teams to the contractors had not been paid in cases where the contractors themselves had been settled with in full, and Congress appropriated $75,000, June 20, 1878, for the relief of all such claimants.

It therefore appears that they have not been paid twice. It was afterwards ascertained that a large number of persons had not been paid, and the sum of $75,000 was appropriated by Congress. This bill provides that the claim is to be paid out of the money already so appropriated, and being recommended both by the auditor for the District of Columbia and by the Commissioners of the District—officials who ought to be and doubtless are familiar with all the circumstances—I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 36, noes 30.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN W. BRANHAM.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2425) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Branham, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas John W. Branham, late an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service, contracted yellow fever while performing his duty as assistant surgeon in an infected city, and having died of yellow fever at his post of duty on the 20th day of August, 1893: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the money not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of John W. Branham the sum of $4,160, being the amount of salary and allowances for two years.

Mr. YOST. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. YOST) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2425) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Branham, having carefully considered the same, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Your committee find the following to be facts:

The late Dr. John W. Branham was an assistant surgeon in the United States Marine-Hospital Service, and was, on the 29th day of July, 1893, stationed at the marine hospital, Stapleton, N. Y.

The yellow fever had broken out at Brunswick, Ga., and the United States authorities had established quarantine regulations there.

On the 20th of July, 1893, the President of the United States, without any previous notice to Dr. Branham, under section 3, national quarantine act, approved February 15, 1893, detailed Dr. John W. Branham to proceed at once to Brunswick, Ga., and take charge of the port, and execute the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury under said act. He immediately proceeded to Brunswick, Ga., and on the 20th of August, 1893, died of yellow fever, contracted while in discharge of the duties assigned him.

Your committee, while opposed to a civil pension roll in almost any form, think that a mere statement of the facts is sufficient to convince every patriotic citizen that the Government owes no higher duty to any of its citizens than it does to Mrs. Branham, widow of John W. Branham, whom we find is now a resident of the city of Baltimore, with two infant children, and penniless; and while we do not recommend that she be placed upon the pension roll, we see no reason why the act of Congress of May 4, 1882, which grants to the families of keepers and surfmen in the Life-Saving Service an amount equal to two years' pay of said keepers or surfmen in the event of death in the line of duty, should not be extended to his family, and this is what is proposed by the bill which we favorably recommend.

Your committee fearlessly blaze the way, as indicated in this report, because we think it an act of simple justice, and but poorly carrying out the implied obligation upon the Government to relieve the wants of the wife and children of one who heroically faced a danger fully equal to that encountered by the soldier in time of war.

Mr. YOST. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. I should like to have some explanation of this bill. There seems to be a new departure proclaimed here. The committee is presenting a new way, apparently, to get money out of the Treasury.

Mr. YOST. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of explaining this measure, I have had the report read. Dr. Branham was an assistant surgeon in the United States marine hospital at New York. He was ordered to Brunswick, Ga., to take charge of the yellow-fever station there. Entering upon that duty, he contracted yellow fever and died in the line of service. His family can receive no pension. This bill proposes to pay to his heirs the amount of his salary and allowances for two years—the same that has been paid to surfmen who have died in the service. That is the whole case. In the Surgeon-General's report the gentleman will find the following:

In accordance with the above instructions, Assistant Surgeon Branham assumed charge of the Brunswick quarantine July 28, 1893. I will say here that he was chosen for this particular duty by reason of the fact that he was a native of Georgia, and therefore less likely to encounter the local prejudice which might be excited by the Government's assuming charge of this quarantine. A more important reason, however, was the fact that he had had previous quarantine experience, was a man of very unusual mental endowment, and with a marked stability of character and sound judgment, which made him particularly fitted for the trying position in which he was to be placed.

Dr. Branham, as stated, assumed charge of the Brunswick quarantine on July 28, 1893; on August 10, 1893, his illness was reported to the Bureau, and on August 20, 1893, he died of yellow fever while attended by two regular officers of the Marine-Hospital Service. He leaves a wife and an infant child.

The relief requested by this bill finds a precedent in the act of Congress, May 4, 1882, which grants to the families of keepers and surfmen in the Life-Saving Service an amount equal to two years' pay of said keeper or surfman in the event of death in the line of duty.

I earnestly urge the passage of this bill, leaving it to others to give expression to the implied obligations upon the Government to relieve the wants of the wife and child of one who heroically faced a danger fully equal to that encountered by the soldier in time of war.

I beg leave in closing this letter to transmit herewith an extract from the annual report of this Service for the year 1893, giving some previously expressed views upon this matter.

I have the honor to remain, very respectfully, yours,

WALTER WYMAN,
Supervising Surgeon-General, Marine-Hospital Service.

This man was ordered into the very jaws of death; he obeyed his orders and died in the line of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 1474, to refer the claim of Joseph W. Parish to the Secretary of the Treasury for examination and payment of any balance found due, and also House bill No. 4295, for the relief of William C. Dodge, be passed over for the present without prejudice.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

WILLIAM H. CROOK.

Mr. BRUMM. I ask that House bill No. 1768, which was passed over earlier in the day on account of the absence of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR], be now taken up.

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 1768) for the relief of William H. Crook was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Crook, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, as compensation for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents for the fiscal years of 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, inclusive, and which services were additional to his regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing agent, the amount being the same as was formerly paid for such service.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. MINOR. Yes; let the report be read; it is short.

The report (by Mr. MINOR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1768) hereto attached for the relief of W. H. Crook, having considered the same and the accompanying papers, submit the following report:

This bill, amended to $4,000 instead of $6,000, has twice passed the Senate—once April 2, 1884, and once July 8, 1886.

It has been reported on favorably by the Senate committees heretofore—in the Forty-eighth Congress, first session, Report No. 144, by Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, and recommending that the bill be amended from $6,000 to $4,000, and by Senator GRAY, of Delaware, January 13, 1886, Report No. 39, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, which report reads as follows:

[Senate Report No. 39, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 100) for the relief of William H. Crook, having considered the same and accompanying papers, submit the following report:

The committee find the facts to be as stated in Senate Report No. 144, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, which said report is hereto annexed and made a part of this report, and is as follows:

"By the act of July 4, 1836 (Rev. Stat., section 450), Congress authorized the President to appoint a secretary with the title of "secretary to the President to sign land patents," at a salary of $1,500 per annum. This officer was continued down to 1878, having no other duty imposed upon him except to sign, in the President's name, the patents issued by the Government on the sales and grants of public lands. Under the act above cited, this officer, although in name a secretary to the President, was in fact, and was recognized by the law as, an officer of the Land Department, and during the greater part at least of the period above stated he occupied a room and desk in the General Land Office, having no duties to perform and no place at the Executive Mansion.

"By act of June 20, 1878 (20 Stat., page 183), the appropriation for payment of the salary of this officer was omitted, and the President was directed to designate one of his executive clerks to perform the duty of signing land patents.

"Mr. William H. Crook was then, and had been since 1871, an executive clerk, acting as disbursing officer of the Executive Mansion, and also in charge of the reception room. All of these duties he has continued to perform down to the present time. In addition to them he was designated by the President, July 1, 1878, as secretary to sign land patents, and since that time all the patents issued on sales and grants of public lands have passed under his hand.

The number of patents issued since July 1, 1878, has averaged about 40,000 each year and has steadily increased. The labor of the secretary in executing same has been very onerous, each patent having two signatures attached and all having to be checked off and accounted for. On account of his regular duties at the Executive Mansion Mr. Crook has been compelled to perform most of this extra work of signing patents out of office hours; but, notwithstanding this fact, we are assured that the work has been done more promptly and efficiently than when an officer was charged with the performance of this duty alone. In fact, Mr. Crook has, in addition to the other duties of his position, since July 1, 1878, performed, without compensation in any form, labor for which from 1836 to 1878 the Government paid $1,500 per annum.

We attach hereto, as exhibits, letters from Hon. J. A. Williamson, late Commissioner of the General Land Office, and Hon. W. K. Rogers, private secretary to President Hayes, both of whom, from their official positions, were familiar with the labor performed by Mr. Crook and the time and manner of its execution.

It seems to your committee that he is in justice and equity entitled to a fair compensation.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 30, 1881.

SIR: Your note of this date is at hand. I fully agree with you that you should have extra compensation for signing land patents. Before this additional duty was assigned to you the President's secretary to sign land patents was allowed $1,500 a year for that service, and I think the service was worth the amount. The responsibility of the position, in addition to the clerical labor, is very considerable, and should be paid for. I think you are fully entitled to extra compensation, and sincerely hope that it may be given you.

Very sincerely, yours,

J. A. WILLIAMSON.

Col. W. H. CROOK,
Executive Mansion, City.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 13, 1881.

DEAR SIR: I entirely agree with you that you should receive extra compensation for signing land patents. During the four years while I was private secretary to the President your regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing officer were sufficient to keep you employed all the time during office hours. The additional service you rendered in signing land patents was necessarily performed out of office hours, the greater part of it night work. Upon the omission by Congress (the act of June 20, 1878) of the usual provision for the salary of the secretary of the President to sign land patents, and the requirement that the President should designate one of the executive clerks to discharge the duties of the office, you were selected by President Hayes because of your familiarity with the work, having temporarily filled the position during the illness of the secretary appointed for the purpose by President Grant. It is a laborious and responsible position, and the work was carefully, diligently, and faithfully performed. I earnestly trust Congress will allow you full compensation for the service rendered.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. ROGERS.

W. H. CROOK,
Executive Clerk to the President.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, June 26, 1884.

DEAR SIR: It gives me pleasure to say in behalf of Mr. William H. Crook that while in the Senate I had occasion to examine into the merits of his claim for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents, and that I considered it a proper claim and favored it at that time. I think Mr. Crook is justly entitled to the compensation allowed by the bill as it passed the Senate in April last.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER.

Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN,
Chairman of the Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

[Forty-eighth Congress, first session. In the House of Representatives. May 31, 1884.—Ordered to be printed.]

An act for the relief of William H. Crook.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Crook, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, as compensation for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents for the fiscal years of 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, inclusive, and which services were additional to his regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing agent, the amount being the same as was formerly paid for such service.

Passed the Senate April 2, 1884.

Attest: ANSON G. MCCOOK, Secretary.

On the foregoing report the following bill was passed (S. 100, Report No. 3897):

An act for the relief of William H. Crook.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Crook, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, as compensation for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents for the fiscal years of 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, inclusive, and which services were additional to his regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing agent.

Passed the Senate July 8, 1886.

Attest: ANSON G. MCCOOK, Secretary.

In addition to the above, your committee herewith submit a copy of a letter of ex-President Hayes, the original submitted for inspection and comparison, the original letter being with W. H. Crook, the claimant. It is as follows:

FREMONT, OHIO, January 26, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter asking my opinion of the bill for your relief now pending in the House. You performed faithfully and well double duty after you began to sign land patents. The latter work was done outside of office hours, and you are in fairness entitled to be paid for it. I hope and expect Congress will pass your bill. It is an act of simple justice.

Sincerely,

R. B. HAYES.

W. H. CROOK, Executive Mansion.

These services were performed for over four years and nothing has been paid therefor.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be passed.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR] will be entirely content with an amendment fixing the allowance in this case at $2,000.

Mr. MINOR. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri that a bill for the payment of $6,000 on account of these services has just passed the Senate.

Mr. DOCKERY. The payment of $1,000 a year for the performance of the simple duty of signing land patents would seem to be largely in the nature of a gratuity. I do not think the allowance should exceed $2,000.

Mr. MINOR. From 1836 to 1878 the Government paid $1,200 a year for this service.

Mr. HANDY. One thousand five hundred dollars a year according to the report.

Mr. MINOR. Yes, $1,500; and it has paid $1,200 ever since Mr. Crook ceased to perform this duty.

Mr. DOCKERY. But this officer has been paid handsomely for a long time; he has been receiving, I believe, $3,800 a year, which he is now getting—possibly not so much.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Two thousand two hundred dollars.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Ohio corrects me, $2,200. Mr. Crook is a very accomplished officer, and I think that a compensation of $2,000 for this additional service would be about right.

Mr. MINOR. In my judgment, if this claim is a meritorious one, Mr. Crook ought to receive at least a thousand dollars a year for performing a duty for which, prior to his service $1,500 a year was paid, and since he has quit doing this duty, $1,200 a year. Now, I ask what possible ground there can be for the refusal of Congress to pay for the service which has undoubtedly been rendered, and which has been regarded, as I have shown by the statements of officials of the Government, as useful and necessary, and which required a large amount of time on the part of the person who rendered it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I was waiving all questions of that nature and proposing a compromise. It occurred to me that in order to close out the matter and square the books, as far as this account is concerned, that $2,000 would be a satisfactory and equitable adjustment.

Mr. MINOR. Why, Mr. Chairman, the patents signed by this official amounted to between 40,000 and 50,000 a year, and at the lowest estimate he had to sign not less than 133 a day. Does any man think it is more than justice, after all these years to pay him a trifling sum for that service?

Mr. HANDY. But let me suggest to the gentleman——

Mr. MINOR. Certainly.

Mr. HANDY. He was only working according to the law in the discharge of a duty assigned to him.

Mr. MINOR. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. This was an additional duty which he was called upon to perform.

Mr. HANDY. Was it not his duty, under the statute, to perform exactly the work he was doing? According to the report of the committee this work was his statutory duty.

Mr. MINOR. No, sir. He was appointed for an entirely different service.

Mr. HANDY. But this duty was assigned to him.

Mr. MINOR. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state the facts. He was one of the executive clerks, selected by the President, and had certain duties to perform. By the act of July, 1876, the President was authorized to appoint a secretary with the title of "Secretary to the President to sign land patents," and whose salary was fixed at $1,600 per annum. But this official, the beneficiary of this bill, had nothing whatever to do but to act as disbursing clerk at the White House. This additional duty of signing land warrants was assigned to him subsequently.

Mr. HANDY. That is not the situation disclosed by the record, as I understand it. Here is the situation, as I gather it from the report of the committee: When Congress refused in 1878 to appropriate money to pay an official for the purpose of signing land patents, it also required the President to designate one of his executive clerks to perform that duty. He did so, and assigned Mr. Crook to that duty. So that whatever the gentleman may say, it became the duty of that clerk under the law to do the work assigned to him. According to the report which has been read here, he did nothing more than it was his full duty under the law to do. It does not seem that he is entitled now to extra pay any more than other persons who perform a duty which is assigned by the law may be entitled to extra pay.

Mr. MINOR. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. HANDY. In what respect?

Mr. MINOR. He performed this duty during four years——

Mr. NORTHWAY. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I would ask the gentleman from Delaware if there is any doubt that this clerk performed the duties which were assigned to him and that he performed them in addition to his regular duty?

Mr. HANDY. He performed the duties in accordance with the statute. It became his statutory duty to do the work which was assigned to him.

Mr. MINOR. If the gentleman will examine the report, he will find it says that this clerk was acting as disbursing officer of the Executive Mansion and also in charge of the reception room. All of these duties he continued to perform, and in addition to that he was designated by the President as "secretary to sign land patents."

Mr. HANDY. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the language of his own report:

By act of June 20, 1878 (20 Stat., page 188), the appropriation for payment of the salary of this officer was omitted, and the President was directed to designate one of his executive clerks to perform the duty of signing land patents.

Now, the payment for that official was omitted by this law in one of the appropriation bills, and the President was directed to designate one of the executive clerks to perform the duty. In pursuance of that direction the President designated this man. In the performance of that duty thus assigned to him this executive clerk was doing exactly what the statute required of him. He was simply performing, in other words, his statutory duty. And yet here, twenty years after that time, he comes in and asks additional salary for performing the work required of him by law and under the law, work for which he was paid a salary ascertained by law.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HANDY. Certainly, if I am permitted to do so. I am occupying the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I wish to suggest to the gentleman this point: Suppose Congress should decide to dismiss one-half of the clerical force of the various Departments and impose upon the other half the duty of the performance of the entire work—work that the President must see shall be done under the law—does not the gentleman think that Congress should consider that fact in making payment for the services?

Mr. HANDY. If, in the discretion of Congress—taking as an illustration the possibilities of the extravagant assumption embodied in the suggestion of my friend from Ohio—it should put the duty of performing all the clerical work of the Government on one-half of the employees, thus reducing the force, and that half should continue in the performance of statutory duty, I do not think there could be any claim for back pay beyond what Congress might provide in the first instance for the performance of the duty.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take the time——

Mr. HANDY. I have only interrupted the gentleman, of course, with his consent. If necessary, I shall ask the floor in my own right.

Mr. MINOR. I am not objecting, of course, to the questions of the gentleman. But there are one or two points that I think are desirable to be considered in this connection. If gentlemen will examine the report, they will find that the Commissioner of the Land Office, Mr. Williamson, in 1881 recommended payment for the clerical service performed, and said that it was a just claim. He was Commissioner of the Land Office at that time. Mr. W. H. Rogers says that it is a just claim. Hon. H. M. TELLER, who was then Secretary of the Interior, and now a Senator, says that it is an honest and a just claim. Hon. Anson G. McCook, former Secretary of the Senate, gives the same report in regard to it; and finally President Hayes himself indorses the claim for an increase of pay in this case, because the work was done outside of office hours by this party, and says that he is in fairness entitled to the pay.

Mr. LOUD. Is this a Republican claim or a Democratic claim?

Mr. MINOR. Not a bit of it. It has nothing to do with politics.

Mr. LOUD. Because I notice that our friends on the other side are making a determined fight against it.

Mr. HANDY. I am sure I did not know this was a Republican claim. It can not be very much of a Republican claim, if this gentleman is still in office, as I understand he is. He has been held there under all Administrations.

Mr. MINOR. I desire to yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON]. That will show you whether it is a Republican claim or not.

A MEMBER. It is an Ohio claim.

Mr. LOUD. This will help it, I think.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Whether it helps it or not, I think at least a fair understanding of this claim ought to be had. I first desire to assure both sides of this House that I have given this a very careful consideration. My interest in the claim first arose by having a personal knowledge of the claimant, and I know and speak for him as one of the best officers ever employed by this Government, and one of the most faithful and strictly honest. And the best evidence that that is true and that he has been a faithful and efficient officer is that he has remained at the White House ever since the days when he was placed there by Abraham Lincoln. He is now an old man and comparatively penniless. If you think that the salary he has received, living a sober, honest, and industrious life, is so great, he ought to be rich, while I know of my own personal knowledge that to-day he is a very poor man.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. KING. What was his remuneration at the time it is alleged he performed this service?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I will explain that to you, and I trust gentlemen will follow me while I give the whole facts. This bill has four times passed the Senate. The last time—this session—it passed for $6,000. The House bill is for $4,000, and represents the labor of signing all the land and mineral patents for four years. The Government had paid for over thirty years the sum of $1,500 a year for this service alone.

The Government, when it pays this claim, will have been the gainer $2,000 in compensation for the services rendered.

This represents the years 1878, 1879, 1880, and 1881, inclusive.

Now note it. During the years 1882 and 1883 an additional clerk was allowed at the White House and the work could be done in regular office hours; and no charge is made or included for those two years. When this direction of the President for one of his executive clerks to do this took place, for the time that that was done he made no charge. Now, commencing in 1884, the appropriation was restored, but only $1,200 a year was allowed for that exclusive service. It has since been made yearly; and the signing of land patents has been done at the Land Office, as it was prior to 1878, and the clerk who did that performed no other duties. It is true, however, that in the period during which Mr. Crook signed the land patents the number issued reached the highest yearly averages of any period in the history of our Government, reaching nearly 50,000 a year.

The statute restoring the salary and providing a clerk for this special work exclusively was by act of July 7, 1884, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885.

I call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to that. You will find that in volume 23, Statutes at Large, 1885, Interior Department. The appropriation came to be dropped originally in this way: A man by the name of C. C. Coon was in 1877 dismissed from the service for cause, and he came here and succeeded in getting the appropriation discontinued which should have been allowed to his successor in office. At this time William H. Crook, the claimant here, was disbursing officer at the White House, charged with the performance of regular duties to be done each day. The President at this time requested Mr. Crook to sign these patents, which it was not supposed at that time would be a very great task. But it was found that it would be much greater than expected, and Mr. Crook was given to understand—given to understand by the President of the United States—and to prove that that is true there is not only the assertion of Mr. Crook and his special friends, but it is proven and the facts specifically stated by ex-President Hayes, now dead, in his letter. Who desires to deny that fact? He was directed by the President, not by law——

Mr. HANDY. Does the gentleman mean that the President was not directed by law to designate one of his executive clerks to perform this duty?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I do not deny that statement at all, but I said he directed him and gave him to understand, and he so states, for doubling his work. He was disbursing clerk at that office at that time and had been from the time that Abraham Lincoln became President, and he had the duties of that position to discharge. Not only has he done this, as you will remember, but he is one of the most useful, courteous, urbane, and hard-working gentlemen that there is about the White House or that ever has been there.

Mr. HANDY. I did not catch what the gentleman said that it was the President gave Mr. Crook to understand. Does the gentleman mean that when President Hayes designated Mr. Crook to do this duty, he gave Mr. Crook to understand that he would receive additional compensation therefor?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I do specifically state so.

Mr. HANDY. Does the record show that in any place?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. The President's letter that has been read to you here shows it.

Mr. HANDY. I heard the letter read, but did not hear a word of that kind.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I shall be glad to have it read again before I am through.

Mr. HANDY. I hope the gentleman will read it and point that out, for that would be very material.

Mr. DOCKERY. He had no more authority to do so than you had.

Mr. HANDY. I know he had no authority to do it, and the letter does not say that he did do it. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. The letter will speak for itself, and when a claim can come into this House backed by the written assertion of a President of the United States or an ex-President of the United States that it is an honest claim, I believe that it has a much better indorsement than 90 per cent of the claims that come into this House.

Mr. KING. Why, conceding that, that would not establish its validity.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I will show you its validity before I get through. Now, the understanding was that, having to perform this service out of office hours, he would be paid extra therefor, and with the knowledge and consent of the President he did do it. The proof is that he did this work at nighttime; that he employed his wife, and she worked upon the Sabbath day, and at all hours, outside of the regular service, and he was compelled to do it in order to bring up and successfully accomplish the work that he did. His wife is now dead, leaving him alone in his old age penniless, save and except the amount of salary that he receives there now.

Now, then, objection is made that Mr. Crook was at the time drawing a salary. But it must also be remembered that he had to perform his regular duties, and was doing every duty required of him for the salary paid him; and now, when the President came to him and directed him to perform this duty, he assured him that he would receive compensation for it, as he worked out of office hours. Now, for the whole time, from that day to this, that claim has been urged, and then gentlemen expect to cut it down to one-half or less than what you paid for years and years for another to do that same service. That seems to me unjust to a man who has for all these years honestly and faithfully performed every duty due from him. The gentleman stands upon the validity of this claim. Any claim that is a just claim is a valid claim, as if it were designated specifically by a statute and for a particular purpose.

The work has been done, just as thousands of other men are paid for services rendered the Government without specific direction. This work had to be done. You had failed to make an appropriation for it. You take a man from other service and make him work at night and on the Sabbath for four years; and now when he comes to you with the Senate back of his claim, with every one of the employees of the Government and the Commissioner of the Land Office back of him, and when you have this assurance made to him by President Hayes, and when he tells you that it is an honest and a fair claim, now you want to say, "What is the validity of the claim?" Besides all that, let me say to the gentleman from Utah and the gentleman from Delaware that two, three, or four committees of this House have unanimously reported it, and to-day the committee comes here after having had a full and careful investigation and unanimously reports the same way.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. HANDY. You speak of the favorable reports of committees of this House on this claim. Let me ask the gentleman whether any committee of this House has ever reported adversely to this claim?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Not to my knowledge have they ever done so. If they have ever done so, I do not know it.

Mr. HANDY. I notice that the report speaks of the favorable Senate report heretofore made, and makes that a part of their report.

Mr. MINOR. It was reported in the Fifty-fourth Congress, in this House, favorably.

Mr. HANDY. Was it ever adversely reported?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I have not been in Congress long. This is my first term, as it is that of the gentleman, and I do not know whether any committee has ever reported against it; but I can say that if they have that they have done that which is unjust and wrong, and it is an outrage upon the honesty of this Government to an honest employee, doing honest work, and he ought to be paid an honest amount for it. This was no sinecure, and I think he is entitled to the full amount that the Senate gave him; but having agreed to accept, in order that he might have something for the work done, it was agreed that they should report it at $4,000, and he has stated that he would accept it for that reason.

Mr. KING. My distinguished friend has not answered the question which I in good faith asked him as to the salary which he received at the time he performed these duties. I understand that that position is a sinecure, as he is merely an executive disbursing officer. Many clerks in banks will disburse during a year ten to a hundred times the amount of money required to be disbursed by this gentleman, and they do not receive the amount of salary that he received, and he has performed much less onerous duties than men who are compelled to disburse a great deal more money and who occupy much more responsible positions.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Whether the position of disbursing officer is a sinecure or not, I do know that there are many members of Congress who from the manner in which they perform their duties may be regarded as occupying a sinecure; but when the Government designates a salary and when an official is employed under the eyes of a Chief Executive of the Government, at least it ought to be considered that it is an honest position and an honest salary is to be paid, and that it should not be classed as a sinecure.

I never have filled the position of disbursing officer at the White House, but I do believe that I never crossed the threshold of that place but what I found this man employed and earnestly at work, either showing courtesies and kindnesses to the members of Congress or to some one else, always ready to do his duty and so efficient and necessary that no President has ever discharged him since he was placed there, and it seems as if that ought to be a sufficient answer to the gentleman from Utah.

Now, in conclusion, you may charge this, if you choose, as a fraud, as I have heard the words dropped here. If he is a fraud, then he should not be entitled to anything. There should be no question of dividing the amount. You can not compromise with fraud. I do not believe it is a fraud, because I believe there is no truer, no more honest, no more sincere gentlemen ever lived in this great nation than the men who have indorsed this very bill.

It does not require much fight on this floor when you want to pass a bill of $200,000 or $300,000 for things that are so doubtful that perhaps no man living could ever testify to their honesty and sincerity or their worth; but here is a man who was ready to do his duty in the days of 1861, so efficient and necessary to the President of the United States that he makes of him a personal selection, and he has been kept from those days to this. He is indorsed by men whose characters will live so long as nations shall live for honesty, patriotism, and truthfulness. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that upon an examination of the merits, or rather the demerits, of this claim, which had for the moment passed from my mind, I desire to withdraw any suggestion that this claimant is entitled to $2,000 or any other sum. I want to say that if the claim for $4,000 is to rest upon the politeness, the urbanity, the courtesy, and the accomplishments and efficiency of the applicant, then I am willing to concede that the claim ought to be paid at once, because the claimant is efficient, he is accomplished in his particular line of work, and obliging. But, in my judgment, this claim has no proper foundation either in law or equity.

I did not understand its details at the outset; it had passed from my mind. In the first place, this gentleman has held one of the most desirable positions in the public service for a long term of years, and I admit he has graced the position. He has held it, I do not know how long, perhaps since some time in the sixties, and if he is "penniless," as suggested by my eloquent friend from Ohio [Mr. NORTON], it is his own fault and not the fault of the people of the United States.

How did this claim originate? It originated in consequence of a law passed in 1878. I did not know at the time I expressed myself as willing to pay him $2,000 that there was any such statute. But in the legislative appropriation bill approved June 19, 1878, appears the proviso:

> And the duties prescribed in the section of the Revised Statutes No. 450 shall devolve upon and be discharged by one of the executive clerks, to be designated by the President for that position.

That is the act of June 19, 1878, a deliberate act of Congress. Gentlemen will remember that was a time when Congress was engaged in the work of reforming the Executive Departments. What is section 450? It provides that—

> The President is authorized to appoint from time to time, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a secretary at a salary of $1,500 a year, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the President, to sign in his own name and for him all patents for land sold or granted under authority of the United States.

Now, that section of the statute was deliberately repealed by the act of June 19, 1878. In other words, Congress said: "Mr. President, you have a sufficient clerical force to enable you to designate one of four clerks to perform the duty of signing land patents," and so Congress wrote it in the law. If any President—I do not understand the letter of the ex-President that way—but if any President assured this gentleman that he was to receive additional compensation, we all know that he had no more authority to give such an assurance than the humblest laborer in the Capitol, because the President of the United States must himself be responsible to the law.

Now, then, this gentleman has been in office a long period of time, and I do not complain of that fact, because I have held office myself quite a while [laughter]; but he has held office a long time and has received a good salary. I think he is an accomplished gentleman; but shall we at this late hour, when every dollar is demanded by the necessities of the Government, both civil and military, go into the Treasury and grant this official a gratuity? I do not think we ought to do it. He only disburses about $100,000 a year, and that includes the salary of the President.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he got this salary for disbursing $50,000 a year?

Mr. DOCKERY. One hundred thousand dollars a year.

Mr. KING. But $50,000 of that is the President's salary.

Mr. DOCKERY. He was a disbursing clerk in the Executive Office and that was his duty.

Mr. MINOR. Is that all of his duty? Only three or four days ago he came in here with the President's message and announced it to the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; but that was in the absence of the gentleman who usually attends to that duty.

Mr. HANDY. If this man is performing extra duty now under the theory of this bill now before us, we shall have a claim for additional duty that he is now performing.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, let me say to the gentleman that when we launch out into the uncertainty, or rather the certainty, of granting gratuities for extra hours of labor, then you must not stop at Mr. Crook, the executive clerk of the White House.

Go to the War Department, where the clerks are working overtime an hour and a half to two hours daily, and give them a gratuity. Go to the Post-Office Department, where, whenever there is a change of Administration, the clerks must work overtime two or three hours a day. Give them a gratuity also. So let us go into every office of the 18,000 clerks in this city. Take the money of the people and give it as a gratuity to these gentlemen who practically hold life positions, if you desire to do so, but do not do so under the theory that they have a right to this money. They have no such right. This money was paid into the Treasury by the people of the United States, and we have no right to take it out of the Treasury unless in liquidation of obligations incurred in the exercise of the legitimate functions of government under the law.

Mr. MAHANY. Is it not right that the Government should pay its servants for working overtime as well as that private institutions or establishments should pay their employees for extra service?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman, if he will read the statutes of his country, will be able to answer that question for himself.

Mr. MAHANY. Well, I am asking the gentleman the question.

Mr. DOCKERY. The Government says "no;" the law says "no;" and I know of nothing more persuasive upon me than the laws of my country.

I would rather vote for this bill than to oppose it, because I know the gentleman who is the beneficiary. I admire him for his courtesy and efficiency. No man ever went to the White House who was not treated by this gentleman with all the courtesy and affability that befitted the occasion. I repeat, I would rather vote for this bill than oppose it; but it does seem to me that somewhere along the line of this war fever there ought to be a war inaugurated against these claims that are raiding the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.] Our people have a right to expect it; they demand it. Let us give all the money that is necessary to support this great Government, but not one dollar to this gentleman nor to any other civil or military employee not called for by the law or by the equity of the particular case.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY. The gentleman has had great experience upon the Committee on Appropriations; and I wish to ask him whether it is not very often the fact that his committee, having charge of the salaries of the executive officers, find that owing to a change of conditions the duties of officers have lessened very much, and therefore it becomes desirable to abolish a particular office, consolidating its duties with those which have been performed by another official. That is very frequently done, is it not?

Mr. DOCKERY. Very frequently.

Mr. MOODY. Now, when Congress judges that additional compensation should be allowed to an officer in whom the duties of two officers have been vested, that is provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, is it not?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is a correct statement.

Mr. MOODY. Now, if I understand the gentleman's contention about this case, it is that Congress, finding the duties of these two offices could be advantageously performed by one official, enacted that those duties should be so performed.

Mr. DOCKERY. That was the statute.

Mr. MOODY. And having all the circumstances under consideration, Congress concluded that under the circumstances, notwithstanding the consolidation of the two offices, there was no occasion for any increase of salary.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true.

Mr. MOODY. Now, if we twenty years afterwards go back and make an additional allowance to this officer, then we are rendering entirely ineffective the deliberate judgment of Congress in passing upon the facts as they existed at the time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Let me add further, for the benefit of the old members, that upon the Committee on Appropriations at the time when the bill was reported fixing this salary was that splendid Pennsylvanian, Samuel J. Randall. I am not certain whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was a member of the committee at that time; but if he was, I could pay him the same tribute I have paid to Mr. Randall, who I know was a member at that time, and who watched the expenditures of this Government with exacting scrutiny.

Now, let me say another thing, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY]. This bill is in violation of the spirit of our statutes. We have a law which absolutely prohibits any officer from receiving two salaries; and a further statute prohibiting any department from accepting voluntary service as a basis for compensation, or which might be made the basis for compensation. So that in my view—I say it regretfully; I dislike to vote against this bill, because I personally like this officer—I say that in my judgment there is not one iota of law or equity upon which to rest this claim either for $4,000 or $2,200, or for any other amount. I will now yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, my opposition to this claim is based entirely upon the statements made in the report of the committee—a report written to favor the claim. I do not know the gentleman who is to be the beneficiary of this bill. I do not know anything about the claim save as the facts are disclosed in this report and have been developed in the debate on the floor. I have no doubt from all that has been said that this is a very accomplished officer and a very worthy gentleman. I have no doubt that through all these years since Abraham Lincoln appointed him to office, he has faithfully performed his duties. The country has no cause to complain of him; and he has no cause to complain of the country. So far as the Government of the United States is concerned on the one hand, and so far as Mr. Crook is concerned on the other, they have served each other very well for over thirty years. Let us put all that to one side and come down to this claim. What is the claim?

Now, this claim, Mr. Chairman, is presented here for additional services supposed to have been rendered by this gentleman during four of the years he has been an executive clerk in the office of the President of the United States. How did these extra duties come about, and how were they imposed upon him as additional services? They are extra only in this, that they were additional to the duties he was required to perform under the law before Congress passed the act in 1878 to which reference is made in the report. He did not perform any duties extra and beyond the duties required of him under the law of 1878.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] has quoted that law. The report of this committee itself exhibits the law with sufficient clearness. That law required the President of the United States to designate one of the executive clerks to perform a certain duty—namely, the duty to which reference is made in the pending bill. The President designated for that purpose this gentleman, Mr. Crook. Why did he designate this particular person? It is a fair assumption that he designated him because amongst all of the executive clerks, this man could with the least hardship perform the additional duties assigned to him.

The President probably designated him because the duties previously performed by him were light in comparison to the work other clerks were performing. The President, being responsible for the work, would naturally desire that the person who was most at liberty because of other duties should perform these new duties. It is fair to assume that he acted in a larger degree on this principle when he designated Mr. Crook as the executive clerk who should sign land patents.

Mr. MINOR. If the gentleman will permit me, I will ask him, in connection with what he is saying, why it is that President Hayes states in his letter that this work was done "outside of office hours," and that in his judgment this party "is in fairness entitled to be paid" for it?

Mr. HANDY. But the President does not say that.

Mr. MINOR. Oh, yes.

Mr. HANDY. Oh, no. I will take up the letter from President Hayes and call attention to it now, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Wisconsin has made reference to it. The President has simply expressed a hope that additional compensation should be allowed to Mr. Crook. There is nothing in this letter of ex-President Hayes to intimate that the President regarded the Government as under any legal obligation whatever to pay this extra amount. There is nothing in the letter that says anything about that. The President—or ex-President—simply expresses a hope that Congress will pass the bill to provide for the payment of what Mr. Crook thinks he ought to receive.

I am strongly of the opinion that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON] has obtained a wrong impression from the reading of that letter. If the gentleman will follow it carefully, he will find that he is mistaken as to what the letter asserts. The President would have had no right to intimate to Mr. Crook, when he assigned this work to him, that extra pay would be forthcoming, although he might have expressed a good feeling and kindly sentiment and best wishes for Mr. Crook. His salary was statutory and could not be increased without action of Congress. There is nothing in the report before us to show that the President even suggested at the time anything about additional pay.

In 1887, long after the claim became due, if it ever was due, and after the President was out of office, President Hayes says only this:

FREMONT, OHIO, January 28, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter asking my opinion of the bill for your relief now pending in the House. You performed faithfully and well double duty after you began to sign land patents. The latter work was done outside of office hours, and you are in fairness entitled to be paid for it. I hope and expect Congress will pass your bill. It is an act of simple justice.

Sincerely,

R. B. HAYES.

This letter simply shows that the President was willing to accord to this officer credit for having faithfully performed his duty. It expresses a hope that the bill for his relief might pass. It seems to indicate further that the President was personally fond of the man. He seems to be an attractive kind of a man. Everybody who comes in connection with him seems to like him. Liking him, they are willing to aid him in his effort to advance his own condition. He had been connected with the President for four years, during which time he discharged his duties faithfully and well. The letter is a testimonial to Mr. Crook's good qualities. But it does not give a good and substantial reason for appropriating $4,000 additional back pay for clerical work done nearly twenty years ago.

The truth is, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Crook had a statutory work to perform. He performed that duty during four years of President Hayes's Administration, just as he has performed his duty during all of the other thirty years that he has been in office.

Why did he perform any of these duties? Simply because he held office and received a statutory pay for performing the duties thereof. He received the same statutory pay during all of these years as the bills for such payment were passed.

I do not object to Mr. Crook's having $4,000 or $6,000 or $10,000 drop into his worthy and grateful hand. I might rejoice at his good fortune. That is not the question presented here. This money must come from the public Treasury, and we have no right to pay it unless it has been fairly earned. The bill itself is a trifling matter. It is the principle involved which we must consider.

Standing here as the representatives of the people of this country, we must guard the public funds more jealously than if they were our own. We have no right to be generous with the people's money. It is enough for us to be just in paying claims.

I can not see any reason why the Government should give gratuities to the officers of the Government beyond what their fixed salaries call for, no matter how well they discharge the duties which are imposed upon them by law. If a man does not desire to remain in the service for the performance of a specific duty imposed upon him by law, he need only notify the proper authorities. There is no reason why he should not relinquish the position.

This is a proposition to pay for "additional service" rendered some twenty years ago.

The services rendered were paid for under the law at the time. There is no warrant for the payment of the amount recommended here. There is no possible principle, it seems to me, on which you can proceed to found any just obligation upon the Government for the payment of this debt. If this gentleman had been a disagreeable person, if he had been personally offensive to persons who occupy prominent public positions, this application would never have been heard of. It is favored here and supported by gentlemen who knew the man and liked him. But, Mr. Chairman, because the man is known and because he is liked is no justification for us, as the representatives of the people, responsible for the expenditures of the public money, to grant a favor—because it would be nothing more or less than a favor—to any applicant for an appropriation in a case of this kind. Whether we know the man or like him or not, it makes no difference; our duty is plain and clear.

I do not know this man. I only know the claim, and I believe the situation here is that the man has merit and the claim has no merit. Since I know the claim and do not know the man, I am not tempted to approve of the claim. It can not be defended upon any ground, and I think the House understands that.

I want to yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], if he is on the floor.

Mr. DOCKERY. He is not in the Hall at this time.

Mr. HANDY. I reserve my time for the benefit of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman has no time to reserve.

Mr. HANDY. Why, yes, I have. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] took the floor in his own right, and yielded his time to me, and it belongs to me to yield to other gentlemen who may want to oppose this bill.

Mr. BRUMM. Then you claim you have been talking in the time of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HANDY. Why, certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, I do not care to get into a controversy at this time about that. Perhaps the gentleman may not want to insist on what he claims is his right.

I had not intended to say anything on this bill, but I want to say, in the first place, in answer to an attack—not direct, but a general remark against the Committee on Claims—that war should now be raised——

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not make any such claim.

Mr. BRUMM. Not the gentleman from Missouri alone, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. I want to say here that I challenge any Committee on Claims, or any other committee of this House, now or at any other time, to show that it has been more careful in considering these private claims than the committee of this Congress. By looking at this Calendar——

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me a moment? In order to stop the floodgates of oratory that I may have unloosed, I want to withdraw all that I said about the Committee on Claims, and to say now that I think there is not a gentleman on that committee who is not absolutely immaculate in all of his purposes and more industrious than any other man now on the face of the earth. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. Well, we understand the extreme taffy that the gentleman is trying to give here now, but I wish still to give him a little of that eloquence that he is so much afraid of. By examining this Calendar you will find that we have, as a rule, and from day to day, hardly passed one bill a day in our committee. The highest number that you will find are four bills that we passed in one sitting, which in itself is evidence of the fact that our bills are carefully considered. We are not immaculate, as the gentleman would try to intimate. We make mistakes; but I can say that I challenge a thorough investigation of all the claims that this committee has reported.

Now, as to the claim under consideration, gentlemen say that the position held by Mr. Crook is a sinecure—that all he does is to disburse a hundred thousand dollars a year. Yet, in the same breath, they say they know him to be a courteous gentleman—urbane, polite, and accommodating. I ask these gentlemen, does he disburse this money to them, and is that the way they know him to be so urbane and polite? The very fact that they know him to be so is because they know him in his official capacity, which shows that he does something beyond merely disbursing a hundred thousand dollars a year. He is one of the executive clerks at the White House. He is there at all times, at the service of members of this House, at the service of Senators and members of the diplomatic corps, and he is busy during his entire office hours every day.

Now, as to a gratuity, Mr. Chairman, this is not a gratuity. We have the evidence and the statement of this honorable gentleman that the President told him, when he did this work, that he would be paid for it.

Mr. HANDY. Where do you find that statement?

Mr. BRUMM. The statement is shown by the testimony before the committee.

Mr. HANDY. It is not in the report anywhere.

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, no; of course no report is a full rehearsal of all the evidence before the committee. I will make the statement upon my responsibility that that statement was made to Mr. MINOR. It was in a letter sent to him, which was before the committee, that Mr. Crook was told that he no doubt would be paid. Relying upon such high authority as the President of the United States, he had a right to suppose that he would be paid if he did this extra work.

Now, what did it consist of? It consisted of work for which the Government had been paying $1,500 a year to other clerks. At a peculiar time, for some reason or other, I do not know what, nor do I care, a spirit of economy struck the Committee on Appropriations, and they consolidated the two offices. But the President saw the impracticability of it; and finding that they could not get along, he told this man, "You do this work, and no doubt you will be paid." The gentleman did it—did it after hours; did it on Sunday; had his wife help him. Not only that, but this economical Committee on Appropriations have been ever since paying $1,500.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. BRUMM. My friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] is on that committee, and ever since then you have been paying somebody else $1,200 a year for doing this very work. Therefore, I say this is not a gratuity. This is a quid pro quo. This is money for services rendered under an employment by the President, and under the statement that he would be paid for the services rendered. The Senate asked for the full amount, at the rate of $1,500 a year, but we have cut it down to $1,000 a year, and this bill now is to pay him less than you have paid others every year for doing the same work before and since.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have no prejudice in this case, and all I know of the gentleman is as I have found him, a clerk in the White House. But I would like to correct two or three ideas set forth by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY], and especially by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY]. Now, they stand upon the law. Let me say to the gentleman from Delaware and the gentleman from Missouri that it is mighty easy for two able gentlemen like those to stand squarely by the law when the law is in their favor, when it covers the case of any officer of the Government; but it may be that they will have a case, and then they will ignore the law and stand upon the justness of the claim. Now, let us see what there is of this matter. In the history of this Government, from 1836 down to 1878, a clerk had been paid by the Government for doing this work at the rate of $1,500 a year, if we are to trust the reports.

The gentleman from Missouri says that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Randall, being a very economic man, saw that he could consolidate the offices and save money for the Government, and the result was that they cut off this $1,500 clerk and put the duties upon another clerk. Now, why did they do it? It is perfectly apparent that the Committee on Appropriations at that time supposed that the work of this $1,500 clerk had been reduced to such an extent that they might dispense with a clerk and let the small amount of duties that he would perform be placed upon another clerk. My experience is that nobody on the earth is more ready to right a wrong that has been done by itself or any former Congress than this body, the House of Representatives. If it should turn out that the House of Representatives in 1878 misapprehended the amount of duties to be performed by the clerk, that they expected this work to be small, and they were mistaken in this, I know of no body of men under heaven more willing to right any such wrong.

Mr. HANDY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. HANDY. Congress in 1878, as I understand, thought this office could be dispensed with and the work done without injustice to any one clerk.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. HANDY. The next Congress evidently thought the same thing, for they did not change it. Then in 1882 Congress provided for a clerk at $1,200 in the Interior Department on the statement that it was inconvenient to carry these land patents backward and forward to the Executive Mansion; but that Congress evidently did not think that Mr. Crook had a good claim, for it did not provide for him and did not seem to consider that he had any claim upon Congress.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, what is your question?

Mr. HANDY. I want to know whether you do not think that that Congress, right near, possessed more means and better means of knowing about this work and a more correct estimation of whether he ought to have additional compensation than we do?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, if your question implied a fact, then I might say yes. It was not the same Congress. The Congress which comes here every four years is different, and even every two years.

Mr. HANDY. But they were nearer and had better opportunity to understand the question.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If the gentleman knows they had a better chance, then he is right. I think it takes a great time to right a wrong, and you know as well as I do that it takes quite a time to get an honest claim through this body. Now, here was a consolidation of the duties of the two offices.

Mr. GAINES. If the gentleman will permit me, a very distinguished officer of this House, whose name I will not call, once said to me that the object of the rules of this House was to prevent the passage of just claims.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I do not know how that is. Now, if the Committee on Appropriations did ascertain in 1878, for the first time, that they were paying $1,500 a year for that which ought not to be paid for, then what have you to say as to the conduct of the House in paying from 1836 down to 1878 that $1,500 a year? And if the Committee on Appropriations in 1878, the labor being the same, had made the discovery, then ought you not to complain if it takes four years to make a discovery that a wrong has been done?

Mr. HANDY. I feel like——

Mr. NORTHWAY. I do not yield.

Mr. HANDY. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. NORTHWAY. The Committee on Appropriations labored under the suspicion that the duty of that clerk had been reduced. Now, the report shows that instead of the labor being reduced it actually increased, and he had to perform a greater amount of duty for that four years than there had ever had to be performed by any clerk occupying that position in the history of the Government. Now, that is a fact; so that instead of there being less duties to perform there were more, and Congress made a wrong step in that direction. Now, it is said Congress authorized the President by law to do a thing, and he stood upon the law, and this clerk must stand upon the law; and the gentleman from Missouri (I would be glad to have his attention, so that he may listen to me) stands upon the law—a public officer ought not to get any more than his salary. Yet the gentleman from Missouri voted (and I voted with him) to pay $10,000 to one of his able colleagues from the State of Missouri when he was getting paid $5,000 a year as a member of Congress, and that for service performed while he was a member of Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not now remember.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You do not remember the $10,000?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You do not remember the $10,000 that your colleague received, and you voted for it, and I voted for it, because I thought it was fair, and he was drawing a salary of $5,000? I refer to Mr. Heard. He was paid $10,000 by Congress when he was receiving a salary as a member of Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do remember it as a just claim.

Mr. NORTHWAY. He was drawing his salary of $5,000 a year, and was paid $10,000, and the gentleman from Missouri voted for it, and so did I.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know nothing about the claim in connection with committee work. I was not a member of the committee reporting it. I am sure the gentleman is right in the statement that the claim was meritorious.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am not saying anything about the committee or anything in connection with the committee, but he performed certain duties for which he was paid by Congress $10,000, and you voted for it, and so did I, and he received $5,000 a year salary as a member, and that was done in the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. DOCKERY. I supposed that was for services performed prior to that.

Mr. NORTHWAY. No, sir; it was for services while a member of Congress.

Mr. HANDY. Working over hours.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I voted for it because he ought to have it. I did not stand up here as a lawyer and say that because there was no law for it he ought not to have it. Claims go through here, and not one in fifty are allowed by law or by virtue of any contract.

Mr. KING. Does not the gentleman think, in view of the law cited by the gentleman from Missouri, that it was a duty, mandatory on the President of the United States, to assign one of his clerks to the merely perfunctory task of affixing his name to the patents? Does not he think a man should be paid $4,000 or $5,000 for signing his name one or two hundred thousand times?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, the question the gentleman is asking me is a reflection upon the Congress for forty-two years, when that Congress appropriated $1,500 for the purpose of paying a clerk for signing his name in this perfunctory way for one or two hundred thousand times.

Mr. KING. I think Congress at that time was extravagant.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You have this year voted to pay a clerk $1,200 for the same duty.

Mr. KING. I did not do it intelligently, and now I have become aware of the fact, I am not willing to vote for it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You will come here at the next Congress and vote for it willingly. There is such a thing as being overwise on our part, and sometimes I get there myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Certainly the gentleman is not overwise now.

Mr. HANDY. Would I interrupt the gentleman——

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly you would interrupt me, if I stopped. [Laughter.]

Mr. HANDY. I mean unpleasantly.

Mr. NORTHWAY. No; certainly not.

Mr. HANDY. I understand it has been said here that Mr. Crook did this additional work at home and that his wife helped him. I am puzzled about it. I understand the labor was signing the President's name, and I would like to know whether the wife, under the act, had authority to sign the President's name, too?

Mr. NORTHWAY. The gentleman is not asking that as a lawyer?

Mr. HANDY. No; as an humble member of the House.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I am glad to know that he is humble. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Mr. NORTHWAY. The gentleman from Delaware does not understand that any such claim has been made. The labor consisted not only in signing the name of the President, but comparing papers, and even the wife could do that.

Now, I submit that here was an interregnum of four years when there was no clerk to do this work. The labor performed was greater than is performed now, a greater amount than at any time during the forty-two years, and yet gentlemen stand up here and say that under law and justice he should have nothing, where, if we had continued precisely as we are doing now, he would have been paid not only $4,000, but $4,800 for performing the same services. Gentlemen make no complaint of having paid it for forty-two years. If this man performs the labor, even though designated by the President to do it, he should be paid for it.

The gentleman from Utah asked if it was not the duty of the President to designate a clerk to perform the services? Certainly it was, because there was no clerk paid for it. The labor must be performed by some one or go unperformed. If the labor was performed, then the person performing it should have his pay for it. Gentlemen say there was no appropriation for it. We ought not to stand upon that. If the Committee on Appropriations, without due consideration, cut down the appropriation, we ought to right the wrong. We know the facts, and the committee that cut off the pay did not know the facts. They supposed the labor would be reduced largely during the four years. It transpires that the labor was increased; that there were a larger number of land warrants signed during the four years.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. And most of them were for Utah, from whence comes the man that is opposing the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. Very likely. Now that we have discovered the fact that the labor was largely increased, and that the Committee on Appropriations before made a mistake, we should correct the wrong, and I submit that it is proper for us to do so.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if this labor was in excess of the labor which this clerk had been in the habit of performing?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Yes; from 1861 to 1878 he had been receiving pay for performing certain other duties, and they had been paying another clerk for performing these duties $1,200 a year, and now this claimant only wants $1,000.

Mr. GAINES. As he continued to do this work year after year, knowing that there was no additional salary and knowing that his salary was so much a year, is not he estopped from claiming the extra amount?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Oh, I do not know that he could sue the Government. No one pretends that upon any of these claims the claimant can sue the Government. We have been voting millions of dollars at this session of Congress upon claims for which the Government could not be sued.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. The gentleman speaks of this extra duty performed by this clerk and of his right for that reason to extra compensation. Was there anything that prevented this gentleman from resigning his office in order to escape the performance of this extra duty?

Mr. NORTHWAY. No. A member of Congress is the only man who is forced to stay in office; who can not resign. All the clerks under the Government may, of course, resign and get out of the way whenever they choose. I have heard that consideration urged here a great many times, but it never operated as an argument.

Mr. HEPBURN. Allow me a question. I am told that in the Forty-first Congress a new provision was inserted in the appropriation bill, providing that the person accepting the amount appropriated as salary should accept in full payment for all services rendered. Now, what effect does that provision have upon this gentleman's claim? This provision of the Forty-first Congress dates back of the period when this man began to perform these services.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It would have the effect to prevent the officer from suing in a court of law for the amount claimed to be due for extra services. But I do not believe that such a statement put in an appropriation bill is any more binding in a case of this kind than if it were left out. This is not a question of law, but a question of justice and equity.

Mr. HEPBURN. But is it not an equitable estoppel as well as a legal one?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I think it is not an equitable estoppel by any means, for an equitable estoppel is much stronger than a legal one.

Mr. Chairman, I have no personal interest in this claimant. I do not know anything of his politics nor from what State he hails.

A MEMBER. He is an Ohio man. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. I do not know that. It appears he has served under various Administrations during all sorts of political campaigns. I do not know whether he ever voted, and I do not care. I believe this to be a just claim and one which ought to be paid.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a very few observations upon this claim, which has come to my attention only as it has been reached in the business of the House.

It seems to me that the passage of this bill would be a very dangerous precedent. If we propose to go back over the last quarter of a century and rectify all the wrongs that preceding Congresses have done to the employees of the Government, we shall have our hands full.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Are we not doing that very thing in the passage of claims here constantly?

Mr. MOODY. No, I think not, in cases of this kind. It seems to me this case stands differently from any other which I have known to be reported by any Committee on Claims. In 1878 the Appropriations Committee, having charge of the executive civil service of the Government, concluded that certain work which had been theretofore performed by two clerks could with profit to the Government service be consolidated and done by one. Hence they provided for abolishing a clerkship in the Land Office, and provided specifically that the duty which had been performed by that clerk should thereafter be performed by one of the executive clerks of the President.

An executive clerk of the President was detailed under the provision of this act to perform this duty, and his salary was fixed at $2,000 or $2,200, whatever it may have been. He could continue in this employment, or could leave it, as he chose. The duties of his office were regulated by Congress, and the compensation for the performance of those duties was fixed by Congress. He chose to go on under the statute and perform the new duties of the office, and he chose to accept the compensation which Congress provided.

As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has well pointed out, he did so under the provisions of a statute which provided specifically that the salary named in the appropriation bill should be received by the officer as full compensation for all the duties connected with his office. And that provision, I believe, has been in the appropriation bills from that day to this. As I understand, it has been put in those bills to avoid the very thing we are meeting now—to prevent employees of the Government from coming in and, under the plea of extra work, obtaining extra salary.

Now, this condition went on for four years. This man performed the duties of his new office under the provision of Congress. He did it silently or he did it under protest; and I do not care which horn of the dilemma you take. If for four years, without protest, he performed the duties of the new office and received as full compensation the salary which Congress provided for the performance of those duties—if he did that for four years and made no protest at the time, it is too late ten, fifteen, or twenty years afterwards to come here and ask us to give him extra pay.

Now, Mr. Chairman, suppose he did not do this extra work without protest. We all know that the Appropriations Committee meets every year. It hears the chiefs of the various bureaus, and it hears, among others, the secretary of the President. Every recommendation which comes from the President of the United States through his secretary is carefully considered and almost invariably heeded. Now, suppose that this clerk, instead of doing these duties without protest until years afterwards, had protested from year to year—had come to the Appropriations Committee and said, "You have provided double duties for this office without increasing the compensation, and you ought to increase it." Suppose he did that; and suppose the Appropriations Committee, its action being ratified by Congress, had steadily, year after year, said, "No; your salary is adequate for the performance of the new duties as well as the old; you must do your work as Congress has prescribed it to you, and you must do it for the pay which Congress has fixed."

Now, are we, under that condition of affairs, to go back, after all of these years, and undo the work which previous Congresses have seen fit to do? Are we to determine, by the action proposed here, that we can judge better than those who were on the spot at the time as to the existing conditions, and thus undertake to undo their work and reverse their judgment? I say, Mr. Chairman, that we ought not to undertake to do it. We have not the data before us on which to act intelligently. If we do so in this case, we shall have a thousand, ten thousand, aye, a hundred thousand cases in which similar demands will be presented for our consideration.

I repeat that, in my judgment, this is a dangerous bill; a new kind of a bill. It opens up a new way to reach the Treasury. It opens the gateway to every employee of any of the Departments of the Government, after years gone by, to make application for increases or changes in compensation because of the modification of the duties imposed upon them. If we pass the bill, we should pass it with our eyes open. It is a dangerous bill. It is a dangerous precedent. It is our duty, in my judgment, as guarding the interests of the people, to defeat it.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Did the gentleman ever hear of or vote for the Grant claim for some $80,000 or $100,000 from New England?

Mr. MOODY. I never heard of it.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Did the gentleman consider and vote for the Methodist book bill?

Mr. MOODY. I did not.

Mr. CANNON (to Mr. NORTON of Ohio). Did you? [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. I did.

Mr. MOODY. But I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that balancing one claim against the other is the proper way to decide matters of public importance in this body. Sometimes we vote for claims, as it were, almost inadvertently, claims to which our attention has not been specially called and which seem to present themselves as favorable and proper. But this is a very different case. It has been by a mere accident that my attention was called to this claim. It is, in my judgment, unwise and dangerous legislation and a claim that ought not to be paid at all. Of course everybody has the right to his own judgment. But my judgment is against the payment of this claim. Each member can do as he pleases, but I am opposed to favorable action upon this measure.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Chairman, I think this claim is thoroughly well understood and has been gone over thoroughly by the members of this House. Its merits or demerits are appreciated by all the members.

It is only necessary for me to say, in concluding the debate, that the Government has received the services of this gentleman, it has utilized the labor of Colonel Crook for four years, for which he has received no compensation, and prior to that time they paid $1,500 a year for that service, and since then $1,200 a year has been paid for it. During the time he performed the duty nothing has been paid.

This work was imposed upon him as a part of a public duty, and it remains to this House to determine whether or not he shall be paid. I have stated all of the facts in the case, as the records embodied in the report of the committee disclose the whole case.

I move, therefore, that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, have I the right to move that this bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it do lie on the table?

Mr. DOCKERY. That is a parliamentary motion.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would be in order.

Mr. MOODY. I make that motion, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MOODY; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NORTON of Ohio) there were—ayes 73, noes 18.

So the motion was agreed to.

JOHN ROACH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1115) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to carry out the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884 (22 Stat., page 477), to pay to the legal representatives of John Roach, deceased, the sum of $28,160.25, for labor and material furnished by the said John Roach in completing the dispatch boat Dolphin, under the advice and assistance of the naval advisory board mentioned in said act, which amount is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to pay the heirs of John Roach, deceased, the balance due for the building of the dispatch boat Dolphin. We had the whole matter up under discussion several weeks ago, on a bill for damages for the delay and detention in the construction of the three battle ships, the Boston, Chicago, and Atlanta. At that time the facts with reference to the bill under consideration were fully discussed before the House. There is hardly a member present who does not understand all the facts bearing on this claim.

Mr. LOVE. If the gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask him in what respect this bill differs from that to which he has referred? I do not wish to get the two bills mixed. I remember the bill that we heretofore considered and passed.

Mr. BRUMM. About the time that the Dolphin was finished, in March, 1885, the naval advisory board which under the law were appointed to supervise the building of the Dolphin reported that the boat was up to the requirements and should be accepted. About that time there was a change of Administration. Within a month after the new Secretary of the Navy came in a letter was written by the Attorney-General giving reasons why the Dolphin should not be accepted, advising that a second board be appointed for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Dolphin was not structurally weak and deficient in speed. That second board was appointed without warrant of authority of law. It was in violation of the original law under which this boat and others were built, and in direct violation of the contract entered into between the Government and John Roach, who then was alive, for the building of the Dolphin.

Throughout that entire work the naval advisory board which was to supervise the building of the Dolphin did superintend the building of it. There was not a hammer stroke make or a bolt driven except under its direction. Nothing was done except under its direction, and after it was done the boat was ready to hand over according to the contract. I may say right here that the limit fixed by the act of Congress for bids for this boat was $400,000. John Roach took it for $80,000 less than that amount. He took it for $65,000 less than the next lowest bidder. So that the Government, under the contract, got the boat for $65,000 less than it could have got it in any other way. The boat was built. The advisory board had recommended its acceptance, but the Administration refused to take it.

The next board, known as the Belknap board, was appointed, and that board said that they believed the vessel was structurally weak, and that under a test it could not make 15 knots an hour. The boat being completed, of course they could not look inside of it. They could only have a superficial view of it, but in their opinion it was structurally weak, and under the test would not make the 15 knots an hour. That boat has since proven to be able to do more than 15 knots an hour, and has done it right straight along. But I want to give you the facts as we go along. The test was made, and the Secretary of the Navy stated that that test was without authority, because he had not authorized it. Yet it was made by the very board that the Administration had appointed to supervise this second or third test.

Upon the strength of the report of that second board, the Government refused to take the Dolphin for some time, but finally other tests were made, and the Government then accepted it, but insisted upon retaining $73,000 from the contract price. The boat was accepted and the money was paid, except the $73,000. Some time after that Mr. Roach was told that if he would permit a reduction they then would consider his claim. It was supposed that the reduction would be about seventeen or twenty thousand dollars; that unless he did submit to that, the Government would not pay him a cent and would not accept his boat, assuming still that it was structurally weak and short of speed. A committee was again appointed to ascertain whether the Government would be safe in accepting the proposition, which was to come from Roach, to pay him the $73,000 less seventeen thousand or twenty thousand dollars.

This board reported that it would be perfectly safe, not, however, alleging that there was any structural weakness. And I want to say here that even the Belknap board said that whatever structural weakness there was was due to the plan and not to the work itself. The very board on which they relied said that it was not the fault of the contractor, but the fault of the designer. However, under that provision Mr. Roach accepted $45,000 out of the $73,000. Instead of reducing it $17,000 or $20,000 they reduced it $28,000, cutting out some $10,000 which the Secretary himself had acknowledged was due to Roach. Under these conditions Roach accepted the money and gave a receipt in full of all demands, and that is the only point that I have heard raised against this bill, the fact that a receipt was given in full of all demands.

Mr. RIDGELY. Can the committee give us any report as to the history of the vessel since it has been in the service?

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, yes; I will read this, because it is interesting to those who have not read it.

Mr. LENTZ. Do you mean that you will read the entire report now?

Mr. BRUMM. No.

Mr. LENTZ. I should like to hear it.

Mr. BRUMM. The whole report?

Mr. LENTZ. Yes; I think you had better read all of it.

Mr. BRUMM. Well, if so, there is no use in my reading this part of it.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to ask the gentleman if this claim or demand that he should accept the reduction was on the ground that that vessel was structurally weak?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Now, I should like to know whether or not the history of that vessel has shown that it was or was not structurally weak.

Mr. BRUMM. The trial of the vessel shows just the contrary—that it is one of the best vessels that ever floated, that it stands without a peer to-day of its kind, and that its record has never yet been equaled in naval structure. That it traveled——

Mr. GAINES. What is the name of the vessel?

Mr. BRUMM. The Dolphin. It is the vessel that the late President, Mr. Cleveland, and his Secretary of the Navy went on their junketing tours, or their business tours, or their fishing tours.

Mr. GAINES. The best test of the strength of the vessel you have is carrying him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. A very good evidence of the quality of the boat is shown by the fact that they selected this very boat from all others. And by the news yesterday I see that this boat has captured two Spanish prizes near Cuba. But here is its record:

The record of the Dolphin, which vessel began with a speed of 15.11 knots on her contract trial, and which has recently returned from a cruise around the world, is not less satisfactory. The results of the inspection of the vessel, after she has been three years and nine months in commission, are reported by the board of inspection, under date of October 2, 1889, as follows:

"The material used in the construction of this vessel and the workmanship speak well for the designers and the builders. Aside from the slight repairs to her bearings she is ready for another cruise. By the most liberal estimates, the work in the construction department can be done inside of a month. This, the first of the new Navy, makes a splendid showing for structural strength, fine material, and good care.

"Her captain reports that she can average 14 knots an hour for any length of time, and under favorable circumstances she can run 16 at sea.

"In the course of her cruise the Dolphin has run 58,000 miles in twenty months, and has been under steam 9,000 hours. In this prolonged run she has been stopped for repairs but once, and then for only two hours. This performance is probably without a parallel in the history of naval vessels, and bears conclusive testimony to the high skill of American artisans and the excellence of their work. Nor is it the less remarkable in view of the confident predictions with which, at the outset of her career, the official condemnation of the vessel was somewhat prematurely pronounced by expert and by inexpert judges.

"It is therefore proved by the test of actual cruising that the first modern experiments of the Department have come close to the highest standard of speed which had been reached at the date of their design, and that in structural strength, endurance, and workmanship they are not inferior to anything now afloat."

The record of the Dolphin since November 30, 1889, when the above was written, has been equally good.

It will thus be seen no vessel belonging to the Government has ever been put to a greater test than has the Dolphin; and it has thus been demonstrated, as stated, that she was properly constructed and that, therefore, the Government in withholding payment and deducting the $28,169.75 did an act of injustice to claimant, and in the opinion of your committee the Government should now pay this $28,169.75.

There is one place in the report which shows she has only had to stop two hours for repairs.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the chairman of the Committee on Claims tell us why this claim was not included in that which recently passed?

Mr. BRUMM. Because they are entirely different and rest upon entirely different grounds. That claim and this could not have been put in the same declaration in any court of justice. They are as separate as any two claims can be.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does the bill if paid go to the same parties?

Mr. BRUMM. The same parties.

Mr. BODINE. Who gets the benefit of this claim—John Roach's creditors or heirs?

Mr. BRUMM. His heirs, or creditors, if he has any.

Mr. BODINE. At the time that he consented to receive this amount is it a fact that there was a moral compulsion to receive it or not get anything?

Mr. BRUMM. They had refused to take the ship. They had taken his shipyard, and he had made an assignment. He had to accept it under duress, and simply do that or get nothing. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside.

Mr. LOVE. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the committee and desire to make a statement. I do not desire to go into any extended discussion of this bill. In opposing the bill which this committee passed for the payment to John Roach's representatives of the amount of $330,000 the discussion of this claim was involved, I stated then, as I stated before the committee, that I was opposed to this claim. I am opposed to it for the reason that the disputed facts, the disputed questions as between Roach and the Government, were compromised, and upon that compromise $45,000, I believe it was, was paid to Roach's assignees and accepted by them, and a receipt in full satisfaction given by them to the Government.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. ROBB. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. How long after the execution of that receipt until this claim was presented?

Mr. ROBB. I do not remember just when the claim was first presented to Congress, but it was some time afterwards.

Mr. BURKE. How many years has he slept on his rights?

Mr. ROBB. I do not remember the exact time, but the controversy originated over this claim in 1886.

Mr. GAINES. Under what circumstances did he make this release?

Mr. ROBB. I was just going to state that.

Mr. GAINES. Was there anything like duress; and if so, who brought it about?

Mr. ROBB. The receipt in full, I will say in answer to the question of the gentleman from Tennessee, was not given under duress, but was made under these circumstances: There was a disputed question as between the Secretary of the Navy and Mr. Roach. That disputed question was whether or not the Dolphin had been completed in pursuance of the contract entered into between Roach and the Government. The Secretary of the Navy took the position that it had not been so completed. Mr. Roach took the position that it had been so completed. This receipt, I believe, was given by the assignees of Roach.

Mr. BRUMM. In 1886.

Mr. ROBB. I say the dispute was between the assignees of Roach and the Government when this receipt was given. The Secretary of the Navy and the assignees of Roach could not agree upon the compensation. Finally the Secretary of the Navy addressed a note or letter to the assignees of Roach, in which he stated that unless the assignees could suggest some terms of settlement they would have to go into the Court of Claims in order to adjudicate and have the court pass upon these facts. Now, in that note of the Secretary there was a suggestion that "unless they could suggest some terms of settlement." Following that came this suggestion. this proposition, that they would take $45,000 in settlement of the claim, which then, I believe, amounted to something in the neighborhood of $70,000.

Mr. BRUMM. Seventy-three thousand dollars.

Mr. ROBB. The proposition came from them and was then submitted to a board selected by the Secretary of the Navy to determine whether or not the Government could in justice accept this proposition to pay the $45,000. This board reported after investigation that they thought the Government would be safe in paying the sum of $45,000 in full satisfaction of all claims against the Government. Consequently the $45,000 was paid and a receipt in full was given.

Now, there was no duress involved in that. If a gentleman has a claim against me which I dispute, and I say to him, "In order to establish that claim you must go into a court and have that court determine the facts as well as the law involved," there is no duress about that on my part. The Government here is in exactly the same position. If we say there is duress involved here, can not we say it in any case where a claimant or a contractor comes in and says, "I am entitled to so much," and the officers say, "We will relegate you to the proper tribunal to determine it." I say there is no duress; it is a compromise, and the question whether or not he has received more or less than he was entitled to ought not to be considered here and that compromise disturbed. The compromise ought to be a settlement of the question.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me? Suppose the Government gets the party making the claim into a necessitous state, where he is obliged to make a sacrifice—I do not say that is this case—in other words, forces him into an assignment, and then takes advantage of his necessitous condition and gets out of him a compromise. What does the gentleman say to that? Is that so in this case or not?

Mr. ROBB. I do not know but that if the Government pursued a deliberate scheme to put the man in such a condition that he was not free to act as an individual, and was forced to make a compromise, that might be under duress; but there is nothing of the kind in this case. The Government did not force Mr. Roach to assign. The Government did not force the assignees of Mr. Roach to accept the proposition.

Mr. TALBERT. As I understand, this proposition before the committee now is to pay the difference between $45,000 and $73,000. After they accepted $45,000, they now come forward and claim the $28,000 in addition?

Mr. ROBB. That is it.

Mr. LENTZ. Was the $73,000 claimed for extra services?

Mr. LOVE. No; as a part of the original contract.

Mr. ROBB. A part of the original contract price with some additions made in this way. There would be changes made, and every change made was at the expense of the Government. That is, Mr. Roach was allowed a reasonable compensation for whatever change was made. But the amount claimed by Roach prior to his asisignment and the amount claimed by the assignees after the assignment was $73,000. The Secretary of the Navy, as I have stated, found upon these trials that the boat did not come up to the contract, and consequently refused to pay the full price, and it was upon a suggestion or proposition made by Roach's assignees that the compromise was effected and not upon a proposition coming from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LOVE. And the Government accepted their proposition?

Mr. ROBB. The Government accepted their proposition, but not until it had submitted it to a board appointed to determine whether or not the Government could safely accept it.

Mr. TALBERT. Are not the facts of this transaction in evidence?

Mr. BRUMM. They are; there is no dispute about the facts.

Mr. ROBB. No, there is no dispute between the chairman and myself in regard to the facts; the only dispute between the chairman and myself is, the chairman contends that this compromise, this settlement, the giving of this receipt, was under duress, and I say it was not given under duress; that there was no duress, either express or implied. I say there is no duress, considered from any standpoint whatever.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBB. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. This boat was built under certain plans and specifications.

Mr. ROBB. It was.

Mr. STEELE. There were bids to do the work at a certain price, and the contractor, Mr. Roach, had the contract at a price of $65,000 below that of any other person. Does the gentleman mean to convey to the House the idea that Roach of his own accord accepted $28,000 less than he was entitled to under the contract?

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, I will say, as I have stated before, that Mr. Roach, prior to his assignment, claimed that there was due him from the Government the sum of $73,000. After the assignment the assignees claimed there was due him the sum of $73,000. The Secretary of the Navy, after a trial, contended, and based his contention upon the reports made by the officials appointed for that purpose, that the ship had not been completed in pursuance of the terms of the contract, and refused to pay the sum of $73,000. There was some controversy between them, some correspondence between them, and finally the Secretary of the Navy suggested to the assignees of Roach that as they could not agree upon the disputed facts they should present their case to the Court of Claims in order that the court might pass upon the facts.

And in that same communication it is stated, "If you have any proposition to make looking to a settlement by the payment on the part of the Government of a less amount, I would be pleased to hear from you on that question." That was addressed to the assignees. They replied proposing that if the Government, without any further contention, would pay them the sum of $45,000, they would give the Government a receipt in full for all claims or demands on account of the building of this vessel.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Was there a general assignment of all goods and chattels carrying with it this claim?

Mr. ROBB. They were the regular assignees.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. There was a general assignment?

Mr. ROBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Roach made a general assignment of all his interests?

Mr. ROBB. He made a general assignment, and this claim is presented by his legal representatives. I understand (although I did not go into that question) that the assignees made a final settlement and have been discharged. This claim is simply for a balance due. In other words, the legal representatives of Mr. Roach are in this position: They contend that if he had been paid what was justly due him, the assignees would have received $28,000 more than they did receive; and since the assignees failed to receive that sum, the estate did not get the benefit of it.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. But so far as the assignees are concerned, the estate has been finally settled.

Mr. TALBERT. These assignees had the full legal rights of assignees.

Mr. ROBB. They had full legal right to enter into this compromise—to take more or less—to accept or refuse to accept the $45,000 in full satisfaction.

Mr. MINOR. I wish to ask the gentleman whether it is the truth that the Dolphin is the fastest ship of its kind afloat, or, at least, the fastest ship of its kind in the American Navy?

Mr. ROBB. I am not familiar with naval affairs, and am unable to answer. I will, however, say this: Gentlemen may say what they please about the speed of the Dolphin, yet when those trial experiments were made and when this contention arose, as shown by the record in Senate Executive Document 153, neither the Dolphin nor any of those other ships came up to the specifications or requirements of the contracts under which they were to have been built.

But, Mr. Chairman, it does not make any difference whether this vessel came up to the contract or not. It does not make any difference whether it has the required speed or heretofore had it. It is enough for us to know that the high officials of the Government stood upon a disputed fact, and other parties to the contention compromised that question, and compromised of their own free will and accord. They were not forced to compromise. There was no duress.

Now, I want to refer to another question. As I remarked in the beginning, I do not care to take up time in discussing this question. Other gentlemen may want to discuss it. I simply wish to state my position in opposing the bill. It is not a very pleasant thing for me to oppose claims presented by the committee of which I am a member.

Now, I want to state this fact, which appeared in my previous remarks—that on the claim of the heirs of Mr. Roach for $330,000, they received $109,000 more than they were entitled to, allowing everything claimed for them in the report in that case. If gentlemen will take up the figures, if they will take into consideration what is stated in the affidavits in that report as just and reasonable compensation per day and per month for use and occupation and for labor, and make their own calculation—and they need not go further than this report in making those calculations—if gentlemen will carefully make these calculations they will find that this House passed a bill allowing Mr. Roach's heirs $109,000 more than the evidence in support of the report shows he was entitled to.

I think it high time, Mr. Chairman, that this House should call a halt so far as concerns the allowance of the claims of the Roach heirs. They have already, in my opinion, received $100,000—I will even say $330,000—more than they are entitled to.

Mr. BELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I understand him to say that Mr. Roach was insolvent and made an assignment, and that the assignees, as representatives of the creditors, made this compromise.

Mr. ROBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. BELL. Now, does it appear whether or not Mr. Roach finally paid his debts?

Mr. ROBB. I only know that fact from the statements made in the discussion of the other claim. It was stated in that discussion that the debts of Mr. Roach were paid in full. That was stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MINOR].

Mr. BELL. And there was no compromise with his creditors?

Mr. BRUMM. Let me say that the estate has been settled up and the assignees have been discharged.

Mr. BELL. That might be, but the point I make is this: If the assignee, as the representative of all the creditors, preferred to take $45,000 in cash rather than $75,000 as a claim against the Government, so that $30,000 of the claim was lost, then that should not be paid to Mr. Roach or his heirs.

Mr. ROBB. I see the position of the gentleman. He would contend that in such an event the creditors would be the proper claimants.

Mr. RIXEY. Was this settlement made before the assignment or afterwards?

Mr. ROBB. My impression is that it was after the assignment.

Mr. BRUMM. It was afterwards.

Mr. ROBB. Now, Mr. Chairman, the position I take is that it does not make any difference whether the debts of Mr. Roach were paid in full or not. It does not matter whether this should be in the form of a claim of the creditors of Mr. Roach or a claim of his heirs. I say that under the assignment the assignees were the legal representatives of the estate and had full authority to enter into the compromise, and having compromised the case, if they acted improperly in dealing with the estate, the creditors, if they lost thereby, might have an action against the assignees, or if the heirs lost thereby, the heirs might have an action against the assignees.

But, Mr. Chairman, it does not lie in the power of either heirs or creditors to come in here and question the validity of this compromise which has been agreed upon. Let us take as an illustration the position of an executor, a guardian, or administrator under a statute or an order of court, authorizing him to compromise a certain cause or action—giving him full power to make such compromise in the premises as in his judgment he deems desirable—and he comes back with such a compromise, claiming, in good faith, that it was made in the interest of the parties to the suit and for the preservation of the rights of all parties.

Could it be claimed that afterwards the heirs or persons interested in the estate could go again into the court and proceed against the party with whom the guardian, executor, or administrator had made the compromise under the statute or the order of the court? Why, undoubtedly not. It would be final, and necessarily final and binding upon all parties. There is nowhere in the law or in the practice before the courts of our country anything that would authorize the reopening of the case. It would be, under the agreement of all parties, a final settlement of it. There would be nothing in law or equity to authorize the reopening of such a case unless, of course, it was shown that there was fraud in the settlement.

Now, there is no allegation of fraud in this case between the Government and the representatives of the parties who are interested in the pending claim. Both parties had a full hearing; and there is no question that there was a thorough consideration of the issues between the Government and Roach and his assignees. They agreed upon a certain compromise. That compromise was presented to both parties and was accepted. Would it be suggested, as a matter of law or as a matter of common justice, that that compromise shall now be reopened and a new case presented after all of these years?

Would it be setting a proper precedent, if nothing else were concerned in the matter, after a case has been compromised, in pursuance of an agreement on both sides, to reopen that case and submit it for a new arbitration or a new judicial decision? Would it be just to the people we represent, after a case has been compromised by one of the Departments of the Government having authority to do so, that such compromise, after the payment of the amount under it, should be set aside by Congress and the whole matter reopened again and a larger sum paid?

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that we ought to set any such precedent. It seems to me to be unworthy of this body to take such a position as that, and I do not believe it will be taken.

There have doubtless been other compromises made in which a party contracting with the Government has believed that he was injured; and if we shall undertake to reopen a settled question—a question that has received consideration by the Departments of the Government and which is supposed to have been finally settled—we may never know where it shall end, and the people of the United States may be involved in innumerable cases with as much or more merit than the one we are now considering.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. ROBB. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman has expressed his opinion fully upon this question. In looking over the testimony in the case he has come to a distinct conclusion. In other words, the gentleman, after waiting, has arrived at a conclusion that the Government is under no obligation to these parties. That is his opinion. Now, will he be kind enough to give us the facts on which he bases that opinion?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is well put.

Mr. GAINES (continuing). I think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman should now give us exactly the basis on which he founds his opinion. Let us have the exact facts in reference to the matter.

Mr. ROBB. We are the jury here to determine this case.

Mr. GAINES. Certainly; and that is precisely the point at issue. Will the gentleman state the facts?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. Let the gentleman give us the "facts" which he claims to be before the "jury" and on which we are to base our opinion.

Mr. ROBB. The facts are a matter of record, and it seems scarcely necessary that I should refer to them again. You all understand them. Here was a contract for the building of a boat to perform a certain kind of service and to have a certain speed. It was provided that it should conform to certain conditions. It was provided that it should be completed in pursuance of certain contracts which are also matters of record. It was built by the contractor and submitted for trial by the proper officials of the Navy Department, and according to the law, and they did not pass it as being built in compliance with the law. They claimed that there were certain structural weaknesses developed in the boat.

The first trial, therefore, was a failure. The second trial was made, and that also proved to be a failure, and the facts were reported to the Secretary of the Navy. Something about the machinery broke down, according to the report, and this second trial was necessarily a failure. The report was made to the Secretary of the Navy and another trial was granted, on which trial the boat not only failed to show such structural strength as was required by the specifications of the contract, but it did not come up to the speed required.

So finally Roach rested upon the claim that the boat was built in full compliance with the contract, and having been paid large amounts, he contended that the Government owed him the balance, amounting to $73,000. The Government contended that it did not owe Roach the $73,000, and based its contention upon the fact that the contract had not been complied with. Neither Mr. Roach before his assignment nor the assignees after his assignment could induce the Secretary of the Navy to accept this boat as having been built in full compliance with the contract.

Mr. GAINES. What is the record since that time?

Mr. ROBB. The record since that time is this: When they could not agree, after a long correspondence and personal interviews, the Secretary of the Navy, in a letter to the assignees, suggested that they go before the Court of Claims and have their right adjudicated.

Mr. GAINES. That is the record of the case; but what is the record of the ship? What has that done since?

Mr. ROBB. Why, Mr. Chairman, I know nothing of the record of the boat.

Mr. GAINES. The only record is that it has carried Grover Cleveland off on some fishing trips.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I do not care, as I stated a while ago, to go into the question as to what the record of that ship has been since, or what it was before, for the reason that that is not involved in this case. I have tried to discuss this case simply as if I was discussing it before a court. I have tried to present it upon its legal aspect. I say, whether the ship came up to the requirements or not does not enter into this case, for the reason that these parties voluntarily compromised all these questions, and have accepted a certain amount from the Government and executed their receipt, and that is a settlement of the case.

I believe that is all I care to say.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAINES. Now, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] try to answer the questions which I have asked the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB]? Just give us the facts, not your opinion. We want the facts.

Mr. BRUMM. As to duress?

Mr. GAINES. Yes; and the record of this man-of-war.

Mr. BRUMM. I will give that to you. It will take me a few moments. I want to say in the first place that what my friend calls this compromise, we claim was not a compromise. It was simply a forced condition. It was made upon a suggestion coming from the Secretary of the Navy. He said, "You make a proposition and we will consider it;" and in that suggestion the reduction was only to have been from seventeen to twenty thousand dollars.

Upon that proposition they had this board appointed to ascertain whether the Government would be safe in compromising with a reduction of from seventeen to twenty thousand dollars, and that board reported affirmatively. But instead of compromising on the basis upon which the conditions were thrown out to Mr. Roach, the Government afterwards kept back $28,160.75; so that the original condition was violated to start with.

But as to the duress, that was in this: The Government not only refused to take the Dolphin at the time, but when Mr. Roach told them, "I shall have to make an assignment," the Government still refused to pay him for building the vessels, upon a plea which afterwards proved to be entirely erroneous. Roach having made an assignment, the Government having taken possession of his yards, Roach was absolutely helpless. The Government had him on his back. It was while in this helpless condition, the Government having in its pocket $73,000 of money belonging to Roach for a completed ship, better than the contract called for, although it was in an experimental age, having forced him to give up his shipyards——

Mr. GAINES. What right had the Government to do that? Was it by the contract or the right of might?

Mr. BRUMM. Might makes right very often.

Mr. GAINES. Was it under contract that they had a right to do that?

Mr. BRUMM. Of course they had a legal right to take possession of the yards, because under the contract if Roach failed to finish those ships within a certain time the Government had the right to take the yards and finish them; and the other claim, you remember, was because of undue delay in doing that, that the Government did not act in good faith. But when this was done it was before all that. This is the thing that started the whole business, and when they had got Roach on his back and his money in their pocket and the possession of his shipyards, and the assignment made, it was then that they suggested, "If you come and do so and so, we will give you a certain sum of money;" so that was the duress.

Now, in answer to the gentleman, I say, Mr. Chairman, that if I make a compromise, and that compromise is an agreement that I will settle upon a certain condition, I certainly, under the law, have no right to include other conditions. But, sir, if a man comes to me with a revolver drawn at my head, and says, "Deliver or die," and I deliver under that threat, I have a right, under the law, afterwards to say, "You got that money from me under duress. You had a pistol at my head. You said to me, 'Deliver or die,' and I delivered rather than die." That is the fact in this case.

Mr. GAINES. That is a clear case of duress; but what are the facts?

Mr. BRUMM. Those are the facts. I have told you the facts.

Mr. GAINES. Now, what right had the Government to go and take charge of this property and take it away from this man? If it had the legal right to do it, where is your duress?

Mr. BRUMM. That is not involved in this case.

Mr. GAINES. If the Government had the legal right to go in and take charge of this, where is your case?

Mr. BRUMM. That is not the claim here at all. This is for the violation of a contract. The Government agreed to pay him $73,000 and did not do it. They owe him $28,000. You talk about "Deliver or die!" Why, in this case they not only made him "deliver," but he "died." So they have got "his money and his life." That is the fact in this case. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ROBB. I would like to know what similarity there is between this case and the illustration by the gentleman where a man comes up to another one to deliver and tells him you must "sign this agreement or die."

Mr. BRUMM. Simply because the Government did hold him in their power. They had the money. The ship was there, and they refused to take the ship, upon a plea which was afterwards shown was entirely erroneous, and because the Government was very much stronger than Roach.

Mr. ROBB. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Government turned the Navy on Mr. Roach and his assignees and compelled them to sign the receipt in full?

Mr. BRUMM. I will not answer that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 3953. An act to provide an American register for the steamer Catania;

S. 4582. An act to provide an American register for the steamer Centennial;

S. 4562. An act granting a pension to Julia G. Fay;

S. 3005. An act granting a pension to Zenas T. Haines;

S. 2119. An act granting a pension to Elsie Desmond;

S. 2886. An act to increase the pension of Thaddeus M. Joy;

S. 1976. An act for the relief of Annie E. Ruff, widow of Charles F. Ruff, late lieutenant-colonel, Third Cavalry;

S. 1758. An act increasing the pension of George W. Peters;

S. 4031. An act for the relief of James J. Wheeler;

S. 3825. An act granting a pension to Maria S. Whitney;

S. 1619. An act granting a pension to Michael Lannon;

S. 3676. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank F. Carnduff;

S. 4547. An act granting a pension to Eli M. Couch;

S. 4533. An act to increase the pension of Lucinda Booth—to the Committee on Pensions.

JOHN ROACH.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, at the opening of this case I suggested that I should like to have the entire report read. It still seems to me that ought to be done before we pass upon this matter. But taking what has been brought out by the two gentlemen, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB], it does seem that this case does not present a very good front, justifying a raid on the Treasury for $28,000 just now. There was no pistol at anybody's head. John Roach was not saying to the Government, "You will force me into the hands of a receiver or assignee." That had all passed.

Assignees were representing the creditors, and John Roach joined with the assignees in the compromise, and, according to the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, the Secretary of the Navy had said unless a compromise could be effected there was but one thing to do, and that was to take the case before the Court of Claims—a better court than this Congress, a Court of Claims which could sit and hear deliberately and under the rules take evidence on the facts that are involved. These assignees and Mr. Roach said "No." There was no pistol at anybody's head. There was no duress. The most natural and the most businesslike method was proposed by the Navy Department for determining whether they should pay $73,000 or a smaller sum out of the money of the people in the settlement of this claim.

The assignees and Mr. Roach said they had better take $45,000. A compromise was made on those figures, and a receipt "in full satisfaction" given. Now, what evidence is there given here for our making a donation of $28,000 more? Was there any duress? Not a fact has been submitted to suggest any duress. Everyone knows that assignees take their own time in making settlements. That is not all. Three different examining boards had rejected this boat as unworthy of acceptance at the price contracted for it.

Now, it has been argued here that because Mr. Roach proposed to build this boat for $65,000 less than some other contractor, therefore the Government got it for less than its real worth. Nothing can be more absurd. If the Government lets a contract for the building of a boat, and one bidder offers to build it for $500,000 and another for $600,000 and another for $800,000 and the Government takes the bid at $500,000, is the Government obtaining that boat at $300,000 less than it is worth?

Mr. BRUMM. Nobody asserts that.

Mr. LENTZ. Then is the Government taking this boat in this case at $65,000 less than it is worth?

Mr. BRUMM. Nobody asserts that.

Mr. LENTZ. That has nothing to do with the case. John Roach knew what the boat was worth better than any man in this Congress. He proposed to build the boat on certain specifications for a certain sum. Three different trials, according to the evidence brought here before us, was given to the boat, and never at any trial did it meet the specifications of the contract.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LENTZ. No; I am not mistaken. I say that everything governing this case—every line, every word, every sentence here—goes to show that when the Government made the compromise on the basis of $45,000, it was paid upon the fact admitted by both parties to the contract that there was a failure on Mr. Roach's part to comply with the provisions of the contract.

It is desired now to overrule the experts who made this settlement, to overrule the final compromise of $45,000, and say that we will donate $28,000 more several years afterwards, because the Dolphin has taken a couple of prizes, or because the Dolphin has run so many thousand miles. That has not anything to do with it. If the Dolphin had been up to the contract, she might have taken more prizes; if she had been up to the contract, she might have run more thousands of miles without repairs.

The proposition we have before us as a court of claims—for that is what we are doing now—is to decide whether somebody wronged the assignees, whether there was duress when the assignees—and John Roach through them—settled with the Government. I say there has not been offered here, in anything the gentleman from Pennsylvania furnished, nor in anything the gentleman from Missouri furnished, a word that shows duress. I fail to have heard a single fact submitted showing that this Government in its settlement in full by paying $45,000 took advantage even so much as by a hair's breadth. And for that reason I say it is an absolute imposition upon the people to take $28,000 out of the Treasury and pass it over to anybody on account of this transaction.

I will admit, if some one will read this report and show duress, will show where the Government took advantage, that the amount should be paid. It might have taken advantage before the assignment was made. Suppose John Roach had said to the Government officials, "I must have $45,000 this afternoon to meet obligations at bank, and in the failure to get that sum I will go to protest, go into the hands of a receiver or an assignee," and the Government forced him to accept that amount rather than to go into the hands of an assignee, there might be some claim of duress. But that is not the case here. He was already in the hands of assignees. The assignees, with full deliberation——

Mr. BRUMM. He was thrown into the hands of an assignee by this very transaction. You knocked him down, and then you say, "Because you are down, I will not help you up."

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania say that when the Government paid the $45,000 they lifted the assignment and took him out?

Mr. BRUMM. They helped him to that extent. He had to take that or nothing.

Mr. LENTZ. Do you say the payment of $45,000 lifted the assignment?

Mr. BRUMM. The estate is now in the hands of the heirs, and that $45,000 contributed largely toward it.

Mr. LENTZ. You do not say that the assignment was lifted by receiving the payment of $45,000. If you do say that, then you say this: That the assignees and the family of John Roach said, "It will pay us as a business proposition to accept $45,000 in full settlement rather than to put our case before the Court of Claims and try for a larger amount." Three tribunals have tested this boat and each one rejected it as inferior to the contract provision.

Mr. BUTLER. What was the contract speed to be made by this boat?

Mr. LENTZ. The only information I have is what the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Missouri have given us. I have not read the full report. I said at the beginning, and I say now, that before you ask us to overrule this full and satisfactory settlement made by the parties who had the facts before them, you ought to read this entire report to this Congress. I do not know anything about the speed except what I have learned from these gentlemen here, that three boards said the boat did not meet the contract.

Mr. BRUMM. That is not correct, and the gentleman did not say so.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Ohio wishes to be correct, and so do we all. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] made that statement, he did not take it from the report, because we can all read and write, and the report contradicts that.

Mr. BLAND. The whole difficulty arose on that ground with the Navy Department. The charge that is made here that the Secretary of the Navy wanted to defraud him is a grave accusation.

Mr. BUTLER. Who said so?

Mr. BLAND. It has been said here time and again that the Secretary of the Navy refused to pay the money because he wanted to defraud Roach.

Mr. BUTLER. How many trials were given to this boat?

Mr. LENTZ. The gentleman from Missouri is on the committee, and I suppose you are——

Mr. BUTLER. I am not.

Mr. LENTZ. Have you read the report?

Mr. BUTLER. I have.

Mr. LENTZ. All of it?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. LENTZ. I have not read it. I have no information except from what the gentlemen have given us here. I say the Secretary of the Navy said to these——

Mr. BUTLER. I only rose, Mr. Chairman, for one purpose, and that was to dispute a statement that the boat has never complied with the speed condition.

Mr. LENTZ. Then you are disputing the statement of a member of the committee.

Mr. BUTLER. The statement was made that upon three trials the vessel never complied with the conditions.

Mr. LENTZ. You are assuming to be familiar with all the facts of this case. Now answer a few questions.

Mr. BUTLER. No; I am not assuming that.

Mr. LENTZ. You claim that you have read the whole report. Now I ask you, Did the Secretary of the Navy offer to submit this question to the Court of Claims?

Mr. BRUMM. Let me answer the question.

Mr. LENTZ. No; the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] says he has read the report.

Mr. BUTLER. I know nothing about that.

Mr. LENTZ. I thought you had read the report.

Mr. BUTLER. I have read it, but I do not propose to make any statement on that point, because I am not prepared at this moment to quote from the report.

Mr. BRUMM rose.

Mr. LENTZ. I am not putting my question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM].

Mr. BRUMM. You do not want an answer.

Mr. LENTZ. Yes; I do. But I want an answer from this gentleman who assumes to know so much about the case.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not make any such assumption, but I do assume to be able to read.

Mr. LENTZ. You wanted to ask a few questions of a man who says, "I know nothing except what you and I and all members here have heard from the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Missouri." Everybody knows what has been said. The gentleman from Missouri says that he is upon that committee and discussed this very case; that it came up and was considered; that different boards were appointed to investigate this vessel and that all reported unfavorably. The gentleman from Missouri made the statement here that the Secretary of the Navy proposed to submit this claim to the Court of Claims, and that the assignees preferred to receive $45,000 and give a receipt in full rather than go to the Court of Claims, which could determine how much should be paid.

Now, I want to hear your statements [addressing Mr. BUTLER] and refer to your authorities, if you have any. I do not want to be catechised on a report which I say I never heard and which nobody here has heard except the members of the committee. If you know anything about this case, tell it to us. Did the Secretary of the Navy say, "Let this case go to the Court of Claims"? I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is the gentleman from Missouri right when he says that?

Mr. BRUMM. I will answer.

Mr. LENTZ. Very well; answer.

Mr. BRUMM. There was a suggestion or proposition made by the Secretary of the Navy, "You had better submit this to the Court of Claims." He suggested that if the assignees would submit a proposition looking to a reduction, the Government might settle; otherwise it would force them to go into the Court of Claims.

Mr. LENTZ. The gentleman says "looking to a reduction." Is that in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BRUMM. No; it is in the report and the testimony, and it stands uncontradicted.

Mr. LENTZ. Have you not the letter in that report?

Mr. BRUMM. I do not know whether that is in the letter.

Mr. LENTZ. We ought to have that letter read right here.

Mr. BRUMM. It is not here, so far as I know.

Mr. LENTZ. Where is that letter? Where is there a copy of it? If you are going to open up the question of the compromise settlement, it is very important to know whether it was under duress.

Mr. BRUMM. You have asked me one question, and I am trying to answer.

Mr. LENTZ. The important question is, What does the Secretary of the Navy say in that letter?

Mr. BRUMM. Here is the situation that presented itself: When the Government said to these people, "You must go to the Court of Claims;" when it said to a man it had knocked down financially, "You must go to the Court of Claims," the report of the Attorney-General for December, 1886, showed that at that time there were on the docket of that court 691 ordinary cases, 1,149 cases under the Bowman Act, 2,150 French spoliation cases, a total of 3,918 cases pending during the term of the court commencing December, 1885. That was the condition which presented itself when this generous Government said, "We have knocked you down financially, and we refuse to pay what we owe you. We will let you go to the Court of Claims."

Mr. LENTZ. Is it not a fact that hundreds of claims have passed through the Court of Claims since the filing of the French spoliation claims?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; but not claims of persons whom the Government had knocked down and put in the condition of John Roach. There is the point.

Mr. LENTZ. We are not dealing with John Roach, but with his assignees. Is it not true that the claims before the Court of Claims must take their turn? Was there any reason why the claim of John Roach's estate should have any preference over others?

Mr. BRUMM. This is a different case from others. In this case the Government had forced the estate into bankruptcy.

Mr. LENTZ. We are not dealing with that question. After the estate was in bankruptcy a settlement was made with the representatives of that estate which was satisfactory to the estate.

Mr. BRUMM. It was not satisfactory.

Mr. LENTZ. They claim that it was.

Mr. BRUCKER. Let me call your attention to the language of the receipt itself.

Mr. LENTZ. I have the report before me here——

Mr. BRUCKER. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, I will direct the committee's attention to what the receipt says.

Mr. LENTZ. Very well; let us have the receipt.

Mr. BRUCKER. The receipt is as follows:

This settlement being made in pursuance of the proposition of the assignees of John Roach.

Mr. LENTZ. Then that, of course, is not "duress."

Mr. BRUMM. But it was made after a letter was sent and the proposition submitted that this receipt should be given——

Mr. LENTZ. But what I say is that there was no "duress" in the matter.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] proposes to give us some additional information in reference to this matter from the record, and I shall yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, the letter of the Secretary of the Navy is short and gives considerable information about this subject. With the permission of the committee, I will read that letter. It is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 25, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: As I told you at our last interview some two weeks since, my efforts at reaching a basis upon which to arbitrate the matters in dispute as to the Dolphin have not been as successful as I had hoped for.

Her late trials did not entirely eliminate the doubt as to her strength, and had the effect of bringing other defects into view—increasing rather than decreasing my difficulties.

I think you had better do what you suggested at our last meeting—make an offer of settlement outright.

A difficulty arises under our November agreement as to work not first-class.

The agreement contemplates that if not first-class it shall be made so. That involves in some cases taking out wholly and putting in new. Take the decks, for example. The evidence is so strong as to them as to make it quite plain that they are not first-class in character, as called for in the contract. To a large extent, however, they would do, though not up to contract.

Now, as to these things the law certainly is that no waiver by an inspector can relieve the contractor in such a case. But are they then to be taken out and substitution made? I see no good reason why they should not be kept so far as they will do and a money allowance made for difference in character.

If you will make an offer, I will consider it and endeavor to get at a basis upon which I can with justice to the Government settle the whole thing. It is a difficult matter to deal with, but, as I have, at the earnest solicitation of yourselves and Mr. Roach, undertaken it, we will go through if possible.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

GEORGE W. QUINTARD and GEORGE E. WEED,
Assignees.

Mr. BRUMM. That letter was written after the report submitted by the Belknap board, which we have proved to have been an erroneous report.

Mr. ROBB (continuing). Here is the letter in response to the Secretary of the Navy, bearing upon the same subject:

WASHINGTON, April 30, 1886.

SIR: In response to yours of 25th March last, we would say that in view of the differences which have arisen concerning the Dolphin and the claims of insufficiency made by the Department, we are willing, and now offer, to accept the sum of $45,000 in full settlement of all claims, except that the matter of the shafts shall rest upon the agreement heretofore made, and compensation shall or shall not be had as the facts shall hereafter appear upon the test therein provided for.

It will be remembered that we spent a considerable sum upon her for which we have made no claim, covering matters referred to by the examining board.

If not accepted, it is without prejudice to any part of our claim. This has the approval of Mr. Roach.

Yours, respectfully,

GEO. W. QUINTARD,
GEO. E. WEED,
Assignees.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I am on the floor I desire to read this receipt, which bears directly upon the question at issue, following the letter of the Secretary of the Navy and the letter of the assignees written with the approval of Mr. Roach:

Received from the United States the sum of $45,000 in full payment and satisfaction of all claims and demands whatsoever growing out of or in any manner connected, directly or indirectly, with the contract of the undersigned John Roach for the construction of the U. S. dispatch boat Dolphin, dated July 23, 1883, save and except an unsettled demand of $4,396.24 for "changing shafts," which is reserved for the further consideration and action of the Secretary of the Navy, this settlement not affecting the rights of either party so far as such unsettled demand is concerned.

The said payment of $45,000 is in full satisfaction of all claims and demands for or on account of the sum of $25,000 reserved, under and by virtue of the agreement dated November 3, 1885, relating to the completion of the Dolphin, from moneys due the said John Roach on "other transactions," being the balance of appropriation for use of shipyard and care and storage of the monitor Puritan as per act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. L., 459), this settlement being made in pursuance of a proposition from the assignees of John Roach, dated April 30, 1886, and accepted by the Secretary of the Navy June 25, 1886.

Witness our hands and seals this 10th day of September, A. D. 1886.

JOHN ROACH. [SEAL.]

In presence of—
JAMES MOONEY.

GEO. W. QUINTARD, [SEAL.]
GEO. E. WEED, [SEAL.]
Assignees of John Roach.

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

On this 10th day of September, in the year 1886, before me personally came John Roach, George W. Quintard, and George E. Weed, to me known to be the individuals described in and who executed the above, and acknowledged that they executed the same for the purpose therein mentioned.

[SEAL.] GARRETT ROACH,
Notary Public, City and County of New York.

Mr. BRUCKER. What is the date of the letter of the assignees?

Mr. LENTZ. The letter is dated the 30th day of April, 1886.

I was about to call the attention of the House to the "duress" of which the gentleman speaks. The only claim for allowing the $28,000 to be filched from the Treasury by this process is "duress" upon these parties. Mark you, they claim that they were put under obligation to agree to a certain compromise with reference to the settlement of this claim.

But on the 26th day of March, 1886, the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Whitney, makes a statement in reference to this matter, which is embodied in the report and on which, if these parties had any valid claim against the Government, it would have enabled them to go to the Court of Claims.

It will be observed, by reference to the correspondence set forth in the report accompanying this case, that George W. Quintard and George E. Weed, the assignees of John Roach, agreed to a proposition submitted by themselves, to accept in full payment of the amount actually due to John Roach, or his estate, the sum of $45,000.

Mr. BRUCKER. What is the date of that agreement?

Mr. LENTZ. The agreement that I am referring to now is dated the 10th of September, 1886.

Now, mark you, the proposition to compromise was made by the assignees in April, 1886, and it was not until September, 1886, that the assignees gave a receipt covering the entire settlement of this claim. You have not given us a single fact upon which to pay out this money. You can not go before any court of justice and justify the payment of a nickel on such a record as this. A receipt in full was given in September, 1886, following a proposition in April, 1886, to accept $45,000 in full satisfaction.

It was not to save John Roach from going into the hands of an assignee. John Roach's estate was being settled by assignees. Six months' time was taken before the receipt was given, and I say again, that no man can afford to vote for this $28,000 unless he is willing to make a donation of a thousand apiece to the first twenty-eight men who present themselves in the corridors here. You can make donations of thousands of dollars to better purpose than that. You have got thousands of widows of old soldiers and tens of thousands of decrepit old soldiers who ought to have some money out of your Treasury long before you go squandering it in this way. Let us keep ourselves within the lines of common sense and decency.

Mr. BAIRD. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. LENTZ. I will.

Mr. BAIRD. From whom did the proposition to accept $45,000 emanate?

Mr. LENTZ. From Roach's assignees, Quintard and Weed.

Mr. BRUMM. No, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Whitney, as Secretary of the Navy, says:

As I told you at our last interview some two weeks since, my efforts at reaching a basis upon which to arbitrate the matters in dispute as to the Dolphin have not been as successful as I had hoped for.

The Government had already examined this before and rejected it as not according to contract. Mr. Whitney says in this letter:

The agreement contemplates that if not first class it shall be made so. That involves in some cases taking out material and putting in new. Take the decks, for example.

The Secretary said this after he had had experts examine it and report to him. Nobody criticises or questions the integrity of the Secretary of the Navy, and no man will dare step on this floor and say that he is in possession of information which the Secretary of the Navy concealed or rejected. The Secretary further says:

Take the decks, for example. The evidence is so strong as to them as to make it quite plain that they are not first class in character, as called for in the contract.

Here is a sworn officer of the Government, doing his full duty, saying that the evidence is plain and strong that the decks are not first class.

Now, as to those things the law is plain that no waiver by an inspector can relieve the contractor in such a case. If any agent of the Government undertakes to waive, he has not the authority to do so. There is no authority in the statutes allowing waivers, and the Secretary tells them so, and you and I stood up before the Speaker here and held up our hands and swore we would do our duty under the law, and we are not here for the purpose of making donations and gifts here to the estate of John Roach.

The offer of the Secretary of the Navy was this:

If you will make an offer now instead of taking out these decks and putting in entirely new material in certain other places—

To which they evidently had referred in the conversation two weeks prior. Now, in order to help you, he says, in substance, we can accept the boat notwithstanding the deficiencies if you make a reasonable offer of compromise. Rather than to subject you to a greater loss, rather than take and use so much as may be necessary of the $73,000 and tear out this defective material and rebuild in these parts ourselves, he says that the Government will give you the option to do one of the two things, either offer to accept a reduction or have so much of the money used as would be necessary to make it first class, and the Roach assignees took the one that was best for them and agreed to and did accept $45,000 in full settlement.

Mr. STEELE. Does not that savor a little of duress?

Mr. BRUMM. Do you not know as a fact that there was not a dollar's worth of expenditure on the Dolphin?

Mr. BUTLER. And never has been.

Mr. BRUMM. And never has been; that she was accepted just as she was; that that was merely a pretext, mere nonsense?

Mr. LENTZ. That does not prove anything. A man who has ever had a house built has accepted some things inferior to what he contracted for and insisted on a reduction, and then made no expenditure to correct the defect. The Secretary, with all these investigations and trials before him, said:

If you will make an offer, I will consider it and endeavor to get at a basis upon which I can, with justice to the Government, settle the whole thing. It is a difficult matter to deal with, but as I have, at the earnest solicitation of yourselves and Mr. Roach, undertaken it, we will go through, if possible.

Is that duress? At the solicitation of Mr. Roach and his assignees. Now, they came back after that and said, "Give us $45,000 and we will receipt you in full;" and six months after that they gave a receipt in full.

Now, I defy any man in this committee to step up here and say where Secretary Whitney or his examining commissioners were wrong. There is no evidence referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROBB] or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] or any other one in this body that shows the boat was not defective in the particulars mentioned by Secretary Whitney.

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, this very evidence shows it was not defective.

Mr. LENTZ. The mere fact that this boat has been on the water for a few years is no evidence that it is a first-class boat in all particulars. We will have to wait until after thirty years before we can find that it is a first-class boat.

Mr. BRUMM. Time has sufficiently demonstrated it.

Mr. LENTZ. I say the case is open, wide open, for somebody to show duress, for somebody to show why the Government owes a penny more on this contract. The mere fact that the Dolphin is a good boat, or a reasonably good boat, is not in the case. The Government contracted for a better boat than it got.

Mr. BRUMM. That is not correct.

Mr. LENTZ. Then the Secretary of the Navy was either a fool or a liar, if you are correct.

Mr. BRUMM. He might have been both.

Mr. LENTZ. I do not believe he was either. I say gentlemen on this committee are not informed on this claim, and you do not present satisfactory reasons for taking $28,000 of the money out of the Treasury. I say that the action of the Secretary of the Navy and the receipt in full of the assignees at the earnest solicitation of John Roach is the best testimony on earth, and you can not get any better evidence than Secretary Whitney, George W. Quintard, George E. Weed, and John Roach. I defy you to get better testimony than any one of these four, or either one of the four.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. LENTZ. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Is that receipt in full signed by Roach as well as the assignees?

Mr. BRUMM. Certainly.

Mr. LENTZ (reading)—

Witness our hands and seals this 10th day of September, A. D. 1886.

JOHN ROACH. [SEAL.]
GEORGE W. QUINTARD, [SEAL.]
GEORGE E. WEED, [SEAL.]
Assignees of John Roach.

Mr. BRUCKER. Was that act acknowledged before a notary public?

Mr. LENTZ (reading)—

STATE OF NEW YORK, County of New York, ss:

On this 10th day of September, in the year 1886, before me personally came John Roach, George W. Quintard, and George E. Weed, to me known to be the individuals described in and who executed the above, and acknowledged that they executed the same for the purpose therein mentioned.

[SEAL.] GARRETT ROACH,
Notary Public, City and County of New York.

"For the purpose therein mentioned!" "Receipt in full satisfaction!" Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania and some others say that these three men, one of them building the largest ships that ever had been built in this country, and men able to be the assignees of such a concern, had not the ordinary horse sense of children at school and that they did not know what they were doing, not competent to pass on their own claim, not able to know whether or not Mr. Whitney was right when he said "the decks are not first class, as contracted for," and that this boat was inferior in certain particulars.

Knowing their business, they admitted it was inferior, and they were willing to accept $45,000 rather than put the boat into the condition required under the contract. They went before a notary public and swore they knew what they were doing, and that it was right, and now you come up here and say that when they took that $45,000 it was under duress. You do not prove any duress. I do not know why, gentlemen, you are asking this Congress to steal $28,000 from the people and pass it over to John Roach's heirs. Why not give it to somebody else that needs it more if you are going to do anything of that kind?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman says that this is a steal.

Mr. LENTZ. I say it will be if you vote for it.

Mr. BUTLER. Then every man that votes for it is a thief?

Mr. LENTZ. You can decide that for yourself.

Mr. BUTLER. You say it is a steal.

Mr. LENTZ. I say it will be a steal of the people's money, in my judgment, and for that reason I shall not vote for it, and I shall pity the man that does vote for it.

Mr. BUTLER. Your pity, of course, will be very good!

Mr. LENTZ. I did not ask you for your opinion. I did not yield to you for any insults or any sneers. If you want to ask me a decent question, I will answer you with civility. I have the floor, and if you want to make a speech, get up and address the Chair, get your time, and make your speech. Gentlemen show they know nothing about the case and accept it on the mere statement of the committee; but we have presented the documentary evidence here showing that there is nothing to justify the vote of any man in this House to pay this $28,000 out of the Treasury. I do not care what his party affiliations are, no one can stand up anywhere, either in this House or elsewhere, and say why it should be paid, except that a part of the committee have reported in favor of it.

Mr. BAIRD. Has this claim ever been approved by any court or Department of the Government?

Mr. LENTZ. I have said a dozen times that there is no use in asking me questions about the report. I say the report ought to have been read. If the whole report had been read, it would not have been necessary to have had this discussion. So much of the report as has been read carries on the face of it no justification for paying this $28,000. I confess that all I know about the case is what I have gathered here from what gentlemen have said, and I have failed to hear one single word in justification of the payment of the amount of this claim.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, this Roach claim went through the committee when I was a member of the committee, and on the claim presented the other day I voted for it, believing that was sufficiently ample compensation for anything that grew out of this transaction. I do not think from my examination of the matter that the payment of this claim ought to be voted for by the House.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of replying to a statement made by gentlemen that there was no evidence that there had been three trials of the Dolphin. I hold here the report, which shows that there were trials on December 17, December 29, December 30, and December 31. Now, there were some other trials that I have not here just now, but I find these. After those trials Capt. R. W. Meade, in his report, among other things, says:

> Not desiring to strain the vessel unnecessarily, I slowed the engines until the ship became dry and easy; the revolutions were then 40 per minute and the speed by log 3 knots, the ship being still head to wind and sea.
> I am satisfied, however, that had I continued to urge the Dolphin to full speed she would speedily have been in great jeopardy from the vast amount of water which would have continued to come on board owing to the absence of the usual "turtle back" fitted to small vessels required to run at high speed in rough water.
> Yet under like conditions of wind and sea the steamers of the Ward, Alexandre, or Cromwell lines, and even the small channel packets (half the size of the Dolphin), could have made their schedule speed without any difficulty. The gale was but a moderate one, and just before the heavy sea referred to was shipped I noticed several merchant vessels running before the wind under topgallant sails. The sea, however, was rough for a small vessel.
>
> The Dolphin, as at present fitted, can not safely be driven at full power even in moderately rough water, and my opinion is, she is merely useful for smooth-water dispatch.
> Under these circumstances it seems rather a misnomer to call her a "dispatch vessel."

That is the report of the official of the Government, who says, "It is a misnomer to call this vessel a dispatch boat."

Mr. BRUMM. That is a contradiction of other reports made by other boards, and it was afterwards shown that this report was wrong.

Mr. ROBB. The gentleman says that is in contradiction to other reports made by other boards, but upon all the reports the Secretary of the Navy based his action and based his letter, and thereupon arose the controversy with these assignees, and upon that difference between them this settlement was based.

I do not desire to discuss the question further, but I wished to show that I was right in saying that the boat had had three trials, and it appears that she had more than that, and that the Dolphin failed to come up to the contract, and it was upon that that the Secretary of the Navy rightfully acted in refusing to pay the contract price.

Mr. BAIRD. I would like to ask the gentleman if this claim has ever received the approval of any Department?

Mr. ROBB. I will say that this claim has never received the approval of any court or any Department of the Government. On the contrary, the claim has received the disapproval of the Navy Department, that had it under consideration.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I now move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HANDY. I move, Mr. Chairman, that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Delaware, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division (demanded by Mr. HANDY and Mr. ROBB) there were—ayes 52, noes 62.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. BRUMM and Mr. HANDY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 69.

So the motion of Mr. HANDY was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], that the committee report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HANDY. Is it necessary to give notice now that the yeas and nays will be demanded in the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

The motion of Mr. BRUMM was agreed to.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that the committee had had under consideration House bill 637, House bill 3093, House bill 2425, and Senate bill 1115, and reported the same back without amendments, with a recommendation that they do pass; also, that the committee had had under consideration House bill 1768, and reported the same back with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

WILLIAM H. CROOK.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 1768) for the relief of William H. Crook.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the recommendation of the committee that the bill lie upon the table.

The recommendation was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the recommendation of the committee was agreed to was laid on the table.

JOHN A. FAIRFAX.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 3093) for the relief of John A. Fairfax, of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, this bill ought not to pass. The facts are simple, and I can state them in a moment. Some man made a contract with the Government for the building of certain roads. The Government settled with him in full. After the Government had settled with the contractor in full it turned out that he had not paid all his laborers. Then Congress made a donation of $75,000 to pay the laborers. It paid every laborer what was due him from the contractor—not from the Government of the United States. Now it turns out that one of those laborers was indebted to this man Fairfax for supplies.

It was not the Government or the contractor who was indebted, but one of the laborers; and this bill proposes to pay Fairfax $502 for these supplies. Whether, after Fairfax gets his pay, there will be a bill to pay the man who sold the goods to Fairfax does not yet appear; and whether, further back, there will be a bill to pay the farmer who raised the supplies, and also the man who transported them to the wholesaler who afterwards sold them to Fairfax, does not yet appear.

The Court of Claims, it is stated in the report, has rendered its judgment upon this claim; but it appears simply that the matter was referred to the Court of Claims to find out how much the laborer owed Fairfax; and the Court of Claims found that the laborer owed Fairfax $502. That is all there is of this bill, as appears from the report and from the discussion before the House. I move that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. RIXEY rose.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] wishes to say something in reference to this bill, I will withhold my motion. I simply yield to him for that purpose. I want to move that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me rather unfair that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], after having presided as Chairman in Committee of the Whole, should now come upon the floor to fight this bill.

Mr. HANDY. Did not the gentleman from New York, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, report this bill to the House a few minutes ago with the recommendation that it pass?

Mr. RIXEY. The announcement was so made.

Mr. PAYNE. I think both these gentlemen know better than to make seriously these suggestions. [Laughter.]

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I have never contended that Mr. Fairfax or any of the laborers referred to ever had a legal demand against the Government. But I have insisted that this claim, like the claim of the laborers, is based upon equitable grounds, which appeal to the conscience of this House for payment out of the appropriation.

Many of the public works of this city were constructed under the board of public works, authorized and established by Congress. In 1874, before these works were completed, Congress abolished the board of public works, at a time when the laborers and Mr. Fairfax, who had furnished supplies, had not received their pay and could not be paid. It was at that time, in 1874, at the time of the repeal of the act creating the board of public works, that Congress appropriated $75,000 to pay the laborers, and, as I say, to pay the people who had furnished them with supplies.

At that time, when all the circumstances were of recent occurrence, this appropriation was made for the purpose of paying these laborers. It may be that they had no legal claim against the Government, but Congress evidently thought they had an equitable claim, and this appropriation was made.

When this matter was presented to Congress it was referred to the auditor of the District of Columbia for his recommendation. After reviewing the whole matter he says:

> Mr. Fairfax presented his claim under this act, but on the ground that it was for subsistence furnished the contractor's laborers, and not for labor nor for hauling for the contractor, it was rejected. A technical reading of the letter of the law justified the rejection of this claim, but the intent and spirit of the statute would as clearly have sanctioned its allowance.

This claim has received the indorsement of the auditor of the District of Columbia. His recommendation was referred to the Commissioners of the District and by them approved and concurred in.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that this claim is as equitable and just as any claim for which that appropriation was passed. There is a balance still in the Treasury for the purpose of paying claims of this kind, and this bill provides that this claim shall be paid, if paid at all, out of the appropriation of $75,000 which was made in 1874.

This man has not been paid. He furnished these supplies to the laborers, and did so upon the faith that they were employed by the Government; and but for the abolition of the board of public works by Congress he would have been paid, as the laborers would have been paid. Congress, by abolishing the board, took away from the contractor the means of paying these people. This man who furnished these supplies was not paid, nor were the laborers. Congress appropriated $75,000 for their payment; and the auditor of the District says that a liberal construction of that statute would cover this claim.

I do not know whether there are other claims or not. But I will say to the gentleman from New York, who seems to be apprehensive about other claims being presented, that none such have been presented to the Committee on Claims, and, so far as I am informed, this is the only unpaid claim of this character. It has been repeatedly reported favorably by committees of this House, and has passed the Senate. I take it to be just and equitable; and the appropriation having been made, it should be paid.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing whatever of this claim except what appeared before the Committee of the Whole during its consideration to-day. The facts in relation to the claim were stated before the committee when the bill was under consideration. Seventy-five thousand dollars, it appears, was appropriated for the payment of the amount claimed here in 1872. The amount of the appropriation was deducted in the final settlement from the amount due to the contractors. It is understood, practically, to be a gratuity and was appropriated in that shape in behalf of the laborers employed by these contractors. In other words, it was an act of relief for certain laborers that had not been paid by these contractors, as it appears. It was a gratuity pure and simple to the workingmen.

The committee having the matter under consideration first reported adversely to it. They reported adversely because of the stand taken by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and by the auditor. But subsequently, after bringing the necessary amount of influence or cajolery upon the auditor, they induced him to change his first opinion, and a request was made to the Commissioners that Congress be asked to take such action as would make available an amount necessary for the unexpended balance of the appropriation already made to settle the claims under consideration.

Of course the appropriation for $75,000 has lapsed and was covered back into the Treasury; and the question presented here is whether the House, after the contractors had been paid and all debts have been paid, as well as the laborers, shall go on and pay other obligations incurred by the contractors, with reference to which we have no interest whatever.

I move that the bill be laid on the table.

Mr. HEPBURN. Before that, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to a provision of the original law.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RIXEY. I desire to know whether the motion that the bill be passed should take precedence of the motion to lie on the table?

The SPEAKER. The question would first be put on the motion to lie on the table.

Mr. RIXEY. I shall submit the motion that the bill be passed, if the motion to lie on the table is defeated.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. PAYNE; and on a division there were—ayes 60, noes 25.

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 86, nays 49, answered "present" 17, not voting 203; as follows:

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire with Mr. SETTLE.

Mr. BURLEIGH with Mr. STARK.

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. COX.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. BRENNER of Ohio.

Mr. BROMWELL. I find I am paired with the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON. I voted "aye," and I wish to withdraw my vote.

Mr. SPARKMAN. My colleague, Mr. DAVIS, is absent on account of illness. Otherwise he would have been present to vote.

Mr. BALL. I desire to ask if the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. REEVES, is paired?

The SPEAKER. He is.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman from Iowa, Mr. CURTIS, was called out of the House a short time ago, and he requested me to protect him with a pair. I do not know how he would have voted on this bill, and therefore I have answered "present."

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be recorded as "present."

Mr. STEELE. I think we ought to have a recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to know how I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. CANNON. If, perchance, the roll call should show the absence of a quorum, would I be entitled to be marked "present"?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman would probably be entitled to be marked "present" if his name would make a quorum.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to have a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a recapitulation of the vote would not be necessary, as there are 86 yeas, 49 nays, present 17—not a quorum. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House under the rule is now in recess until 8 o'clock this evening; and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. LACEY, will then please take the chair.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. LACEY as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask, before we go into Committee of the Whole, that all bills removing charges of desertion be passed over for to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all bills removing the charge of desertion be passed over for to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. What is the request?

Mr. TALBERT. That all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over for to-night.

Mr. COX. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have been here every night for two months——

Mr. TALBERT. I hope the gentleman will not object. I hope he is not going to put himself in the position of advocating cases of desertion while a number of the old fellows who never deserted have claims for pension here.

Mr. RAY of New York. I have no doubt if the gentleman from Tennessee will see the gentleman from South Carolina about his case, he will consent to its being considered, as he has with other gentlemen on other nights.

Mr. COX. I have a case of a man who was wrongfully charged with desertion; and as to its merits, I will say it is as meritorious as any that has ever been offered here, and I want you to get it out of the way, and then I will not bother you any more.

Mr. TALBERT. Then I will make the request plain and simple; and if you want to object, crack away.

Mr. COX. Very well.

Mr. TALBERT. That is all right.

Mr. COX. Well, I have done it. I object. I do not think it is treating us right.

Mr. TALBERT. I can not submit to having those bills for the removal of the charge of desertion come up so long as the old fellows who stood at the time of war have their claims here.

Mr. COX. I have an old fellow standing here under a charge.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent that upon the first call of the Calendar this evening only such bills be considered as are represented by the member present who introduced the bill in the House, and after the completion of the call under that order we again resume the consideration of the Private Calendar in its order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that for this evening on the call of the Calendar only bills where the member who introduced the bill is present be considered.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And that the Senate bills may be considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As to House bills. Is there objection?

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to say to the gentleman that in making that request he is simply hitting hard at his colleagues in the House——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a moment until the request is put in the form in which I suggested it? That is on the first call of the Calendar under that rule, and then the call of the Calendar will be resumed for the consideration of all cases as they come up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will repeat the request.

Mr. COX. One moment. I want to see if I can get unanimous consent to take up one case—I have but two cases—one case for the removal of the charge of desertion. I know all the facts about it personally. He is a most worthy man and a most excellent gentleman. That is what I have been here for, and I have stayed for night after night——

Mr. RAY of New York. I have no doubt if you will go to the gentleman from South Carolina, he will do what he has done in a great many cases on other nights. When a gentleman of the House has satisfied him that he had a meritorious case, he withdrew objection and let the case come up. I have not the slightest doubt he will do so with the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TALBERT. I am here representing the old soldiers, and upon the request of numbers from whom I have received letters, I take the stand against those cases, and I object to the gentleman's request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will restate the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana. That on the first call of the Calendar House bills considered will only be those where the member who introduced the bill is present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask what was the request the gentleman has suggested?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only purpose is that those members here will have their bills considered to-night.

Mr. COX. I have been here every Friday night since Congress met.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, that will be considered as the order.

Mr. RAY of New York. Before I make the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, I would like to ask if there is anything further between the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. TALBERT. I do not believe we ought to waste the time of this House by considering cases of desertion; and I want to give notice now that I will object to their consideration.

Mr. COX. We are in the House. I ask unanimous consent to take up the case of James W. Hardin. We have passed it two or three nights on this kind of suggestion; and if the gentleman will let me make a statement about this case and he then objects, I will have nothing further to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 685)——

Mr. MOODY. I do not think that is the gentleman's request. I understood the gentleman's request to be that he be permitted to make a statement in regard to this case.

Mr. COX. I ask this——

Mr. TALBERT. I object in advance to the consideration of a case for the removal of a charge of desertion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 685) for the relief of James W. Hardin and to remove charge of desertion.

Mr. TALBERT. I object.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar under the rule, which has been read.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. Do I understand that the gentleman from Tennessee objects to my request for unanimous consent?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I never interrupted a member in this House since I have been here, but if he will not let me make a statement about the case and objects before he knows a thing about it, this Calendar must go along in the regular way. I object to any sort of an arrangement. That is what he wants, and I will do it.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 87, noes 2.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOODY. Before the question of quorum is passed upon by the Chair, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that after we go into Committee of the Whole House it will be in his power to object to any case as it comes up.

Mr. TALBERT. I will say that I have great respect for the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I would yield to him as quickly as to anybody, but I am unwilling to allow this to proceed if they are going to consider the cases of deserters in preference to those of the old soldiers.

Mr. RAY of New York. You can raise that objection when the case is reached. If it is insisted to consider the cases of deserters in preference to other cases, you can object just as well.

Mr. TALBERT. If the gentleman will bring a quorum here, which ought to be done, that will obviate the difficulty. We ought not to legislate with such a slim attendance. It is not good legislation, it is not parliamentary, it is not good common sense.

To start with, they come in here and insist on taking up the cases of deserters and setting aside meritorious claims, and it is not good legislation. I shall object to it on all occasions. I do not do it in a spirit of captiousness or anything of that sort, but because I believe it is my duty.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Just one moment, Mr. Speaker. I saw this gone through with the other night, and I hope the gentleman will not insist; in two minutes he can put us in a position so that we can not do anything to-night, and I am sure the gentleman does not want to do that. He says that it is insisted that we shall take up deserters in preference to meritorious claims. That is assuming in advance that there are no meritorious claims. If there is a meritorious claim, if some man has had a wrong done him, I do not see why the charge of desertion should not be removed. But if he is a deserter, let us find it out and let us refuse to remove the charge. But if he is not a deserter, if a wrong has been done him, surely this House can find that out. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of no quorum.

Mr. TALBERT. I know there is common sense in what my friend from Indiana says, and I know this——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will be in order; the question is not debatable.

Mr. RAY of New York. This matter, Mr. Speaker, is proceeding by unanimous consent. Now, I desire to ask my friend from South Carolina a question, and that is this: Have you any objection to proceeding with pension cases?

Mr. TALBERT. I have stated my position; and I will say to the chairman of the committee that I asked unanimous consent and objection was made, so that to proceed now is to open the way for the consideration of these cases that I object to.

Mr. MOODY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOODY. Would it be in order for the gentleman from New York, or any other member of the House, to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of pension bills alone?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not, the House being in session under a special order.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Would you allow us to go into Committee of the Whole with the understanding that if there is any bill reached that you object to, a bill to remove the charge of desertion, we will let it pass by?

Mr. TALBERT. I made that request before, and it has been objected to.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to advocate any claim or oppose any claim unless I am thoroughly satisfied I am right in the position I take. I have on this Calendar the case of a man charged with desertion, one of the only two bills on the whole list in which I am interested. Now, I believe that the charge of desertion in this case was wrongfully made. I think this is just as meritorious a case as that of a man applying for a pension. I know this man; I personally know all about the facts. Now, for me to sit here and allow the gentleman from South Carolina to say, "You shall not present that claim; I will not even hear a statement about the claim," is something I am not going to submit to.

Mr. SIMPSON. Can the gentleman assure the House——

Mr. COX. I know all about the case.

Mr. SIMPSON. It is a good claim, is it?

Mr. COX. If I did not think so, I would not be here asking its consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. He is, I believe, a member of the Military Committee, which reports these bills for the removal of charges of desertion. In view of the care and attention which the gentleman, I know, has given to the business of that committee, I should like to ask him whether the committee is reporting here any bills for the removal of charges of desertion which are not deserving cases?

Mr. COX. I do not hesitate to say to the Speaker and the House that in my service on that committee I have never voted for a solitary claim unless I thought it absolutely just.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman. I have not a bill on this Calendar—I have not been able to get one there—so that I have no interest in the Calendar at all except the general interest which I feel in working off some of these private bills which are meritorious. As it seems almost impossible to get a quorum here at these night sessions, I would be very glad if we could by common consent effect some arrangement by which some of these meritorious cases may be disposed of.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I know everything about the facts of the case which I desire to bring up; I know how the charge of desertion originated; I know the man. Now, I ask the gentleman would he, if he were in my place, surrender his right on this floor by consenting to such an arrangement as the gentleman from South Carolina proposes?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I ought not to answer such a question as that. The only interest I feel——

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from South Carolina will allow me to make my statement, then, if he objects to this bill, I will cheerfully yield.

Mr. TALBERT. May I be permitted a word? I did not understand that I had gone so far as to refuse to hear a statement from the gentleman. I am always glad to hear him make a statement; he does it in such a nice, pleasant, earnest manner. He mistakes me if he thinks that I made any such objection. If the gentleman wants to make an hour's speech, I will carefully listen to him, because I know that while he is doing this no bill can be passed for the removal of the charge of desertion. So that, reserving my right to object, I am willing to listen to any statement the gentleman desires to make; but before he makes his statement, I would ask unanimous consent to have read an extract from a special to the Chicago Record which was handed to me——

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had the floor. I am not taking any stock in Chicago Records.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from South Carolina withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. TALBERT. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair will count the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore proceeded to count the House.

Mr. RIDGELY (before the count was concluded). I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will withdraw the demand for a quorum.

Mr. RAY of New York. Would it be in order for me to withdraw my motion?

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the count be suspended for a few moments. I again ask permission to have this special to the Chicago Record read. It will show that we are entering upon another war. It will show further why it is that I have such an aversion to pensioning deserters. This has been sent to me by a Union soldier——

Mr. COX. I raise a point of order against the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT. And I claim that I am representing here the true soldier.

Mr. MOODY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Pending the declaration of the Chair on the question of a quorum, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent to waive the motion to go into Committee of the Whole and also to waive the demand for a quorum, so that the House may give consent that the gentleman from Tennessee shall make his statement and the gentleman from South Carolina read the newspaper extract? And then we can start all over again and possibly do some business, for it is evident, I think, that both gentlemen are ready to come to an agreement.

Mr. COX. I am perfectly content to make that arrangement. After I have made my statement, if any member of the House objects to removing the charge of desertion in this case, I will make no complaint and raise no question.

Mr. MOODY. I ask unanimous consent that the course of proceeding which I have indicated be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] asks unanimous consent that the motion to go into Committee of the Whole be withdrawn. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOODY. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee be permitted to make his statement with regard to the case in dispute, and that the gentleman from South Carolina be permitted to have his extract from the newspaper read at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] be permitted to make a statement in regard to the bill H. R. 685. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, on which committee I have been trying to serve and do my duty as far as I could understand it. The bill was reported by the committee after a careful examination of the matter, and every fact which I state in regard to the case I state from my own personal knowledge of the case. This man Hardin lives in my district, and a better citizen we have not got in the district. He is a most excellent man, quiet in his habits honorable in his dealings, and trustworthy in every respect. That is the man, and I know him well. In the latter days of 1862 I myself captured him and I put him on his parole. The trouble with the man was that he did not exactly understand the obligations of the parole, or the rules that govern those matters; but to his credit, as I think, he faithfully observed the parole which I gave him, and while observing that parole he was marked as a deserter.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. He was simply a prisoner of war.

Mr. COX. He thought so, and he went to the State of Indiana. He never saw the order about paroled men reporting and being exchanged. What I feel about it personally is this: I put him in the hole, and I want to get him out of it. [Applause and laughter.] I have got no scum of a man, but a gentleman of the first water. Now, that is this case. I recommend this man as highly as I can. The trouble, I repeat again, grew out of the fact that when the general orders were issued by the Union Army for those who were paroled to report, I do not suppose he ever heard of them. He did not know anything about them at all, and he did not report. Then he was marked as a deserter. That is my case, and there is not a nicer gentleman in this House than this man.

Mr. CLARDY. This occurred while he was still under parole and virtually a prisoner of war.

Mr. COX. Yes; and at that time I would have paroled every man in the world if he had kept out of the Federal Army. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object, but I have a case here myself that has been here a long while. It is not a case for the removal of a charge of desertion. It is the case of the 85-year-old widow of a soldier of the war of 1812.

Mr. COX. I will vote for it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want everybody to have a chance to vote for it. Now, I ask to amend the gentleman's request so as to include the consideration of this case.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then I object.

Mr. TALBERT. From the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, I had concluded to withdraw my objection to his bill. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Thank you, sir.

Mr. TALBERT. Now I send to the desk a clipping sent me by a soldier, and ask to have it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the article referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TROOPS LEAVE FORT CROOK.

[Special to the Chicago Record.]

FORT CROOK, NEBR., April 13, 1898.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the Twenty-second Regiment marched to the depot and boarded cars for the South. The band played "The Star-Spangled Banner," and the several hundred civilians who had gathered to see the troops off cheered wildly. The wives and daughters of the officers added their cheers to the clamor.

Five hundred and five men and officers went aboard the cars and started for the South at 4.15 o'clock via the Missouri Pacific road. There were two sections of the troop train, made up of two Pullmans, fourteen coaches, one baggage car, five flat cars, and three stock cars. These carried the men and officers, the field pieces, wagons, horses, and a complete field equipment, one month's rations, all the available ammunition for the Gatling gun, one rapid-fire gun, and the mounted Hotchkiss. Every soldier was armed with Krag-Jorgensen rifles of the latest pattern.

Lieutenant Campbell and Major Kosper, with eighteen men, were left as a guard and to form the nucleus of the Veterans' Reserve Association, which is expected to take charge of the post in the event of war.

TWENTY-EIGHT COWARDS DESERT.

An extraordinary feature of the departure was the desertion last night of twenty-eight men. They left in singles and doubles during the night. It seems that all the soldiers knew what was going on, and that the deserters tried to get many others to go with them.

Some of the deserters told their comrades that they would all die of yellow fever and other diseases common to tropical climates if they went, while others asserted that the Government had not avenged the sailors of the Maine, and they were tired of serving such a nation. A description of each deserter has been furnished the police, and an extra effort is being made to apprehend them. An example will be made of them. It is considered that the men deserted practically in the face of the enemy, and the consequences will be serious.

Mr. TALBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I just want to refer to a number of laws that have been passed in the interest of deserters; then I have done. I have no comment to make upon that clipping which has been read, because it speaks for itself. I do not know who sent it to me. It came to me in a letter with the request to have it read. As we are entering upon the threshold of another war, it is not very well that we should be here encouraging deserters by removing charges of desertion and giving them pensions.

Now, after the first proclamation issued by President Lincoln, to all deserters who would come forward and have the charges of desertion removed, in addition to that, on August 7, 1882, a bill was passed further extending the time and privileges to all who had deserted to come in and have the charges of desertion removed. A great many availed themselves of that opportunity. On July 13, 1884, another bill of the same import was passed, and numbers availed themselves of that opportunity to have charges of desertion removed.

In May, 1886, another bill was passed; on March 2, 1889, another bill, and on July 27, 1892, another. The last bill was passed on March 2, 1895, removing all limitations whatever, and now they can go to the War Department without coming here and have the charge of desertion removed. So I see no reason why they can not go there under the act of March 2, 1895, and have the charge of desertion removed, if it ought to be removed. With the exception of the bill that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. COX] wishes to bring up, I again renew my request that for to-night we pass over all bills for the removal of the charge of desertion.

Mr. VINCENT. Do you mean to say that any deserter can go to the War Department and have a charge of desertion removed simply by applying to have it done?

Mr. TALBERT. That is my understanding. Under the other bills they were allowed so many years, but my understanding is that the act of 1895 removed all limitations.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is wrong about that.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman is mistaken about that. It does not apply to all.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, that was my understanding, and I have just read over the dates of the various acts.

Mr. BARTLETT. In order to get the House out of a tangle, I want to withdraw any objection which I made to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the bill.

JAMES W. HARDIN.

The bill (H. R. 685) for the relief of James W. Hardin and to remove a charge of desertion was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That James W. Hardin, of Wayne County, Tenn., be reinstated on the regular rolls of his company and regiment in military service of the United States, and that the charge of desertion be removed.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COX, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the rule.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have my request put to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before putting the motion of the gentleman from New York, the Chair will again put the request of the gentleman from South Carolina, which is that all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over this evening. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. RAY of New York was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the rule, with Mr. EVANS in the chair.

WARREN W. MORGAN.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6799) granting an increase of pension to Warren W. Morgan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Warren W. Morgan, who served as a private in Company G, Eighth United States Infantry, in the Indian wars, and pay him a pension of $20 a month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Pensions were read:

In line 8 strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve."

Add after the last word the words "the same to be in lieu of his present pension."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I should like to know if some system has been adopted at the Clerk's desk for the purpose of ascertaining whether the member who introduced the bill is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is present. The question is on the adoption of the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments proposed by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the name of the introducer of each bill be read as the bill is read.

ARMENIAS H. EVANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8551) to increase the pension of Armenias H. Evans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Armenias H. Evans, late a private in Company C, Sixth Regiment Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and Battery A, West Virginia Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

After the word "pensions," in line 7, insert "at the rate."

In line 8 strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty" in lieu thereof.

From lines 8 and 9 strike out the following: "from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report in this case read.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the facts in the case are these——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina insist upon the reading of the report?

Mr. TALBERT. I ask for the reading of the report. I think the report should be read. We have nothing but the Calendar on our desks, and we can not vote intelligently unless we know something about these bills.

Mr. LOVE. I think we either ought to have the report read, or the gentleman having the bill in charge should make some explanation of it.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been called for.

Mr. LOVE. I do not wish to obstruct these proceedings, but I should like to have some information concerning these cases.

The report (by Mr. WARNER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8551) granting an increase of pension to Armenias H. Evans, have examined the same and all the evidence and respectfully report:

This bill, as amended, proposes to increase from $12 to $30 the pension of Armenias H. Evans, of Pekin, Ill., private, Company C, Sixth West Virginia Light Artillery, who served from October 12, 1861, to January 18, 1865, and was honorably discharged. The records fail to show any disability during his term of service. He has filed no claim for pension under the general law. October 18, 1890, he filed a claim under the act of June 27, 1890, alleging rupture on left side, and October 5, 1891, filed another, alleging partial deafness left ear and cataract on right eye, and bad teeth. The hernia is alleged, but not shown, to have originated while in the service about September, 1863. The disease of eyes began to affect him in 1889. Claim was allowed, and he was pensioned, for disease of eyes only, at $6 from October 5, 1891, and $12 from April 4, 1894.

Medical examination by board May 6, 1891, showed no hernia, but varicocele and disease of eyes. For the latter he was rated eight-eighteenths. April 4, 1894, he was again examined by board and no indications of rupture found. The examination, however, showed that his right eye was totally blind and the left eye nearly so, and that he was totally unable to do manual labor. He is shown to have glaucoma in both eyes and to be beyond any possibility of benefit by treatment.

The affidavit of John W. Lambert, of Peoria, Ill., dated July 26, 1893, shows that on August 30, 1892, both eyes were diseased and nearly blind, the vision in right eye then only slight perception of light; left eye, twenty two-hundredths. There were then well-defined cataracts of both crystalline lenses. Also disease of both optic nerves and choroid coats of both eyeballs; optic neuritis and chronic choroiditis. Prognosis at that time for future vision very unfavorable.

July 26, 1893, he was again examined by the same physician, and disease of both eyes was far advanced. No perception of light in right eye, and vision of left eye four two-hundredths. Cataracts of both lenses increased and will soon blind left eye. Prognosis for future vision hopeless on account of the nerve and choroidal complications.

Dr. William E. Schenck, in an affidavit dated December 23, 1897, and filed with this committee, shows that claimant has anæmia and atrophy of the optic nerves. The sight of right eye is entirely lost, and that of left eye so much impaired that it is impossible for him to go about without the aid and attendance of another person, and it is simply a question of a few months when he will be totally blind. He has consulted a number of specialists in regard to his eyes, but all concurred in the opinion that nothing can be done in the case.

It is also shown by evidence filed with this committee that soldier is destitute of property, income, or means of support, except his pension of $12 per month, and has a family of four. He is 55 years of age.

Your committee will not permit this blind and worthy soldier to become the inmate of a poorhouse. A reasonable increase is only just, and the bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

After the word "pensions," in line 7, insert "at the rate."

In line 8 strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty" in lieu thereof.

From lines 8 and 9 strike out the following: "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SUSAN I. BARROWS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 877) granting a pension to Susan I. Barrows.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan I. Barrows, idiotic and dependent child of Silas Barrows, deceased, late a member of Company E, Eighth Regiment Maine Volunteers, said pension to be paid to her duly appointed guardian.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the following: "at $12 per month."

In line 8, after the word "Volunteers," insert "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

RUSSELL R. KING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1887) granting an increase of pension to Russell R. King.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Russell R. King, late a member of Company A, Eighth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LEWIS D. BAKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1480) granting an increase of pension to Lewis D. Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lewis D. Baker, late of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment of New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, at the rate of $20 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Artillery," insert "and pay him a pension."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some explanation of this case. I do not say this in opposition to the bill, if the evidence is such as to justify the increase.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this case increases the pension of this soldier from $12 to $20 a month. The soldier was shot in the Army, and he is drawing his present pension of $12 a month on that account. He has been seized with and is now afflicted by deafness and other disabilities, which totally incapacitate him from doing anything whatever. He is very poor and needy, and $12 a month will not support him and take care of him. Therefore the Senate and the House have agreed to increase his pension to $20 a month, to keep him out of the poorhouse.

Mr. LOVE. The amount is fixed by the Senate.

Mr. RAY of New York. The amount is fixed by the Senate.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JENNIE E. BURCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 368) granting a pension to Jennie E. Burch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jennie E. Burch, a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. I submit again and ask unanimous consent that the reports accompanying these bills be read for the information of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. I have no objection to the reading of the report, in accordance with the gentleman's desire.

Mr. TALBERT. I want to ask unanimous consent that it be read.

Mr. RAY of New York. You have the right to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Any member has the right to demand the reading of the report.

Mr. TALBERT. I know I have the right; but I ask consent that they all be read.

Mr. GREENE. I object.

Mr. LOVE. Then we will insist on having them read.

Mr. TALBERT. If you want to object to the reading of the report, just crack your whip.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will say to the gentleman, if he desires it, I will demand the reading of the report in every case.

Mr. TALBERT. I have asked that it be done, and objection has been made.

Mr. RAY of New York. I will demand it.

The CHAIRMAN. Any member has the right to demand the reading of the report.

Mr. KELLEY. I am in favor of having the report read. This is a meritorious claim.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not do this in a spirit of captiousness, but I do it because it is right and ought to be done; and I am not afraid to ask for what is right.

The report (by Mr. STURTEVANT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 368) granting a pension to Jennie E. Burch, have examined the same and the evidence and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to pension Jennie E. Burch, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., as army nurse, at $12 per month. She filed a claim June 23, 1893, under the act of August 5, 1892, alleging service as army nurse at Fort Wayne and Evansville, Ind., and at Calhoun, Bowling Green, and South Carrollton, Ky., and on the hospital steamer Thomas Tuft in 1861 and 1862; that she contracted chronic diarrhea while so serving and is now disabled by that, together with rheumatism, neuralgia, varicose veins, and piles.

It is shown by the records that she was employed as a nurse in the marine hospital at Evansville, Ind., in December, 1861, but that hospital was not then a United States Army general hospital, though sick and wounded soldiers were cared for under contract. The War Department declines to accept her service as being "by competent authority."

It is shown by the testimony of Lieut. Nicholas Ensley, of Company E, Forty-second Indiana Infantry, that she served as nurse through the latter part of October, 1861, until about the latter part of April or the 1st of May, 1862, in regimental hospital and field hospital at South Carrollton, Calhoun, and Bowling Green, Ky.; also at the marine hospital at Evansville, Ind. In December, 1861, he was nursed by her in said hospital for measles.

Elias O. Rose, first lieutenant of Company A, Forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers, also testifies to her service as nurse in the regimental hospital of the Forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers at Evansville, Ind.

George W. McConnell, quartermaster of the Forty-fourth Regiment, testifies that she was with the regiment as a nurse from the time of its organization, in October and November, 1861, rendering then and thereafter service as a nurse.

John H. Rerick, assistant surgeon, Forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers, also testifies that she rendered service as nurse with that regiment.

Cary R. Frisbee testifies to having been cared for by her as nurse in the measles ward, hospital at Evansville, Ind.

Norman Sessions, Company H, Forty-fourth Indiana, testifies that he was cared for by her while sick in the service.

John H. Gillett, same company, testifies that she served as nurse in the regimental hospital in January and February, 1862, and on the boat the time of the trip to Fort Henry and Fort Donelson.

The father and mother of the claimant testify that she left her little child, 2 years old, with them, and served in the Army as nurse from that time, October 25, 1861, to April, 1862. That she returned home the last day of April, 1862, broken and sick from the strain and exposure, which ran her into typhoid fever, from which she was confined to her bed, and the effects follow her through life.

She was the wife of Joseph W. Burch, of Company A, also hospital steward, Forty-fourth Indiana Volunteers, and it does not appear whether said soldier is living or dead, or whether she or anyone else is pensioned on account of his service.

She is 58 years of age and physically disabled. Her financial condition is said to be very poor.

The bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. TALBERT (during the reading of the report). I rise to a point of order. It is impossible to hear the reading of the report, there is so much confusion.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report as above.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ALMON STUART.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2276) for the relief of Almon Stuart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Almon Stuart, of Minden, Kearney County, Nebr., late a private in Company I, Ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. I ask for the reading of the report, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. KERR) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2276) granting an increase of pension to Almon Stuart, have considered the same and all the evidence and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase from $12 to $30 the pension of Almon Stuart, of Mindon, Nebr., who served from August 27, 1861, to September 6, 1864, and was honorably discharged.

He filed and established a claim under the general law for gunshot wounds of right hip and left index finger, and was pensioned therefor at $3 from discharge and $6 from April 2, 1883, until July 7, 1890, from which date he was allowed $12 under the act of June 27, 1890, for gunshot wounds of right hip and left index finger, slight deafness in both ears, and cancer of nose.

It is shown by evidence filed with this committee that the cancer has progressed until it has destroyed almost the entire nose and the sight of right eye, and renders him wholly unable to do manual labor. He is 76 years of age. His financial condition is very poor, indeed.

This old soldier can survive but a very short time, and as he served his country faithfully for over three years, it will not see him in want. The case is exceptional and meritorious, and Congressional action is fully warranted.

The bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 6 strike out the following: "of Minden, Kearney County, Nebr."

At the end of line 9 insert "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Almon Stuart."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. I want to read the act which I quoted here to-night. I stated that this act removed all limitations on the charge of desertion.

Mr. GREENE. Regular order!

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not take up the time——

Mr. GREENE. I object.

Mr. RAY of New York. Let me say to the gentleman from South Carolina, wait until the bill is read, and then you can take the floor and read that act if you desire to.

Mr. TALBERT. All right.

MARIA SOMERLAT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2878) granting a pension to Maria Somerlat, widow of Valentine Somerlat.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria Somerlat, widow of Valentine Somerlat, late a private in Company A, Twenty-ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to Maria Somerlat."

Mr. TALBERT. Before reading the report, Mr. Chairman, I want to set myself right. I stated that the act of 1895 removed the limitation for the relief of certain soldiers, and in proof that I was right, I will read it. It is as follows:

An act to further amend section 9 of the act for the relief of certain volunteer and regular soldiers of the late war and the war with Mexico, passed March 2, 1889.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act for the relief of certain volunteer and regular soldiers of the late war and the war with Mexico, approved March 2, 1889, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to remove the limitation of time within which applications for relief may be received and acted upon under the provisions of said act.

Approved March 2, 1895.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That does not apply to all charges of desertion.

Mr. TALBERT. It does; it is not restricted at all.

Mr. GREENE. It only applies to the time.

Mr. TALBERT. If the gentleman from Nebraska can not understand common English, I can not help it. I think the gentleman has done altogether too much objecting to-night.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that the next bill may be considered, notwithstanding the fact that the gentleman who introduced it is not here. It is a bill to pension James E. Jones. My colleague, Mr. GILLET, introduced it, and it is impossible for him to be here. I told him, at his request, I would try and take care of the bill for him. You all know that he has had no bill passed, and I think this is the only bill in which he is interested that has been reported from the committee.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Has the gentleman been here to help make up a quorum?

Mr. RAY of New York. He has been here very many nights.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then if he has been present helping to make a quorum, I have no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. This seems to be an exceptional case, Mr. Chairman, and I think it should be taken up.

The request of Mr. RAY of New York was agreed to.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James E. Jones, late brevet colonel and assistant quartermaster, and pay him a pension of $25 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN CONNOLLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8243) to pension John Connolly, father of Thomas Connolly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Connolly, father of Thomas Connolly, late of Company A, Sixty-ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, in the war of the rebellion, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "in the war of the rebellion."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to John Connolly."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BENJAMIN L. NOLAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3807) granting a pension to Benjamin L. Nolan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject otherwise to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin L. Nolan, late a private in Company D, Eighth Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and Troop G, Third United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert "at the rate."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PHILIP F. CASTLEMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1155) granting a pension to P. F. Castleman, of Oregon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $15 per month, the name of P. F. Castleman, who served as acting assistant quartermaster of Oregon Volunteers in the Indian war in Oregon of 1855 and 1856.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Change the claimant's name in the title and in the body of the bill to "Philip F. Castleman."

Strike out the words "acting assistant quartermaster," in line 6, and substitute therefor the words "quartermaster's agent," that being his designation on the records of the Treasury Department.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM A. BECKFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 489) granting an increase of pension to William A. Beckford.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William A. Beckford, late first lieutenant of Company F, Eighth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. LOVE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 499) granting an increase of pension to William A. Beckford, have examined the same and report:

This bill proposes to increase from $30 to $50 per month the pension of William A. Beckford, of Bristol, N. H.

The soldier suffers from a gunshot wound, received in battle, through the shoulder and breast, which frequently breaks out and requires surgical operations. He is poor and has a helpless wife to support.

The case is a meritorious one, and the Senate bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

After the word "Infantry," in line 7, insert "and pay him a pension."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, the evidence is very long which we printed, and I would ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he desires the reading of all the evidence? I want to say to him that the man was before the committee and I examined him personally. He was shot through the breast and has running sores and wounds which are open constantly and discharge from the shoulder and lungs. His wife is absolutely helpless and he has no property.

Mr. LOVE. I know nothing, of course, of the nature of the case, but thought it was remarkable that he should be pensioned at $50 a month. I should not have insisted on the reading of the report if the chairman had explained the case.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ALONZO B. CHATFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4003) to construe an act approved June 3, 1884, rerating and including the disability of Alonzo B. Chatfield, late of Company B, Thirty-third Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved June 3, 1884, "rerating and including the disability of Alonzo B. Chatfield, late of Company B, Thirty-third Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry, with that class of pensioners who have lost an arm at or above the elbow," be construed to be continuous in its provision: and the Commissioner of Pensions is hereby instructed to reenter and continue the name of said pensioner on the roll with the class mentioned in said act, and at the rate of pension provided for said class, from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY A. BENJAMIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 862) granting a pension to Mary A. Benjamin

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Benjamin, widow of the late Horatio H. Benjamin, captain Company B, One hundred and thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, previously colonel, United States Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ADELAIDE H. LAMBERTSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3254) granting a pension to Adelaide H. Lambertson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Adelaide H. Lambertson, as widow of Charles H. Kennon, late quartermaster-sergeant Company D, Second Regiment Rhode Island Cavalry.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ANDREW C. MENSCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3443) granting an increase of pension to Andrew C. Mensch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew C. Mensch, late first lieutenant Company E, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and private and captain of Company E, Two hundred and ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment reported by the committee was read and agreed to, as follows:

In line 10, after the word "pension," insert "at the rate."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

PETER DALY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 158) granting a pension to Peter Daly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, Peter Daly, late of Company K, First Regiment of United States Infantry, and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "laws," insert "the name of."

Add at the end of line 7 the words "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving."

Amend the title so it will read: "An act granting an increase of pension to Peter Daly."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

JUSTIN O. HOTTENSTEIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 9295) for the relief of J. O. Hottenstein.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. O. Hottenstein, of Humboldt, Kans., late of Company G, Twentieth Illinois Infantry, said pension to be at the rate of $24 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the capital "J." and insert "Justin" in lieu thereof.

In same line strike out the words "of Humboldt, Kans."

In line 7 strike out all after the word "Infantry" and insert in lieu thereof "and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Justin O. Hottenstein."

Mr. RAY of New York. I move to amend this bill so as to make the amount of the pension $30 instead of $24.

Mr. LOVE. I should like to hear some explanation for this increase.

Mr. RAY of New York. This man is now drawing a pension of $24 a month. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARNER] who is here can tell you the circumstances of this case. He saw this man on the battlefield shot through the chest and lungs and bleeding at the mouth. He has, as years have gone on, grown worse and worse, and is now in a very bad condition.

Mr. LOVE. The gentleman states that this man is already drawing $24 a month; and that is the amount which this bill proposes to pay.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is a mistake. The intention of the committee was to report in favor of a pension of $30 a month.

Mr. WARNER. I supposed in drawing this bill that under it the man would receive $24 per month additional, which he ought to have.

The amendment of Mr. RAY of New York was agreed to.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CHARLES F. HOLLY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2220) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Holly.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles F. Holly, late captain of Company H of the Second Colorado Cavalry, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "cavalry" insert the words "and pay him a pension."

In the same line strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Mr. LOVE. This bill provides that this man be placed on the pension roll, when, as I understand, he is already on the pension roll. Does this provide for an increase?

Mr. RAY of New York. This is an increase.

Mr. LOVE. I thought from the language of the bill he was already a pensioner.

Mr. RAY of New York. Every bill increasing a pension reads in this form:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, etc.

It places the man on the pension roll at an increased rate. This bill as amended provides simply for increasing his pension from $20 to $30 a month.

Mr. LOVE. On account of increased disability?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; his disabilities are very severe, and he is 77 years of age and very poor.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY M'LAUGHLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3001) granting a pension to Mary McLaughlin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $20 per month, the name of Mary McLaughlin, widow of the late James McLaughlin, captain of Company I, Tenth Regiment Kansas State Militia (certificate numbered 407126).

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out "at the rate of $20 per month."

Strike out all after the word "Militia," in line 9, and insert in lieu thereof "and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

LUCIA A. HYNES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 507) restoring to the pension roll the name of Lucia A. Hynes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension roll the name of Lucia A. Hynes, widow of John R. Hynes, late first lieutenant of Company A, Third Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, captain and assistant quartermaster, and first lieutenant Twenty-fourth United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

In line 4 strike out the words "restore to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "place on."

Amend the title so as to read, "An act granting a pension to Lucia A. Hynes."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELLEN E. NASH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6093) granting a pension to Ellen E. Nash, an army nurse during the war of the rebellion.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, the name of Ellen E. Nash, who was an army nurse during the war of the rebellion.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out "at the rate of $12 per month."

At the end of line 6, add the following: "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Ellen E. Nash."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

RICHARD T. SELTZER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1424) granting a pension to Richard T. Seltzer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Richard T. Seltzer, late private Company F, Fortieth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month from the passage of this act.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read:

In lines 8 and 9, after the word "month," in line 8, strike out the words "from the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, has the report been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desires the report read.

The report (by Mr. MIERS of Indiana) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1424) granting a pension to Richard T. Seltzer, have carefully examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This act proposes to pension, at the rate of $8 per month, Richard T. Seltzer, of 3316 High street, Denver, Colo.

The Senate report states the facts, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1424) granting a pension to Richard T. Seltzer, have examined the same and report:

"A similar bill was introduced in the Senate during the Fifty-fourth Congress, passed the Senate, and was reported favorably by the House.

"The Senate report was as follows, which your committee adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"The bill proposes to place upon the pension roll the name of Richard T. Seltzer, late private Company F, Fortieth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month. The report of the Commissioner of Pensions of the committee shows that petitioner was a pensioner under the act of June 27, 1890, at the rate of $8 per month; that said pension was discontinued August 17, 1895, upon the ground that he was not pensionably disabled under the said act.

"From the Commissioner's report it would appear that the claimant had been twice examined by the Denver (Colo.) board of surgeons, and it is stated that said board (date not given) rated him at eight-eighteenths; that on another occasion, March, 1894, said board found 'no disability.' The record shows that the action of dropping was not taken until sixteen months subsequent to the examination that developed no disability. It is not shown what testimony, if any, was submitted by the claimant to avert the threatened loss of his pension, and it is not stated in terms that the adverse examination was the last one made.

"For one of the disabilities for which this pension was granted the record shows treatment in the service, and the fact that some thirty years after it was found upon medical examination strongly tends to negative the conclusion that it has now ceased to exist. All the disabilities for which pensioned are those that are recognized as progressive in character, and while the papers before the committee do not afford positive affirmative evidence that they do now exist in a pensionable degree, they are equally defective in definitely showing that they have ceased to incapacitate the petitioner.

"From a consideration of all the facts presented, the committee is not satisfied that the title, once conceded, to pension has been properly divested, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill as amended hereby.

"Amend by striking out, in line 8, the word 'twelve' and inserting in lieu thereof the word 'eight.'"

The Senate bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In lines 8 and 9, after the word "month" in line 8, strike out the words "from the passage of this act."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. DIANA CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2673) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Diana Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll of the United States the name of Diana Clark, widow of Capt. Charles Clark, of Company B, Thirtieth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of the pension which she now receives.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendments:

In line 8 strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "twelve."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Diana Clark."

Mr. VINCENT. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting the word "twenty" in line 8 instead of "twelve."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the committee amendment is voted down the gentleman's amendment will be unnecessary.

Mr. VINCENT. I hope this will be voted down, and that $20 a month will be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment is voted down, the amount will remain in the bill at $20.

Mr. VINCENT. I should like to have the amendment voted down, and I should like to state some reasons why it should be done. The committee amendment provides for $12 a month. The bill as originally introduced provided for $20 a month. I think this lady is entitled to at least $20 a month, if she is entitled to anything. Her husband was a soldier in the Union Army. Before that he was a soldier in the Mexican war. While serving as a soldier in the war of the rebellion he was discharged because of his feeble condition, because it was necessary to save his life. I think the evidence amply justifies the payment of $20 a month.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this case whatever to justify any pension of $20 a month. The committee carefully examined the evidence, and this woman is only entitled, under any circumstances, to $8 a month under the general law. We gave her $12 to help her out. Under the circumstances, this increase of $4 is a large increase, much more than the general law would give her. Her husband's death was not due to army service, and the bill as amended by the committee simply gives her $4 a month more than the widows throughout the country receive under the same circumstances. I trust that the committee will be supported in its action.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EUGENE A. SHAW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8679) granting an increase of pension to Eugene A. Shaw.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Eugene A. Shaw, late a sergeant in Company C, Twenty-second Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, upon the pension rolls of the United States, with an increase of pension to $25 per month, in lieu of any pension that he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read:

In line 7, strike out the words "with an increase of pension" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension of."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report in that case.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks for the reading of the report. The Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The report (by Mr. DRIGGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8679) granting an increase of pension to Eugene A. Shaw, have examined the same and all the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $12 to $18 per month the pension of Eugene A. Shaw, of Poplarflat, Ky., who served from December 2, 1861, to January 20, 1865, in Company C, Twenty-second Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged. He filed and established a claim under the general law for disease of eyes, and was pensioned therefor at $2 to January 18, 1890, and $4 until July 15, 1890, when he was allowed $12 under the act of June 27, 1890, for loss of right forearm.

The loss of arm occurred accidentally in a sawmill in 1869, and it appears from evidence filed that in consequence of that, impairment of sight, and a disability in the other arm, he is totally disabled for manual labor.

The soldier's financial condition is very poor. It is clear that a moderate increase is justified, and the bill is reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 7 strike out the words "with an increase of pension" and insert in lieu thereof the words "and pay him a pension of."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

DANIEL G. GEORGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 506) granting an increase of pension to Daniel G. George.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel G. George, late of Company D, First Massachusetts Cavalry, and United States Navy, and pay him a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read:

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate of."

Mr. TALBERT. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. SULLOWAY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 506) granting an increase of pension to Daniel G. George, have carefully examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase from $12 to $30 per month the pension of Daniel G. George, of West Hampstead, N. H.

The Senate report states the facts, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 506) granting an increase of pension to Daniel G. George, have examined the same and report:

"Claimant enlisted September 16, 1861, in Company D, First Massachusetts Cavalry, and served in that regiment and in the United States Navy continuously until April 26, 1866. He was an especially brave soldier, and received a medal of honor for participation in the destruction of the Confederate ram Albemarle.

"During his services soldier received a comminuted fracture of the thigh, the bone being broken into eight pieces. This resulted in a serious shortening of the limb and a permanent disability. He is drawing a pension of $12 per month, several applications for increase having been rejected. He is now suffering from partial paralysis of the right side and organic heart disease. The paralysis has also practically destroyed the sight of one eye. He is entirely unable to perform any manual labor, and at times needs the care and attention of others.

"The following transcript from the records of the office of the adjutant-general of New Hampshire, and medical affidavits, are of interest in the case:

"STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"Concord, March 29, 1897.

"I certify that the official records of this office show that Daniel G. George enlisted on the 16th day of September, 1861, and was mustered into the service of the United States as a private in Company D, First Regiment Cavalry Massachusetts Volunteers, on the 17th day of September, 1861, for the period of three years.

"He is also officially reported as appointed first sergeant February 8, 1863; reenlisted January 1, 1864; transferred to United States Navy May 7, 1864, as an ordinary seaman, under the name of William Smith; served on the U. S. S. North Carolina and Chicopee; volunteered from Chicopee as one of the crew of the Picket Laurel, No. 1; captured October 27, 1864, at Plymouth, N. C.; paroled; served on U. S. S. Hartford and Chicopee; discharged, services no longer required, April 26, 1866, as cockswain from Chicopee; received medal of honor for participation in the destruction of the rebel ram Albemarle October 27, 1864, at Plymouth, N. C.

MEDICAL AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, County of Essex, ss:

In the matter of claim for pension of Daniel G. George, Company D, First Massachusetts Cavalry and United States Navy.

On this 20th day of February, A. D. 1896, personally appeared before me, a notary public in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Franklin H. Allen, M. D., a resident of Haverhill, in the county of Essex and State of Massachusetts, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declared in relation to aforesaid case as follows:

I have known the said Daniel G. George about eighteen years. February 15, 1897, I examined the said Daniel G. George and found a partial paralysis of right side, partial loss of vision, right leg 2 inches shorter than left leg, which he informs me was contracted in the service. From the result of my examination I think he is unable to perform any manual labor. This is my own handwriting.

My post-office address is Haverhill, Mass.

FRANKLIN H. ALLEN, M. D.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, County of Essex, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant, including the words erased and the word "was" added, and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in no wise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution; and that said affiant is personally known to me, and that he is a physician of good standing in Haverhill, Mass.

[SEAL.] JARED M. DAVIS, Notary Public.

HAMPSTEAD, N. H., February 22, 1897.

I have examined Daniel G. George and find the following: Partial paralysis of right side; right eye nearly useless, owing to said paralysis; right leg 1¼ inches shorter than left; heart disease. I find these disabilities such that he can not perform manual labor.

ELMER E. LAKE, M. D.,
Hampstead, N. H.

FEBRUARY 23, 1897.

HAMPSTEAD, N. H., Rockingham County, ss:

Personally appeared the above-named, Elmer E. Lake, M. D., and made oath that the above certificate, by him signed, was true.

Before me:

[SEAL.] CHARLES W. GARLAND,
Notary Public.

"Your committee are of opinion that, in view of the long and exceedingly meritorious services of this soldier, and his present deplorable condition, the technicality as to whether paralysis is the result of the severe injury received in the service may well be waived and the increase asked for be granted. The bill is therefore reported back favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate of."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

IDA EMMOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3026) granting a pension to Ida Emmott, dependent and invalid daughter of the late Thomas Emmott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ida Emmott, dependent and invalid daughter of the late Thomas Emmott, private in the Seventh Battery of Massachusetts Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. This is a case of a blind, deaf, dependent, helpless daughter of an old soldier. She has no property and no one to take care of her, and here is her condition: She has been of unsound mind since infancy, is totally deaf, and partially blind, and utterly dependent upon others for support. This is proved by an abundance of evidence. Her father had a good record as a soldier.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH PORTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1477) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Porter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Porter, late a private in Company K, Eighth New York Heavy Artillery, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. LOVE. I ask for the reading of the report or some explanation by the chairman.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman says an explanation will answer. If that is so, I will give it, as the report is quite long. The evidence is given in detail.

This man had a first-class record. At the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia, the enemy came upon them and they rushed for their guns. In the course of the battle he received a very severe injury to one arm; and when the fight was over, he found that he had been pierced through his hand by a bayonet. He took cold from lying out in the storm, and was taken with rheumatism, which has followed him all this time, until he is now partially paralyzed and is utterly helpless. He is very poor. The report gives the evidence in detail. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. TALBERT. How much is he getting now?

Mr. RAY of New York. He is now getting $12 a month, and we increased it to $30. The disability is increasing with old age. He is broken down, and ought not to go to the poorhouse.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY HANNAH CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4977) granting a pension to Mary Hannah Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Hannah Clark, dependent child of John W. Clark, deceased, late a member of Company B, Eighth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and Company A, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Heavy Artillery.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "at $12 per month."

After "Clark," in line 6, insert "totally blind and."

At the end of line 9 add the following: "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. RAY of New York. I will say to the gentleman, without reading the report, which is quite a long one, that this is a case of a totally blind child of an old soldier. She has been blind from her infancy. Her father and mother are both dead, and left no property, and the committee give her $12 a month.

Mr. MOODY. And the father died of disease contracted in the service.

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; the father died of disease contracted in the service.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WIDOW OF HENRY W. PETER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8090) for the relief of the widow of the late Henry W. Peter, late contract surgeon of the United States Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Belle Peter, at the rate of $15 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Peter," in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Widow of Henry W. Peter, late acting assistant (contract) surgeon in United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

OSCAR A. PALMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1473) granting a pension to Oscar A. Palmer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Oscar A. Palmer, late of Company F, One hundred and eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FOSTER C. CARL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9195) granting a pension to Foster C. Carl.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Foster C. Carl, Company I, First Regiment of New York Mounted Rifles, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. DRIGGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9195) granting a pension to Foster C. Carl, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report.

This bill as amended proposes to pension, at the rate of $18 per month, Foster C. Carl, of Binghamton, N. Y.

This soldier enlisted in 1862 in Company I, First Regiment of New York Mounted Rifles, and served until the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged. He was only 17 years of age when he enlisted, and the consent of his parents was obtained by Capt. George H. Dean, who commanded the company and recruited it.

He was a strong, healthy young man when he entered the service, and was a good soldier, always ready for duty, and never flinched. This is shown by the testimony of his captain. He was taken sick about April 8 or 9, 1865, at Summerton, N. C., and was carried in an ambulance to the hospital at Petersburg, Va. After a few days he returned to his regiment and went from there to Fredericksburg, Va., but was not able to do any duty. He was granted a sick leave for thirty-five days, and was taken down with malignant typhoid fever, and was confined to his bed until March, 1866. He was attended by physicians whose affidavits are on file.

This sickness resulted in a permanent disease of the head and air passages and throat and bronchial tubes. Matter was discharged from the ears, and the throat continually filled with phlegm. It resulted in a permanent disability in the nature of a catarrhal trouble and a disease of the throat and general debility.

The soldier seems to have suffered from a malarial poisoning and is in a general feverish condition. The hearing and eyesight of the soldier are now seriously affected, and he suffers constantly from the same trouble of a catarrhal nature and is emaciated and physically unable to do but little work.

At the time he was taken down with the sicknesses referred to he had been in the saddle with his command for fifteen consecutive days and nights, being on the march nearly every night and engaged with the enemy nearly every day. Two special engagements were those at Jacksonville and Summerton, N. C.

There is no pretense that the soldier's disabilities are the result of vicious habits on his part, as he is shown to be a man of good character and correct life.

The soldier's claim for a pension has been refused on the ground that there is no pensionable disability as the result of army service. As all the disabilities from which the soldier suffers are shown to be of service origin, there is little excuse for this claim at the Pension Bureau. It is not pretended that he has incurred these disabilities since he left the service, and as he was strong and healthy when he entered the Army, and came out of it sick and broken down as the result of precisely the same diseases from which he now suffers, and as he had been under treatment therefor for some length of time before his discharge, it is difficult to understand how the medical referee could have arrived at the conclusion he did.

Dr. R. D. Eastman, of Berkshire, N. Y., Dr. George M. Hall, of Binghamton, N. Y., and Dr. Thomas B. Van Alstyne, of Binghamton, N. Y., physicians of long experience, testify to his physical disabilities and to his inability to perform manual labor. They have known the soldier for years and have treated him and given him frequent examinations. Two of these physicians have been members of a medical board of examiners for many years, and as they are men of the highest character and standing and have no interest in the claim whatever, it is the presumption that they state nothing but the truth. As the soldier contracted his diseases and disabilities in the service and as the result of hardships he there endured, it appears to your committee that a clear case is made for a reasonable pension.

The soldier has exhausted his remedy at the Bureau and Congressional action is therefore warranted.

The soldier is in necessitous circumstances without fault on his part, as he gave his strength to his country when a mere boy, and has struggled for a livelihood under adverse circumstances from that time until the present.

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, as I did not learn from the reading of the report, if he ever applied for a pension?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes, he applied at the Bureau.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. SARAH FRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8950) increasing the pension of Mrs. Sarah Fry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Sarah Fry, widow of Henry Fry, late of the United States Navy, war of 1812, and pay her a pension rated at $20 per month, the same to be in lieu of the pension now drawn by her.

The report (by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8950) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Fry, have considered the same, and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Henry Fry, late purser in the United States Navy, war of 1812, and she is now a pensioner at $12 per month under the war of 1812 general pension act of March 9, 1878.

An affidavit of Dr. Alexander M. Mecray and Robert F. S. Heath, reputable citizens of Camden, N. J., sets forth that Mrs. Fry is 79 years old, totally incapacitated for any kind of work, and dependent upon the exertions and labor of her two daughters for support.

There are several precedents for the allowance of an increase of pension to the aged and needy widows of soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and your committee believe that such precedents may safely be followed in this case. Henry Fry's service covered the period from February, 1813, to March, 1814. He and the claimant were married December 27, 1841, and he died November 26, 1859.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FELIX TATE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9140) granting a pension to Felix Tate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Felix Tate, a soldier of the Mexican war, to the sum of $50 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Change the spelling of the claimant's surname to "Tait."

Strike out the word "fifty," in line 5, and substitute therefore the word "twenty."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM S. SMITHSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9729) to increase the pension of William S. Smithson, late Company D, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase to the sum of $24 per month the pension of William S. Smithson, late Company D, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, Mexican war.

Mr. LOVE. Read the report.

The report (by Mr. SIMS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9729) increasing the pension of William S. Smithson, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The claimant was a private in Company D, Fifth Tennessee Volunteers, and served from November 7, 1847, to March 6, 1848, in the war with Mexico.

He was allowed a pension of $8 per month under the provisions of the act of January 29, 1887, and the same was subsequently increased under the act of January 5, 1893, upon proof of destitution and inability to earn a support by manual labor.

Affidavits accompanying the bill show that the claimant is totally blind, and has been for several years. He is about 73 years old and wholly without means aside from his pension. It is further shown that he is a man of good character and habits, and that his condition of helplessness is in no wise due to vicious habits.

There are many precedents for the granting of relief in cases of this character, and in view of the facts set forth above the passage of the bill is recommended, with an amendment changing the initial "S" in claimant's name to "L."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM MANLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1858) for the relief of William Manley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Manley, late private of Company L, Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $72 per month from the date of the approval of this act and in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 7, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

In line 7 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "from the date of the approval of this act."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to William Manley."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say, as the report is somewhat lengthy, that from a careful examination of this case we find this man was drawing a pension of $24 a month for disabilities of service origin, conceded and established at the Bureau. In addition to that, and in all human probability, as your committee believe, he is suffering from total paralysis of one side and partial paralysis on the other. He is a helpless man and very poor, and we increased it to this amount. We were almost of the opinion that he was entitled to $72 a month under the general law.

Mr. LOVE. Has he a family to support?

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, yes.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not propose to oppose this bill, but I would like to ask why he could not get an increase from the Pension Bureau? I do not see why, if he is afflicted as the report states, he should not get it. It seems to me he ought to be pensioned to the full extent of the law, $72. I can not understand these things. If this is simply an appeal court from the Pension Bureau, let us know it.

Mr. RAY of New York. He got the pension of $24 a month for diseases of service origin. It was not paralysis that he got in the service. The medical referee declines to admit that paralysis is a result of disease contracted in the service. Your committee believe that it is almost certain that it is the result of service origin, and we give him the benefit of the doubt. We do not find this absolutely true; we do not go to the extent of $72, but we do give him $50 on account of his poverty, that being the least sum that will take care of him under the circumstances.

Mr. TALBERT. If it had not been for this technicality, the Pension Bureau would have given him $72 a month?

Mr. RAY of New York. That would have been their duty under the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CLARA A. SHORT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1271) granting a pension to Clara A. Short.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Clara A. Short, widow of Martin C. Short, late captain of Company I, Thirty-first Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $25 per month.

Mr. LOVE. Let us have the report, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. BARBER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1271) entitled "A bill granting a pension to Clara A. Short," beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass with amendments.

This bill as amended proposes to pension at $20 per month Clara A. Short, of Brandon, Wis., the widow of Martin C. Short, who enlisted November 10, 1862, as first sergeant Company I, Thirty-first Wisconsin Volunteers. He was mustered in as first lieutenant, same company, April 27, 1864, and as captain May 27, 1865. He was mustered out with company July 8, 1865.

He filed and established a claim for pension under the general law, and was pensioned thereunder for chronic diarrhea and resulting dyspepsia and general debility at $9 per month, being rated one-half total of rank as first lieutenant, the rank which he held at the time when he incurred those disabilities.

He died February 17, 1894, and this claimant, his widow, filed a declaration under the general law March 26, 1894, alleging that soldier died from disabilities for which pensioned, complicated with diabetes.

Dr. J. D. Root testifies that he treated claimant professionally in his last sickness; that he died February 17, 1894, of diabetes, which was no doubt caused and his death hastened from his general debility and by his chronic stomach and bowel trouble, of which he had been a sufferer for years.

The claim was rejected by the medical referee December 31, 1896, on the ground that death resulted from diabetes, not shown to be due to chronic diarrhea and resulting dyspepsia and general debility, for which the soldier was pensioned. Before rejection the claim was sent out for special examination to obtain the testimony of the physicians who had treated him and knew most of his physical condition prior to and at the time of his death. The first special examiner who had the case in his report says:

"I secured the testimony only of those whom I knew to be most competent to state soldier's physical condition, symptoms, etc. Dr. Root, under whose care soldier was * * * bears a good reputation for truth. * * * It is the opinion of both Dr. Root and Dr. Turner that diarrhea was an indirect or remote cause of death. * * * I recommend admission."

The testimony of the physicians who attended claimant and knew him personally and his physical condition is positively to the effect that they believe his death was due to the disabilities for which he was pensioned, and that of the specialist on urinary diseases, who analyzed a specimen of his urine, is not adverse to the claim. The only adverse opinion found in the case is that of the medical referee of the Pension Office in the rejection of the claim.

In a decision dated August 21, 1897, Assistant Secretary Webster Davis quoted from a former decision the following:

"Where the evidence, lay and medical, goes to show that the cause for which pension was granted to a soldier was complicated with a disease which was the immediate cause of his death, the Department will sustain the widow's claim for pension on account of the soldier's death from said complication of causes, holding the same, for pensionable purposes, to be due to the line of duty in the service."

He then says:

"This decision, in my opinion, fully meets the issue presented by the medical referee and lays down a proper rule for the guidance of your Bureau in the adjudication of kindred cases."

Following the rule here laid down, the case should have been admitted in the Pension Office, as, if the immediate cause of death was not directly due to the pensioned disabilities, it was so complicated with them that they were necessarily important factors in producing death.

There is a claim pending in the Pension Office under the act of June 27, 1890, and, should it be admitted, as it probably will not be, it would not do justice to this claimant.

Claimant is 53 years of age; was married to the soldier June 25, 1876; has one child under 16 years of age, and is poor.

The case is meritorious in every respect, and is reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

In same line strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert the word "twenty," so that it will read "$20 per month."

Mr. LOVE. I believe the bill provides for $20 a month.

Mr. RAY of New York. Twenty dollars is the sum she is entitled to on account of the rank of her husband, if entitled at all, and the committee find she is entitled to it. We consider the opinion of the Bureau, and we cite the decision of the Bureau itself. Under the evidence in this case she is entitled to it as a matter of law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MERLIN C. HARRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2357) granting an increase of pension to Merlin C. Harris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Merlin C. Harris, late a captain in the Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now drawing.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended by striking out "fifty," in line 8, and inserting "thirty."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. BRODERICK. This report is very lengthy.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, we want some explanation.

Mr. BRODERICK. This soldier enlisted in the war and served about four years and a half, was in active service, was two or three times taken prisoner, and was in three or four prisons during the war. He was a good soldier, and came out in poor health and was granted a pension by the Pension Bureau for disability incurred in the line of duty, and he is now receiving $14.50 a month under the general law. He has been wholly unable to perform manual labor for, I think, eight years, and has to have an attendant a portion of the time. I know him personally and know these things to be true.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. He is without means, is he?

Mr. BRODERICK. Yes. He has a family. He did have a small farm, but he has nothing now.

Mr. TALBERT. I do not understand why he could not get a pension under the law.

Mr. BRODERICK. Simply on account of technicality.

Mr. TALBERT. If it was not for the technicality the pension would be larger?

Mr. BRODERICK. Larger than the committee propose to make it now.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE L. DURBIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 853) granting an increase of pension to George L. Durbin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George L. Durbin, late a private in Company I, One hundred and thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Infantry, and Company G, One hundred and forty-sixth Indiana Infantry, and pay him at the rate of $30 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 9, after the word "him," insert the words "a pension."

Mr. LOVE. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. OSBORNE. I think, Mr. Chairman, there is no need of reading the report. This man served throughout the entire war. He is entirely helpless. I know the man personally, and he is now very poor and without property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES H. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2751) granting a pension to Charles H. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles H. Johnson, private in Company E, First Regiment New Hampshire Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month for total blindness, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out the words "for total blindness."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EDWARD STANLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1075) granting an increase of pension to Edward Stanley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward Stanley, who served as a private of Company G, Twelfth Regiment Maine Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

Mr. LOVE. Let us have the report.

The report (by Mr. BOTKIN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1075) granting an increase of pension to Edward Stanley, have carefully examined the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to increase from $6 to $24 per month the pension of Edward Stanley, of Fort Dodge, Kans.

The Senate report states the facts, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1075) granting an increase of pension to Edward Stanley, have examined the same, and report:

"A similar bill was introduced in the Senate during the Fifty-fourth Congress, reported favorably, and passed the Senate. The report was as follows, which your committee adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"'This soldier enlisted under the name of Lawrence Finley, May 3, 1862, as a private in Company G, Twelfth Maine Infantry Volunteers, from which he was honorably discharged June 5, 1865, by reason of expiration of his term of service. Under the name of Edward Stanley he was enrolled August 17, 1863, and mustered into service September 30, 1863, as sergeant Company H, First Louisiana Cavalry.

"'In the latter organization he participated in the battle of Carrion Crow Bayou, Louisiana, November 3, 1863, where he was seriously wounded in the head and was left for dead on the battlefield. A day or two after the battle he was picked up on the field by a scouting party of Confederates and left at a negro cabin. He was covered with blood from head to foot, and turkey buzzards flocking around him disclosed his location to the scouting party. In a few days he made his way back to the hospital in New Orleans, La. (from which he had enlisted in the First Louisiana Cavalry), and was admitted there November 13, 1863, and treated for gunshot wound of the head.

"'On November 30, 1863, he left the hospital and rejoined Company G, Twelfth Maine Infantry Volunteers, and continued to serve as a private in that company until honorably discharged June 5, 1865, again assuming the name of Lawrence Finley. He was again seriously wounded in the right leg at the battle of Winchester, Va., September 19, 1864, and was pensioned for same at $4 per month; increased to $6 under act of March 2, 1895.

"'The board of examining surgeons at St. John, Kans., who examined him April 20, 1892, rated him eight-eighteenths for gunshot wound of head and eight-eighteenths for functional disease of heart.

"'Testimony filed with the committee shows that claimant is totally disabled for the performance of manual labor, is in destitute circumstances, and is supported by the county authorities.'"

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass when amended as follows:

In line 7, after the word "volunteers," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

Mr. LOVE. He is getting $6 a month, and it seems to be an increase of from $6 to $30. I would like to have some information. Why this increase?

Mr. BOTKIN. The report states the exact condition of the man. There is no question at all that his disabilities are of service origin. He is almost totally disabled and is a worthy citizen.

Mr. BRUCKER. He is now in the poorhouse?

Mr. BOTKIN. He is not in the poorhouse, but he is in a Soldiers' Home and is compelled to be separated from his family. The bill ought to carry $30 a month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CLARK W. HARRINGTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 769) to increase the pension of Clark W. Harrington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Clark W. Harrington, late a sergeant of Company I, Ninety-third New York Infantry, a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension which he now receives.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "pay to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "place on the pension rolls the name of."

In line 5, after the word "Infantry," insert the words "and pay him."

In line 6 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HARRIET M. KNOWLTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 408) to restore the pension to Harriet M. Knowlton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriet M. Knowlton, widow of the late Major Knowlton of the Twenty-ninth Maine Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES DAGENFIELD.

The Clerk was proceeding to read House bill No. 5647, when

Mr. LENTZ said: Mr. Chairman, why is Calendar No. 700 passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. Possibly because the gentleman who introduced the bill is not here.

Mr. LENTZ. I introduced this bill. It is a bill to correct the military record of Charles Dagenfield. I know the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. It was unanimously agreed at the opening of this evening's session that bills removing the charge of desertion should be to-night laid aside without action.

Mr. LENTZ. This man was absent without leave from 6 o'clock in the evening until 5 o'clock the next morning. He was a musician, and he wants to join the same regiment again.

The CHAIRMAN. The consideration of that bill would not be in order at this time under the special rule adopted at the opening of the session to-night.

Mr. BELKNAP. This is not a desertion bill in the proper sense of the term. I am familiar with the case, and if the rule of the House will permit its consideration it ought to be taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is not a desertion case, then, as it is not a pension case, it is not properly upon the Calendar for Friday night.

Mr. BELKNAP. I submit, of course, to the decision of the Chair; but this is a deserving case, and I wish it might be considered.

Mr. LENTZ. Can we not take up this bill by unanimous consent when we go back into the House?

The CHAIRMAN. That might be done by unanimous consent in the House.

Mr. TALBERT. This order having been made by the House, I submit it is not competent for the Committee of the Whole to undo it. Several gentlemen have come to me stating that they have in their charge very meritorious bills of this character. I therefore suggest that when we get back into the House those gentlemen, if it suits them, ask unanimous consent, make their statements, and then, if the cases prove to be meritorious—if, in fact, the men were not deserters—I will make no further contention against them.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order will be proceeded with.

N. MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5647) granting a pension to N. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of N. Miller, dependent father of Peter Miller, deceased, late a naval cadet, who was killed on the U. S. flagship Tennessee.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "N." and insert "Nels."

At the end of the bill add the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $10 per month."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY M. MACAULEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 486) granting a pension to Mary M. Macauley, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel Macauley, United States Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary M. Macauley, widow of the late Brig. Gen. Daniel Macauley, United States Volunteers, upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her a pension of $30 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read and agreed to, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to Mary M. Macauley."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

CASSIUS M. CLAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1119) granting a pension to Cassius M. Clay, sr., a citizen of Kentucky and a major-general in the Army of the United States in the war of the rebellion.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Cassius M. Clay, sr., a major-general in the volunteer service of the United States in the war of the rebellion, and pay him a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of any pension he may now receive on account of such service.

The report (by Mr. GIBSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1119) granting a pension to Cassius M. Clay, sr., have carefully considered the same and the evidence relating thereto and respectfully report:

This bill proposes to pension, at the rate of $50 per month, Cassius M. Clay, sr., of Whitehall, Ky.

The Senate report states the facts, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1119) granting a pension to Cassius M. Clay, have examined the same and report:

"A similar bill was introduced in the Senate during the Fifty-fourth Congress, passed the Senate, and was reported favorably by the House.

"The Senate report was as follows, which your committee adopt, and recommend the passage of the bill:

"The following is the military record of General Clay, as furnished by the War Department:

"Case of Cassius M. Clay, sr., late major-general, United States Volunteers.

"It is shown by the records that Cassius M. Clay was mustered into service as captain Company I, First Regiment Kentucky Cavalry (Mexican war), with the company June 9, 1846, at Louisville, Ky., to serve twelve months; that on August 31, 1846, he was absent from his company with leave; that on October 31 and December 31, 1846, he was present with his command, and that on January 22, 1847, he was taken prisoner by the enemy at Incarnation, Mexico. On the muster-out roll of the company, dated June 7, 1847, he is reported absent, taken prisoner at Incarnation, Mexico, January 22, 1847.

"The records also show that Cassius M. Clay was captain and major of a military organization designated 'The Cassius M. Clay Battalion' or 'Washington Clay Guards,' the members of which tendered their services to the Government in April, 1861, for the defense of the city of Washington until the arrival of the troops called for by the President's proclamation of April 15, 1861. There is no evidence that the organization was mustered into the military service of the United States, and there are no records of the force on file, excepting two manuscript rosters containing the names of the officers and enlisted men composing the organization, dated, respectively, April 18 and 23, 1861, and a manuscript roster of the officers of the battalion, dated April 28, 1861. These rosters do not show the period of service of the organization nor how long Cassius M. Clay commanded it.

"It is further shown by the records that Cassius M. Clay was commissioned major-general of volunteers April 15, 1862, to rank from April 11, 1862; that he accepted the appointment June 17, 1862; that on September 11, 1862, he was assigned to duty in the Department of the Gulf, and that his resignation as major-general of volunteers was accepted March 11, 1863.

"No record has been found showing that he received medical treatment while a member of either of the organizations mentioned, or while he was major-general of volunteers.

"Respectfully submitted.

"F. C. AINSWORTH,

"Colonel, United States Army, Chief Record and Pension Office.

"RECORD AND PENSION OFFICE,

"War Department, February 4, 1897.

"The SECRETARY OF WAR.

"General Clay resigned from the Army to accept the position of minister to Russia, to which position he was appointed by President Lincoln. He is now over 80 years of age, is in infirm health, and unable to give attention to business. He has a comfortable home for life, but our information is that he is without available means to meet his current and necessary expenses.

"For these reasons your committee report favorably the bill for his benefit with an amendment. Amend by striking out 'one hundred' and inserting 'fifty.'"

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass, when amended as follows:

In line 7, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to Cassius M. Clay, sr."

The amendments reported by the committee (as appended to the report) were read.

Mr. GREENE. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he knows anything about the financial circumstances of this applicant.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not, except as the facts are represented to the committee.

Mr. GREENE. Is this the Cassius M. Clay we have read so much about?

Mr. RAY of New York. I understand it is.

Mr. GREENE. Well, is it not a fact that he owns a thousand-acre farm?

Mr. BERRY. He is a poor man.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is represented to us that he is a poor man.

Mr. BERRY. He has given away most of his property to his children and has nothing but a mountain farm, which is not very productive.

Mr. GREENE. How many acres?

Mr. BERRY. Three or four hundred.

Mr. GREENE. Not a thousand?

Mr. BERRY. Oh, no. As I have stated, he has given away most of his property to his children, reserving only a reversionary interest.

Mr. GREENE. He has an income from this farm?

Mr. BERRY. Yes; but it does not support him.

Mr. GREENE. The gentleman means it does not support him in the way he wants to live.

Mr. BERRY. He does not live lavishly.

Mr. GREENE. Does he not receive the income from a 400-acre farm there in Kentucky?

Mr. BERRY. It is a farm away up in the edge of the mountains.

Mr. GREENE. Ample to support a man in Cassius M. Clay's circumstances.

Mr. BERRY. Oh, no. Why, take the district of my colleague [Mr. PUGH], and there is not one man in ten who makes a good living from his farm.

Mr. GREENE. Has he any family?

Mr. BERRY. He has a young wife.

Mr. GREENE. Is he supporting her?

Mr. BERRY. I do not know; but he is a heroic old man, who has been a great statesman and an honored diplomatic representative of this Government.

Mr. GREENE. Does he not own one of the finest places in that whole section of country—one of the finest farms and residences?

Mr. BERRY. Oh, no. He has an old colonial place, with great big pillars in front of it, and not enough money to take care of it.

Mr. GREENE. That is, in the style in which he wants to run it.

Mr. BERRY. He does not run it in much style.

Mr. GREENE. I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. LOVE. What is the pension he is getting now?

Mr. BERRY. I think he is getting $8 a month as a soldier of the Mexican war. He was in the battle of Buena Vista, and was engaged in some of the hottest battles in the Mexican war.

Mr. LOVE. What is the amount asked for in this bill?

Mr. BERRY. I do not know. I believe it is $25 a month.

Mr. GREENE. I should like to ask further why it is that he asks this increase? Is he so poor?

Mr. BERRY. He is 84 years old.

Mr. GREENE. If he is so poor, why is it that in his published statements he repeatedly refers to his relatives' opposition to his marriage on the ground that they want to get his property? If he is so poor, if he has nothing, why is this vast estate creating all this trouble?

Mr. BERRY. An old man, 84 years of age, has a good many vagaries. You will find that out when you get there. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE. It strikes me that there are a great many old fellows who are getting small pensions who would like to swap their pensions for what he has.

Mr. LOVE. I wish to ask the Chair to state the amount of pension which this bill provides for.

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty dollars a month.

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, while I do not want to make captious objections to this bill, that there is no good reason why $50 per month should be paid in this case. It is admitted that this gentleman has a home and valuable landed estate, and the amount proposed in this bill is too much. He is not suffering from disabilities by wounds. I do not think it is wise at all to grant this increase. I move to strike out "fifty" and to make it "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on adopting the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

The question being taken,

Mr. ARNOLD demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 18.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, no quorum.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, if it is in order, I move that the committee rise and report to the House favorably the bills which have passed the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee do now rise and report to the House favorably the bills which have been so considered by the committee.

Mr. TALBERT. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. GREENE. Let us finish this bill before the committee rises.

Mr. BERRY. The point of no quorum is withdrawn. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] allow the consideration of this bill to be completed by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being withdrawn, the amendment is disagreed to. The question is now on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. LOVE. What is the amendment proposed by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the committee is simply the insertion of the words "at the rate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken.

Mr. GREENE demanded a division.

The committee divided; and the Chairman announced, ayes 22.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, if it is in order, I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty." Let us compromise on this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. ARNOLD. I rise to the point of order. The Chair has announced the ayes on that vote and we have a right to have the noes.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made, the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina was not in order at that time. Twenty-two have voted in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise.

The negative vote was taken; and the result of the vote was announced—ayes 22, noes 9.

Accordingly the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and favorably report to the House the bills which have been so recommended by the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. LACEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. EVANS reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration divers bills and had directed him to report them back to the House, some with amendments and some without amendment, and with the recommendation that they do pass.

RUSSELL R. KING.

The first business was the bill (S. 1887) granting an increase of pension to Russell R. King.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES DAGENFIELD.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to ask unanimous consent that the House take up the bill (H. R. 3364) to correct the military record of Charles Dagenfield. He was absent without leave from 6 o'clock in the evening until 5 o'clock in the morning from the Columbus post. He was a regular and a musician, and he wants to rejoin his regiment, which is on its way to Cuba; and for that reason I make this request.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask to amend that request by including House bill 2694.

Mr. BELKNAP. One at a time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3364) to correct the military record of Charles Dagenfield.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Is that a case of the removal of a charge of desertion?

Mr. BELKNAP. No; it is not.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does that come under the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It comes under the rule. The greater would include the less. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles Dagenfield, late of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, and to issue to said Dagenfield an honorable discharge from said service, to be dated November 15, 1895.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, were read:

In line 4, after the word "to," strike out the words "remove the charge of desertion from" and insert in lieu thereof the word "correct."

In line 8, strike out the word "November" and insert in lieu thereof the word "December."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear the report in this case.

Mr. LENTZ. I can briefly state the facts. He was absent without leave from 6 o'clock in the evening until 5 o'clock the next morning; and he wants to rejoin his company.

Mr. TALBERT. Does he want to join the army that they are now raising?

Mr. LENTZ. Yes; he is a musician.

Mr. BELKNAP. In addition to what has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio, I should like to state that this man was punished severely by being imprisoned and dishonorably discharged. This is to set aside that finding. He was simply unjustly treated.

Mr. TALBERT. Did this occur since an enlistment under the last call?

Mr. BELKNAP. No; this is to remove the old charge, so that he can rejoin his company now.

Mr. TALBERT. If he wants to fight, I have no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

PETER BUCKLEY.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3105. It is on the Calendar. This is a bill that has passed the Senate twice and has been reported twice unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs, and simply failed because it was not reached on the Calendar at the last session. It is the only bill of this character that I have asked consideration of in three years.

I have known the man for twenty years. The case is a meritorious one and the man is poor. The Grand Army post say that if this charge is removed, as it ought to be, they will admit him and help the church to which he belongs to take care of him. I will guarantee that this is a worthy case, as I have known the man personally for twenty years.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3105) to correct the military record of Peter Buckley.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which has been read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the records to be so amended as to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Peter Buckley, late a member of Company E of the Eleventh Regiment of New York Volunteers, and that an honorable discharge be granted the said Peter Buckley as of the 25th of July, 1861, with the pay and emoluments due him at that date, without pension, pay, or other allowances.

Mr. TALBERT. I will ask the gentleman to please give us some explanation of the bill.

Mr. HILL. This young man was a minor, a legally bound apprentice to the Quintard Iron Works in New York. In 1861 he ran away from his apprenticeship and enlisted as a minor in the Ellsworth Zouaves. The regiment was all broken up at Bull Run and moved back to Annapolis. He went on a furlough, and while on furlough his guardian caught him and took him back to work and said he was discharged. He could take him under the law because he was a minor. The first he knew of this was ten years ago. He did not make application for pension, and does not.

Mr. TALBERT. Has the bill the usual amendment in it, that no pay or emolument shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of the act? If not, I move that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a part of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JAMES HENNESSY.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3537) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against James Hennessy on the rolls of the War Department.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing on the records of the War Department against James Hennessy, of Concord, Ind., late a member of Battery B, Third New York Light Artillery, and to grant to said soldier an honorable discharge from the military service of the United States, to date from the final discharge of said battery from said service in the year 1865.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has been read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like the gentleman to make a short statement about that matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. This is the case of a soldier who enlisted in New York, served two years, and won honorable promotion for good conduct in the service. He sought to return after twenty days' furlough, and wrote his commander to inform him when to return. The commander was killed in South Carolina and failed to return an answer, and the soldier was detained in New York.

Mr. TALBERT. He was not a bounty jumper?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. He was not a bounty jumper nor a deserter in any sense.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GEORGE H. GIVENS.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8861) granting an increase of pension to George H. Givens.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of George H. Givens, who served in the Mexican war in Company D, First Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, upon the pension roll with an increase pension of $25 per month, in lieu of any pension that he is now receiving.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the bill which has been read.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I want to say this: I would object to taking a pension bill up out of order were it not for the fact that the gentleman did not get his bill passed, being present, and the gentleman says he must be away next week. Therefore I raise no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 7, strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "eighteen."

Mr. PUGH. Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment recommended by the committee will not be agreed to. I wish to say that this old veteran is 73 years of age, and is in such a pitiable condition that he is entitled to $25 a month; and such a bill has been passed to-night.

Mr. RAY of New York. I want to say that the bill is reported properly, and for every cent we found the case would warrant; and if it be passed at all, as it is taken up, it ought to be passed as reported.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. having arrived, the House stands adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 16, 1898.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who knowest our frame, who rememberest that we are dust, we come into Thy presence reverent, bowed, and sorrowful, because of the irreparable bereavement which has fallen upon our venerable and beloved father of the Senate, the senior Senator from Vermont, out of whose home the light and cheer, the grace and music of life have passed—the mother, the wife, the sister. We pray, O Lord, that in this unspeakable sorrow there may come the great consolation of the memory, sacred and benign, of many years of loving and lovely ministry, and the assurance of a faith that one who walked with Christ on earth and gained His spirit and the blessing of His life must be where Christ reigns now, and likewise the inspiration of hope that in that world where there is no more death, neither sorrow nor cry, neither shall there be any more pain, it is well with her.

As she awaits the coming of her beloved ones, the bond of love kept strong and unbroken, so may they gain heart of grace; and may we, sharing in their love and hope and cheer, bear us bravely and serenely for the rest of our journey. And when we are called to gather up our feet and depart, may it be in the faith of Christ, in the hope, sure and absolute, of the resurrection of the just. We humbly ask in His blessed name. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on the motion of Mr. HALE and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Miles City, Mont., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of citizens of Lawrence County, Mo., who set forth that, "believing the war now declared against Spain will be made the basis of an excuse and demand for a 'gold or standard coin' bond issue by those interested in increasing the interest-bearing debt of the nation, and those interested in more firmly establishing the single gold standard; and believing that said bonds are unnecessary and against the best and most vital interests of our country and people, and believing that Lincoln, in his first issue of greenbacks, established a rule for the ready and sure and safe relief of every financial emergency, they, the residents of Lawrence County, State of Missouri, citizens of the United States, petition Congress to use all honorable means to defeat said bond issue, and in lieu thereof to do as Lincoln caused to be done, issue greenbacks or full legal-tender notes in sufficient amount to meet the present exigency; and they further petition Congress to endeavor to have coined into standard silver dollars, at the ratio of 16 to 1, without unnecessary delay, all of the silver seigniorage now in the possession of the Government." I move that the petition lie on the table, as the bill on that subject has been reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE presented a memorial of sundry retail druggists of Dunkirk, Ind., remonstrating against the imposition of a tax on medicines in stock; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Washington Division, No. 339, Order of Railway Conductors, of Washington, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called anti-scalping ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of St. Anastasia Meslin Lodge, No. 46, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church; the Woman's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church; the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society; the congregations of the Presbyterian Church and the Christian Church; of the Epworth League of the First Methodist Episcopal Church; of the congregation of the Methodist Church; of the congregation of the First Evangelical Church; of the Young People's Association of the First Evangelical Church, all of Wabash, and of the congregation of the United Brethren Church of North Manchester, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented petitions of the St. Anastasia Meshin Lodge, No. 46, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; of the Woman's Missionary Society, the Epworth League of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Young People's Association of the First Evangelical Church, the Christian Endeavor Society of the Presbyterian Church, the congregations of the Christian Church, the First Evangelical Church, the Presbyterian Church, and the First Methodist Church of Wabash; and of the congregations of the United Brethren Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church of North Manchester, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut presented a petition of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Goshen, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Goshen, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transmission of lottery messages and other gambling matter by telegraph; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MONEY presented a petition of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church South of Bay St. Louis, Miss., praying for the enactment of legislation to protect State anti-cigarette laws by providing that cigarettes imported in original packages on entering any State shall become subject to its laws; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Edwards, Miss., and a petition of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Bay St. Louis, Miss., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9428) to authorize the Washington and Gettysburg Railway Company, of Maryland, to extend its line of road into and within the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

GEORGIA H. BERRY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4414) granting a pension to Georgia H. Berry, to report it favorably, with an amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill is only three or four lines long, and I ask that it be put on its passage. It is a very meritorious bill. If it is to be passed at this session it should be passed at once.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Georgia H. Berry, widow of Col. William W. Berry, of the Fifth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, in line 8, after the word "pension," to insert the words "at the rate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH M'GUCKIAN.

Mr. JONES of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back favorably without amendment the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLINGTON] on the 11th instant, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Joseph McGuckian be appointed a special watchman at a salary of $60 a month, to be paid monthly out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that he be assigned to aid H. H. Lemon in the Dome of the Capitol, who was appointed a policeman by joint resolution approved July 7, 1882.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution lie over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4585) to correct the naval record of John Lindsay; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FORAKER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (S. 4586) granting an honorable discharge to John B. Henry;

A bill (S. 4587) granting an honorable discharge to Pardon M. Bowen; and

A bill (S. 4588) granting an honorable discharge to Isaac Dulhagen (with accompanying papers).

Mr. FORAKER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions;

A bill (S. 4589) granting a pension to James R. Ambrose (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 4590) granting a pension to Mary B. Wotring.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 4591) for the relief of A. Waddell and E. R. Miller, administrators of Theodore I. Gillett, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut introduced a bill (S. 4592) to pay certain judgments against John C. Bates and Jonathan A. Yeckley, captain and first lieutenant in the United States Army, for acts done by them under orders of their superior officers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 4593) increasing the pension of Thomas M. Chill, late private of Black Hawk war; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 4594) for the relief of Greenwood Rushing, of Shelby County, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ELKINS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4595) to pension Asa Moneypenny;

A bill (S. 4596) granting an increase of pension to Michael Matheney;

A bill (S. 4597) granting a pension to J. B. Garvey;

A bill (S. 4598) for the relief of Michael Shepherd;

A bill (S. 4599) for the relief of William D. Anderson;

A bill (S. 4600) granting a pension to William H. Sehon; and

A bill (S. 4601) to pension Hiram Rollins.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4602) for the relief of Jacob W. Hudson, of Weston, Lewis County, W. Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4603) for the relief of the estate of William Smallwood, deceased, late of Jefferson County, W. Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4604) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Charles Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4605) for the relief of Henry P. McMasters; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 4606) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, at Thomaston, Me.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LAWS RELATING TO THE NAVY, ETC.

Mr. HALE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 3,000 copies of the Compilation of Laws Relating to the Navy, Marine Corps, etc., authorized by Senate resolution No. 143, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

Mr. HALE subsequently, from the Committee on Printing, reported the above concurrent resolution favorably without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read and considered, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to send to the Senate information as to the progress made in the survey or other operations toward the construction of the Nicaragua Canal; and that he furnish the Senate a statement of the outstanding debts or obligations of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, and of any proposition said company has submitted or may submit with reference to clearing off said debts and obligations, with a view to the transfer of any of the stock in said company to the United States, and of any other proposition that said company has submitted or may submit with reference to the payment by the United States of the sums expended in the survey and construction of said canal, or in any way connected with the same, together with a statement of such expenditures.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is directed to require of said Maritime Canal Company a report, to be made on the oath of its president, with reference to the stock and bonds of said company now outstanding, or that are promised to be delivered to any persons or corporations, and in reference to the property owned by said company, and the sums of money that have been expended in and about the construction and the surveys of the canal by said company.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say just a word upon the resolution. I wish to place in the RECORD, without delaying the Senate by the reading, a report recently made to the Department of State by Mr. Barrett, our minister at Siam, in regard to the Nicaragua Canal and the commerce of the United States with the Orient. I merely ask permission to incorporate it with my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the paper was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTH'S PRODUCTS—OPPORTUNITY FOR BUILDING UP TRADE IN FAR EAST—ASIA'S MILLIONS IN NEED OF COTTON—ARGUMENT FOR NICARAGUAN CANAL AND HAWAIIAN ANNEXATION—IMPORTANT STATISTICS.

The following paper, bearing upon the opportunities presented by the conditions in the far East for building up a trade in products of the Southern States of the American Union, was furnished the Star by Mr. John Barrett, the United States minister to Siam. It is an elaborate presentation of a theme important to commercial circles.

"Does the South appreciate her opportunity in the far East? Does she realize that the mighty markets of Asia's millions await her best efforts at exploitation? If not, she should. The far East is not reserved for our Pacific Coast alone, not for the manufacturing cities of our Atlantic Seaboard only, not for the exclusive control of Europe; no, not by any means, but for the South of the United States as well, provided the opportunity is seized before it is too late.

"Some parts of the South and some Southerners, more enterprising than their competitors, are already at work, and, if they are reading what I write, can doubtless foretell my proposition. The average Southerner, however, will be skeptical in accepting my suggestion that his particular portion of the United States has any particular interest in the far East.

"To get to my point: King Cotton can tell the story!

"The far East wants the South's cotton; it wants a lot of it! It wants it now, and it wants a lot of it! It wants it now and in years it will want twenty times what it demands now.

"I am not indulging in harebrained fantasies nor writing for effect, as if perched on some lofty pinnacle of erudition, where I may look down and pity those who do not know as much as I, as it were, but am drawing conclusions from several years of the closest personal observation and study of trans-Pacific lands, peoples, and markets, and from frequent discussions with the best authorities on the resources and possibilities thereof. Though born and raised a Yankee, and now a devoted resident of the Pacific Coast, I have always taken a deep and sincere interest in the progress and development of Dixie, confirmed by extended travel in her favored States and by a course of study at one of her great institutions, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, while absent from my own college in the North for a temporary sojourn in the heart of the South, seeking information on her resources and possibilities.

"Figures might be quoted, statistics given, and argument upon argument of cold, dry facts advanced, but I will forbear introducing them here, because I am not sure that anyone will even read what I am writing, and I do not wish to destroy my very object of awakening interest among all by too technical review of the situation.

"Do not think I am 'cocksure'—do not think that I think I am. Rather than weaken my contentions by giving that impression, I will admit that I may be altogether mistaken; but permit me to advance a few facts in an effort to show that I am not mistaken.

"ASIA'S MILLIONS WANT COTTON.

"First. There are nearly 500,000,000 inhabitants of these lands—far surpassing the United States in area—whose shores are washed by the Pacific and are directly across the seas from our western coast.

"Second. The demands of these millions, though small individually, are vast in the aggregate, and are increasing with great rapidity—even more rapidly than the chief exports in commerce and trade have dared prophesy in their wildest moments of hypothetical reasoning—and still China is hardly awake yet. When she does move, look out for her. It will be like an avalanche.

"Third. Of this half billion population, 350,000,000 wear almost nothing but cotton clothing and use nothing but cotton materials for the hundred and one other uses that cloth is put to. The average Asiatic wears more clothing the more he progresses or comes into contact with foreigners. I do not know as that could be called progress, however, at least in the Tropics, because I have always found that the less clothing I wore the happier I was and the more work I could do—but that is not to my point. It is noticeable that the demand for cotton goods of all kinds has increased during the last few years far more rapidly than the population, and that sales are on an ascending scale, which means a brilliant future for the trade in cotton goods and raw cotton.

"CONDITION OF COTTON SUPPLY.

"Fourth. The supply of raw cotton in China is so small, compared to the total consumption of cotton goods, that it could never meet the demand if supplies from other lands, like India, Egypt, and America, were cut off. It is true that China even exports cotton, but that goes only to Japan and simply for manufacture, to be shipped back as cotton yarn or piece goods. Then, again, cotton-growing is not a science in China, while the soil and sun do not seem to suit it like our own favored Dixie's warmth and fertility. The product of 1 acre of good cotton land in the United States will equal that of 5 to 10 in China. The time may come when China's millions will learn how to grow all their cotton in China's numberless acres, but that day is so far distant as not to discourage the planters and manufacturers of the South in exploiting these Asiatic markets. And mind, please, I have only spoken of China. Japan can never supply her own mills with the raw product, now over one hundred in number and being added to every year. Eastern Siberia, Corea, Formosa, Cochin-China, Siam, Straits Settlements, Java, Borneo, and the Philippines are great purchasers of cotton goods, and even if mills should be started in their cities the raw product must still be imported.

"WILL THE SOUTH MEET THE DEMAND?

"Fifth. The tendency now of the far East, illustrated by the development of cotton manufacturing in Japan with headquarters at Osaka, and by the working and construction of numerous mills at Shanghai and other points in China—is to supply the market on the spot with the finished product instead of depending entirely on Europe and America. So the demand for raw cotton in Japan and China has suddenly jumped ahead into considerable proportion; and now comes the question: Can and will the South meet this demand and so provide herself with a vast new market, eventually free her from absolute reliance on those of Europe and home, and making her great staple an increased source of wealth to every cotton-producing State, and hence collectively to the entire South?

"INDIA, CHINA, AND EGYPT.

"Sixth. The field is not one to be controlled without competition. Far from it. The cotton merchants of India, China, and Egypt are making a vigorous effort to supply the far Eastern demand. Egypt counts on her near route by the Suez Canal and her cheap labor to eventually rule the market, while India and China contend that they have even a greater advantage in both these respects; but there are certain conditions favorable to American cotton which, if followed up properly, will more than counterbalance the nearness and cheapness of Indian, Chinese, and Egyptian supplies. One is the quality of American cotton. Both the Japanese and Chinese manufacturers distinctly prefer it. It is manufactured more easily and seems to make more and better cloth. Then, when placed on the market, the buyers prefer both the yarn and cloth made from it.

"FREIGHT RATES CHIEF EMBARGO.

"Seventh. The only serious difficulty in the way of American cotton is the price, which is made high solely by the freight rates from the South to Japan and China. I have visited every cotton manufactory of any importance in these two countries, and wherever I found them using Indian, Chinese, or Egyptian cotton, the managers frankly told me that they would buy American cotton exclusively if the combined rail and steamer charges were not often prohibitive. The American cotton now shipped to the far East is consumed by mills which have a special market, but they represent a small proportion of the total. In short, were freight rates favorable and did the Southern exporters push the market, American cotton would monopolize the supply for the mills of trans-Pacific lands. What then remains to be done?

"NICARAGUA CANAL THE KEY.

"Eighth. The supreme advantage to be gained, which will, with 'one fell stroke,' accomplish the end desired, is the early construction and operation of the Nicaragua Canal. Unless that waterway is dug I can not see how the South can ever win permanently even a fair share of this mighty Pacific trade, and that is the opinion of nearly all experts in the far East whom I have consulted. A trans-Isthmian canal is the key to the trans-Pacific. The long rail haul from the South to the Pacific seaboard will always keep the delivered cost of American cotton just beyond the point of general and successful competition. Dig the canal, and a large fleet of steamers will carry cotton in bulk from all Southern ports to the far East for the same rate that is now charged from San Francisco to Kobe and Shanghai. As this statement is read I can imagine a skeptical look on many faces and an insinuation that I am indulging in exaggeration.

"Ninth. Let us see. In the first place, the rates charged by steamers crossing the Pacific are equal to or greater than those charged by steamers from the Mediterranean going a greater distance, and not much less than the through rates from London, Liverpool, Hamburg, Bremen, and Amsterdam, thus showing that there is yet a large margin on the Pacific route that can be taken off if necessary.

"MOST IMPORTANT STATEMENTS.

"In the second place, I desire to lay before the planters and exporters of the South two most important statements made to me, respectively, by leading stockholders of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha, Japan's great navigation company, and the Peninsula and Oriental Steamship Company, England's chief foreign line, which two companies combined control more steamers than any other three, barring one German and one French system, in the world.

"The representative of the former said to me that the moment the Nicaragua Canal was opened his company would put on a fleet of at least ten large steamers to run from Japan and China to the leading ports of the South, the principal object of which would be to carry cotton. In order to have outward cargoes they might touch en route at San Francisco, and then possibly on the Atlantic side go on to Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, but their chief destination would be the Southern ports like Galveston, New Orleans, Mobile, Tampa, Charleston, Savannah, and Norfolk. He said this plan had been carefully considered by the company, and, in expressing surprise that the United States had not already dug the canal, added with pride, 'If Japan controlled the opportunity or concession, the canal would have been completed and opened to the world's traffic before this.'

"The representative of the Peninsula and Oriental informed me almost in a confidential way that his company had long considered the revolution of the trade of the world that would be accomplished by the construction of the isthmian canal, and intended to put on a special line of large carriers to run practically around the world via the Southern ports of the United States and through the canal to Asia, in order to carry the cotton of the South to Japan and China. From the latter they would take cargoes via Suez to Europe, from Europe to America, and so on. Certainly both of these are practical schemes, while they show the importance of the South's opportunity in the Pacific. Both authorities told me that their steamers would carry cotton from Southern ports to Japan and China at competitive rates with other sources of supply, and less than those now charged from San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle to Yokohama, Kobe, and Shanghai.

"HAWAIIAN ANNEXATION AND PACIFIC CABLE.

"Without weakening the force of my main proposition by introducing ulterior issues, but desiring to make my treatment of the question comprehensive, I would urge the South to use its powerful influence in favor of two other projects whose consummation is necessary if the United States would control the commerce and trade of the Pacific or become the great material and moral power in its waters—the annexation of Hawaii and the construction of a Pacific cable.

"We need Hawaii to properly protect our cotton, flour, and richly laden ships which, with the opening of the canal and the inevitable growth of our merchant marine, will one day ply on the Pacific like the Spanish galleons of old; to provide them with a coaling station in mid-ocean under our flag; to prevent other nations from seizing and utilizing it as a point from which to dispatch commerce-destroying squadrons, and, in short, to make ourselves actual and not the theoretical masters of the Pacific seas. We require a Pacific cable under American control to telegraph cotton and other orders and fill or change them at the shortest notice and without the cost, surveillance, uncertainty, and roundabout way of the present system through Asia and Europe, on which we are now absolutely dependent.

"A FINAL APPEAL.

"In conclusion, therefore, I would appeal to the South to look carefully to the far East, to prepare to supply its demands and vigorously meet competition; to send capable and untiring agents to deal directly with Asiatic buyers; to sell at the lowest prices possible for the successful introduction of cotton; to place samples on exhibition in the principal markets; to urge the construction of a Pacific cable and the annexation of Hawaii; to try in the meantime to make railway and steamship companies quote the lowest rates possible in order that she may keep what little hold she already has, and, finally, and above all other considerations, bend her energies for the immediate construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

"The far East, with uncounted millions to clothe and feed, and with wealth to pay for such clothes and food, invites the United States to supply her wants. The Pacific Coast is awakening to the knowledge that she can supply the food in the form of flour. Will the South realize that she can supply the clothes in the form of cotton?

"The South's great opportunity to win new markets for her chief staple lies in the trans-Pacific lands. Will she seize the opportunity?"

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 685) for the relief of James W. Hardin and to remove the charge of desertion;

A bill (H. R. 3364) to correct the military record of Charles Dagenfield; and

A bill (H. R. 3537) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against James Hennessy on the rolls of the War Department.

The bill (H. R. 8861) granting a pension to George H. Givens was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 10290) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Court of Private Land Claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 13, 1891, and the act amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1898, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 195) calling upon the Secretary of War for information concerning the port of Sabine Pass was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 257) providing for the organization and enrollment of the United States auxiliary force for coast defense was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

ACTS IMPOSING DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be printed, indexed, and bound in cloth, in one volume, all of the acts, as they appear in the United States Statutes, heretofore passed by Congress, imposing duties on imports; 1,000 copies of said volume to be for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed.

Mr. McMILLAN. According to the agreement on Thursday last, the Eckington and Belt Line bills are to be brought up and disposed of, if possible, in the morning hour. I should like very much to have those bills taken up. The first one to be disposed of is House bill 6148.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan requests the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Michigan if the bill is likely to occupy much time?

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill has been read and remarks have been made on it. I do not think it will take much time. The debate, I think, will be very short; at least I hope so. If it takes any length of time and the Senator wishes to call up more important business, I shall not press it.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call up the tax bill this morning.

Mr. McMILLAN. We were almost ready to vote on the bill three or four days ago.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], when the bill was laid aside, had an amendment pending known as section 11. The Secretary will read the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill as an additional section the following:

That at any time after five years from the date of the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or the Government of the United States, may acquire all the property of said company, by purchase or otherwise, for its actual value at the time the same is so acquired, without taking into account the value of any franchise now or heretofore granted, and may operate the same in the interest of the public, and the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be for a period of not to exceed twenty years.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will amend my amendment by striking out "five" and inserting "ten;" so as to read: "That at any time after ten years," etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified as suggested.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this question further this morning, except to say that my purpose in offering the amendment is to stop the system of perpetual charters for the street railways of the city of Washington. It seems to me the Government ought to limit the duration of these charters and prevent the companies from bonding and capitalizing the right to occupy and use the streets of this city. We have already built up one great corporation which is stocked for $12,000,000 upon property not worth $5,000,000—$6,000,000 at the outside—and in the near future the people of this city must pay interest on $6,000,000 of stock which represents no investment whatever. Are we going to continue this system? Are we going to continue to issue perpetual charters giving away forever the right of the public to the use of the streets? That is the question involved.

It is surprising to me, it is almost remarkable, but really the only legislation of Congress which contains the provision that "Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act" is attached to the bills granting charters to the street railways of Washington. Why are those words placed in those acts? Every man knows that Congress always has the right to amend, alter, or repeal the acts of a former Congress. It seems to me they are placed there for the purpose of allaying fear and apprehension, for the purpose of silencing opposition, for the purpose of preventing those who are opposed to perpetual charters from thinking that Congress has granted a perpetual charter. They are idle words, entirely useless, and yet apparently they are placed there for a purpose. If they accomplished the purpose, it would be very well. If they do accomplish the purpose, then no person can object to the amendment which I offer, because the amendment which I offer definitely and specifically preserves the right to the public to take possession of the roads. It limits the charter, and it will prevent the watering of stock and the mortgaging of the future.

The whole world are investigating this question. All the great cities of Great Britain are looking into this question, and most of them have already commenced the operation of their own tramways. We ought to do the same, and we ought to begin in Washington. But if we are not ready to begin, now is the time, when these great charters are being granted, that we should reserve the power to do so.

The right to repeal the law will not affect vested rights. The roads can bond these properties for twice, three times, what they are worth and bond the franchise, and I doubt if it is within the power of Congress after that to interfere with the property. Therefore it seems to me that it is safe and proper that we should adopt this amendment.

I have been somewhat surprised, Mr. President, by the course of the people of Washington on this subject. When we undertook to reduce telephone rates, the business men of Washington were up in arms. Why? Because about 2,000 of them used the telephone. They were the men at the top; they were the rich men of this city. When we divided the amount that had to be paid for the use of the telephone, they were active and earnest, and organized a business man's league, and saved a few dollars to each one of them. When we undertake to control the watering of stock, and to limit the power to mortgage the franchise to encumber the streets of Washington, they are on the other side. They do not ride in street cars. It is the poor man who pays a 5-cent fare and rides in a street car. It concerns the bulk of the people of Washington and the business men are not heard. With unconcern they see their streets mortgaged by the issue of $12,000,000 of capital stock on a property worth $5,000,000, and they make no move in this direction. It would rather be expected that from them would come the effort to protect the future of their city, to protect the interests of the public, and yet from them we hear nothing on this subject.

But, Mr. President, aside from what interest the business men of Washington ought to have in this subject the people of the United States are interested in it, and every representative in either body of Congress ought to have an interest in it. Every citizen of the Republic is interested in this city. If the course under legislation enacted by us shall be such as to indorse stock-jobbing and stock-watering operations, then we share in the disgrace.

The corporate interests of this country have pursued a course under our laws which has made this country a reproach and a byword throughout the world. By these operations they have accumulated the wealth of this great people in the hands of 250,000 men. Forty-four billion dollars of the wealth of the United States to-day is owned by 235,000 of our people. Fifty-two per cent of our people have no property whatever. This condition has been brought about by the granting of those franchises, of those rights which belong to the whole people, to a coterie of men who could gather together and command some capital. It has been brought about by the issue of stock, as in the case of one of the railroad companies in this city, to the amount of $12,000,000 on an investment of $5,000,000.

It appears to me, therefore, that it is the duty of the Senate and of the Congress of the United States to call a halt in these transactions and to stamp their disapproval upon this kind of business, and thus in a measure prevent the further accumulation of the wealth of this country. How can we maintain free institutions and a republican form of government among a population who own no estate in the soil and no interest in the country? Are we not rapidly approaching that precipice? Are we not rapidly approaching the point, have we not reached it already, Mr. President, where free institutions are endangered by the greed of man? I am well aware there is little profit or pleasure to any individual in attacking these abuses, and I am well aware that that duty can not be shirked except by the resignation of official position.

I hope the Senate will adopt this amendment. I have changed the time in which we can purchase these properties from five years to ten, not because I approve of an extension of the time but because Senators have said to me that they would favor the amendment if the period were ten years, and I am willing to gain something where it is impossible to gain everything.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I do not think it is worth while to take any more of the time of the Senate on this matter. The Committee on the District of Columbia, charged with these bills, has given a great deal of time to the study of these questions, and they believe that just now is not the time to put on an amendment of this nature. They believe that the first thing to be done is to get these two roads out of the courts and into a position where they can be changed from horse-car roads into rapid-transit lines. That is what the people of the District want. I am quite content to leave to the Senate the question as to the amendment proposed. If the Senate thinks it best to put on the bill an amendment of this kind, of course the committee will have to agree to it, but I do not believe the Senate will feel that way. I am quite willing to have a vote without further discussion.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I would be willing to vote that all the railroad franchises in the District of Columbia should be held for a term of twenty years. I should prefer to vote for such a provision in one general bill, which would be applicable to all the street railways of the District of Columbia. I would vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota in so far as it provides that the rights and privileges granted shall be for a period of twenty years.

I do not, however, feel willing to assert at this time the right of the United States, through the District Commissioners, or through any other action of the Government, to take possession of this property and to cancel the franchise at the end of ten years or five years.

My reason is that given by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], that a grant of the right to build these roads subject, according to notice given in the act, to the right of the United States to take possession of the property at its value without paying anything for the franchise at the end of either five years or ten years will prevent the construction of the roads. The point of the chairman as against the Senator from South Dakota is distinctly this, that a notice of this kind, mentioning either ten years or five years as the limit of the grant contained in the bill, will prevent capital from constructing the railroads as they ought to be constructed. Mr. President, I think that position is correct.

I believe that a twenty years' franchise is long enough. I believe that capital can be secured under a twenty years' franchise. I do not believe that the capital will be invested that is necessary yet to be invested to complete the District railroad system under a limitation of either five years or ten years. Therefore I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota if it has a five or ten years' limitation in it. If it has no such limitation, but only a twenty years' limitation, I shall be glad to vote for it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, of course the argument presented by the Senator from New Hampshire is the one familiar to everyone. There is not a city council in the land that does not have that argument presented to it whenever any corporation wants to secure public franchises. They say, "We must have all we want or we will not serve you. You must mortgage the future, you must mortgage your women and children for all time to come, or we will not make this investment." It is an argument that never ought to be used again. It is an argument unworthy of anyone to present to anybody anywhere. And yet that is the argument, and the only argument, the last argument presented why this amendment should not be adopted.

I remember very well that in 1878 there were no railroads in Dakota. They had built up pretty near to the line and they wanted to construct roads across the Territory. They came to the legislature with a law which their lawyers had drawn. It was to give them an irrepealable franchise, such a vested right as would prevent the legislature during all time from regulating the rates for carrying passengers and freight, and under the threat that if it was amended in any particular they would not build two railroads in Dakota, it was passed through the lower house. I was chairman of the committee on railroads, and struck out all the provisions which they thought gave them vested rights and finally forced it through the house of representatives. They built the railroads they told us they would not build. We said, "We will walk; we will use the means of conveyance which we have used heretofore before we will surrender the right in the future to control this means of transportation."

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to ask him if when he was chairman of the committee on railroads of the Dakota legislature he incorporated a provision in that railroad bill that the State could take the road at the end of five years if it chose to do so? I should also like to know if any such legislation is on the statute book of South Dakota at the present time?

Mr. PETTIGREW. There is no such legislation, Mr. President. In 1878, twenty years ago, the questions were not as well understood as now. In those twenty years the work has been done which has accumulated the property of the people of this country in the hands of 235,000 men. Therefore the attention of the voters is aroused to these questions. We understand them better now than we understood them in 1878.

But, Mr. President, the same argument was then used. Notwithstanding that, the railroads were built. The argument presented by the Senator from New Hampshire is one that has always been used everywhere when corporate greed wishes to acquire that which belongs to the whole people. They will build the roads, but if they should not, then it is the duty of the city to furnish the necessary facilities, and it would be far better for us if they should do so.

It was argued that nothing could be done in Toronto; but when the city finally took the property, they found people glad to lease it, paying $800 a mile trackage and from 8 to 20 per cent on their gross income, and they took a charter for twenty years, which was to go back to the city at the end of that time for what it would cost to reproduce it. So it will be here. The pending bill and the Belt Line bill are charters by which these two companies get enormous rights. They are to be consolidated and to occupy a vast number of the streets of this city. Under these bills, if they pass without my amendment, they will be capitalized within ten years for from ten to fifteen million dollars above their investment and the people of this city will be called upon to pay interest upon that enormous capitalization.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. PETTIGREW. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BACON. Please have the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill as a new section the following:

That at any time after ten years from the date of the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or the Government of the United States, may acquire all the property of said company, by purchase or otherwise, for its actual value at the time the same is so acquired, without taking into account the value of any franchise now or heretofore granted, and may operate the same in the interest of the public, and the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be for a period of not to exceed twenty years.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the call for the yeas and nays sustained?

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. WILSON]. In his absence I will withhold my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired on political questions with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN] who is absent from the Chamber; but as this is not a political question, I have decided to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has not voted.

Mr. WHITE. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. RAWLINS. I inquire if the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Ohio has not voted.

Mr. RAWLINS. Then I withhold my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Allen,	Clay,	Mills,	Teller,
Bate,	Heitfeld,	Morgan,	Turley.
Berry,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,

NAYS—36.

Aldrich,	Deboe,	Lindsay,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Elkins,	Lodge,	Pritchard,
Bacon,	Fairbanks,	McEnery,	Proctor,
Burrows,	Foraker,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Caffery,	Gallinger,	Mantle,	Spooner,
Carter,	Gear,	Martin,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Murphy,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Nelson,	Wetmore,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt, Conn.	Wolcott.

NOT VOTING—41.

Baker,	Hansbrough,	Money,	Thurston,
Butler,	Harris,	Morrill,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Hoar,	Pasco,	Turner,
Chilton,	Jones, Nev.	Penrose,	Turpie,

Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,	Wilson.
Frye,	Mallory,	Roach,
Hale,	Mason,	Shoup,
Hanna,	Mitchell,	Smith,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after the word "act" in line 12, of section 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "act," at the end of line 12, in section 11, on page 7, it is proposed to insert:

And the rights and privileges hereby granted shall be for a period of not to exceed twenty years.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan whether he will now consent that the bill which has been pending be laid aside for the time being? If we can have a vote upon it at once, however, I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not think it will take more than an hour or so to complete the bill; and, indeed, I presume half an hour will be sufficient. I would rather go on and finish it at this time.

Mr. ALLISON. I know what half an hour means in such cases.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will give way to the Senator from Iowa in charge of the revenue bill if he desires to go on at this time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should prefer to go on for thirty minutes with the bill which has been pending. I do not think it will take more than that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he give way for half an hour to have the pending bill concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will say that it is very important that the street railroad bills for this District should be promptly passed, but of course I know the revenue bill is very much more important.

Mr. ALLISON. If Senators desire to go on with the pending bill rather than take up the revenue bill, if they think the street railroad bill now under consideration a more important matter, I will not press the revenue bill further.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope there will be no further delay in taking up the bill in relation to the revenue in charge of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Iowa announced on Thursday last that immediately on the termination of the routine morning business this morning he would call up this most important measure and ask the Senate to continue its consideration, and upon that the Senate adjourned over until to-day, giving Senators two days in which to examine it. If the Senator every morning is to yield to one thing and another, I can see plainly, and other Senators can see plainly, that the Senator's bill will go to wreck. There is only one way of passing the revenue bill, and that is to insist on its being considered.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Maine thinks I do not see that, he mistakes my understanding; but this matter is of no more importance to me than to every other Senator on this floor. I gave notice distinctly that I would call up the revenue bill this morning, and I only gave way this morning with the understanding that the bill in charge of the Senator from Michigan would not lead to debate. Now I am told its consideration will be concluded in half an hour or so. I know what that means, and all of us know what it means.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; and therefore I hope the Senator will insist on the revenue bill being now considered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will withdraw the street railroad bill, which has been before the Senate, so as to allow the Senator from Iowa to proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Michigan.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie over, the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] being pending.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 995) for the relief of George M. Anderson, of the State of Nebraska; and

A bill (S. 4566) to provide for the increased volume of work in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, due to the calling out of volunteers and the increase of the Regular Army.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4518) to provide assistance to the inhabitants of Cuba, and arms, munitions, and military stores to the insurgent forces, and for other purposes.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the bill which is now before the Senate comprises a large number of pages, and as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance a great many amendments are presented for the consideration of the Senate. I ask in the beginning that the usual course of procedure with this class of bills may be pursued, namely, that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the amendments proposed by the committee may be first considered as they are reached in the reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that order of procedure? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, on Thursday last, when I reported the pending bill from the Committee on Finance with amendments, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] took occasion to inquire whether the committee had prepared any statement in explanation of the bill, and especially in explanation of the amendments proposed by the committee. I stated at that time that I should endeavor to-day to make some analysis of the bill in a general way; and therefore, if the Senate will bear with me for a little while, I shall endeavor to make a general statement respecting its provisions.

As the measure came to us from the House of Representatives it was an internal-revenue bill. As it comes from the Finance Committee to the Senate it is still an internal-revenue bill. There are no provisions in it affecting the importation of articles, except that provision which makes the imported article pay the internal-revenue tax levied upon the like domestic article. Otherwise, I believe, it is wholly an internal-revenue bill.

When the bill came to us it embraced in all its clauses and in all its parts a revenue measure, providing, first, for internal-revenue taxes, and aggregating, in round numbers, as estimated by the member from Maine in the other House who reported the bill in that body, $100,000,000. It also provided for the further raising of revenue by the issue of $100,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness, payable in one year, drawing a rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent. It also provided for an issue of bonds, payable after ten years, but at the pleasure of the Government, running not to exceed twenty years, and bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable quarterly. These are the general provisions of the bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives.

The details as to this $100,000,000 of taxation provided for an increase of the tax upon malt liquors and beer of $1 per barrel, with a rebate to the producers or manufacturers of these articles of 5 per cent. It also provided for various taxes on tobacco and its products, or rather various articles of manufactured tobacco, providing for a tax of 12 cents per pound instead of 6 cents, as now; providing a tax of $4 a thousand upon cigars instead of $3, as now; and also providing for doubling the tax upon cigarettes. It is estimated by the authors of the bill that the revenue will be increased $60,000,000 in round numbers by the increased taxes upon these two articles of beer and tobacco.

Then there are embraced in the bill two stamp schedules, one known as the adhesive-stamp section, which provides for adhesive stamps upon checks, bills of exchange, promissory notes, etc., and another schedule, known as Schedule B, which provides for the placing of an adhesive stamp upon all proprietary patented articles.

The estimate made by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives as to the revenue to be derived from these two schedules is $130,000,000. The bill as it came from the House also provided for a tonnage tax, which was expected to yield perhaps $3,000,000 in addition. I believe those are the principal items of the bill as it came to us from the other House.

From such examination as I have been able to give to the bill as we received it, I am sure that the estimates of the revenue to be derived from Schedules A and B are greatly less than will be realized from the imposition of the taxes provided for in those schedules. When the bill came to the Finance Committee of the Senate we took it up for consideration and analyzed these schedules as best we could. In that analyzation the committee was led to believe that the provisions relating especially to Schedules A and B were too general in their nature to make them equitable and to make them effective in collection. So a number of amendments were proposed and are embodied in the bill as reported to the Senate.

In the consideration of the bill I may say there was very little difference among members of the committee as to the beer tax, the tobacco tax, and the taxes embraced in Schedules A and B, except as to the details of those several provisions.

Mr. WHITE. How was it in regard to the tonnage tax?

Mr. ALLISON. On the tonnage tax I think there was very little difference of opinion in the committee. As to these schedules, there was practically no division in the committee, except such division as came from a desire to perfect the bill; in other words, we all agreed that there should be an increased tax upon beer, an increased tax upon manufactured tobacco, etc., and that Schedules A and B should be embodied in the bill. Nor do I think there was any division in the committee so far as the estimates which were made of what the bill as it came from the House of Representatives would produce were concerned.

There were some other questions which confronted the committee, and which I have no doubt in the course of this debate will concern the Senate, which I think ought to be understood before the bill is taken up for consideration in detail.

In the first place, this bill is here only because the Government of the United States is involved in a war with a foreign country. If there were no war, there would be no necessity for this bill; and therefore it may be truly called what it is denominated, a war measure. If it be a war measure, it is necessary for us to know, in the first place, about how much revenue should be raised for the purpose of carrying on the war until the 1st day of July, 1899, although we all hope that the war may last but a few weeks or a few months at most. The expenses of this war, of course, can not be estimated with accuracy. Any estimate we make here will be but an approximate estimate of the cost of the war.

The committee has in print a statement, which is in the Finance Committee room, making an approximate estimate of what these expenses will be during the remainder of this fiscal year and during the whole of the next fiscal year. Those estimates were made by the Secretary of War and by the Secretary of the Navy. The Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] suggests that I insert these estimates as a part of my remarks, and I will do so. I will, however, first analyze them somewhat. The Secretary of War presented his statement on the 3d of May, and he presented it on the basis of 125,000 volunteers, not taking into account the expenses of the Regular Army, although the day after or the day before he appeared before us he stated that there would be an increase in the Regular Army of from 15,000 to 30,000 men, depending upon the enlistments in that branch of the service.

I believe the law authorizes the Regular Army in time of war to be increased to 64,000 men. The bill authorizing and directing the President to enlist 13,000 men in addition to the 120,000 already called for had not at that time been passed. His estimate for 125,000 men for the fiscal year beginning on the 1st of July, 1898, and ending on the 30th of June, 1899, was $150,923,527.08. Now, adding 15,000 more men to the Army must necessarily add to this estimate $15,000,000 more, in round numbers, making the estimate $165,000,000, instead of $150,000,000. The Secretary of War, being asked whether it was important that an addition should be made to his estimate because of the enlargement of the Regular Army, said he thought his estimate was sufficiently liberal under ordinary circumstances to embrace the Regular Army though it might be increased 15,000 or 20,000 men.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator goes from the War Department, I will ask is the estimate made for the year from July to July?

Mr. ALLISON. It is made from the 1st of July, 1898, to the 30th of June, 1899.

Mr. HALE. It does not take into account the Army deficiency bill, appropriating $85,000,000, that we have already passed?

Mr. ALLISON. No. I shall reach that later.

Mr. HALE. I thought the Senator was going to the Navy Department.

Mr. ALLISON. At the present moment I am going to the Navy Department only for the same period.

The Secretary of the Navy was called before us and made as careful an estimate as he could for the same period, which was that there will be required for the next year $75,556,250 in addition to all that is appropriated in the naval appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, and, as Senators will remember, all the appropriations in that bill are immediately available.

Mr. HALE. About $65,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. About $65,000,000. So the Secretary of the Navy estimates that for the next fiscal year there will be required $75,000,000 in addition to the appropriations already made. We have already appropriated under the act of March 3, 1898, $50,000,000, all of which has practically been expended.

Mr. WHITE. For war purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. For war purposes. That was the first of the emergency bills passed. Under the deficiency bill, to which the Senator from Maine alluded a moment ago, for the remainder of this fiscal year, for the Army, fortifications, etc., there was appropriated $35,700,000. There are some small items also, I believe, in that bill for the Navy, but they are very small. The fortifications act was increased $4,000,000 on account of expenditures for the remainder of this fiscal year and running over into a portion of the next, that bill making another addition of $4,000,000. There is now on our files and pending in the House of Representatives a naval deficiency of $22,275,000 for the remainder of this fiscal year, which is not included in the statement I have made as to the Navy.

These are the items of expenditure which I have aggregated in this table, showing that the total appropriations on account of the war are $379,192,000, covering the period from now to the 1st of July, 1899. These will be the probable expenditures, as estimated by the War and Navy Departments. I think it is hardly necessary for me to say that these estimates are considerably under what will be the expenditures of the Army and Navy for the next fiscal year.

When this statement of the Secretary of War was made he said to us that it did not include what might become extraordinary exigencies or extraordinary situations concerning the Army. Since that time arrangements have been made to order ten or fifteen thousand troops to the Philippine Islands. It does not need any investigation to ascertain that that will largely increase the expenditure for the Army, as it probably will for the Navy later on.

Mr. HALE. More than a million dollars a day.

Mr. ALLISON. More than a million dollars a day, as the Senator suggests.

It is necessary for us, in order to analyze further the situation of our finances, that we shall know what our ordinary expenditures will be and what our ordinary revenues will be. The Secretary of the Treasury estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, receipts of $390,000,000, exclusive of the postal receipts, which were estimated at $92,000,000. Including these receipts was an estimate of $200,000,000 under the tariff legislation contained in what is called the Dingley tariff law.

I think we ought to deal with each other here respecting these questions with no other end in view than to reach the facts. I am satisfied that the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury of the revenue to be derived under the existing tariff law of $200,000,000 a year is too high. I think it may be stated, under the circumstances of our importations and under the new conditions, that the revenues derived from imports will be considerably less than $200,000,000. I should be well satisfied if they should reach $180,000,000. Of course that does not include the postal receipts, which are estimated at $92,000,000, which I think is also a high estimate. So I am satisfied that the receipts from these sources will be much less—at least that they will be a number of million dollars less—than the sum estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I have had the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations to analyze the appropriations thus far made, with a view of ascertaining the situation of our expenditures aside from and without including any of the expenditures for war purposes; and I find, making an estimate as to the probable amount to be carried by the three or four bills which have not yet been finally passed, that our appropriations for the next fiscal year, including the permanent appropriations, will be $531,000,000, in round numbers. Of course that includes $51,000,000 for the sinking fund. Taking out the amount for the sinking fund, on the basis of the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury, there would only be a surplus next year of $2,000,000 in round numbers. So, Mr. President, I think it will be sufficient to state——

Mr. COCKRELL. After deducting the sinking fund?

Mr. ALLISON. After deducting the sinking fund, allowing the receipts as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and allowing the appropriations actually made, with fair estimates upon the final conclusion of the action of the conference committees, the surplus would be a little over $2,000,000. So I am prepared to state, as my own belief, that under the ordinary receipts and expenditures of our Government, and with normal conditions, there would still probably be a small deficit for the next fiscal year; and no man can estimate how our trade, especially our foreign trade, may be disturbed by the condition of war. It is not likely to be increased, but rather to be diminished thereby. Hence it is safe to say that our revenues to be derived from imports will be considerably diminished.

This condition as respects our finances being true, the question is, How much money shall we raise by taxation and how much by loans for the purpose of carrying on the war? I will state that upon this subject there was a diversity of opinion among the members of the Committee on Finance. I believed—and I am not going to state what others believed—that we should provide a minimum sum of $100,000,000, which I was willing to increase to $125,000,000, as the portion that taxation should bear to this necessary and extraordinary expenditure for the war. None of us, I presume, believe that this war is likely to last more than a year. It may be that it will. We shall provide in our appropriation, of course, for this year only, perhaps not for the whole of it; but we should provide in the pending bill for a sufficient sum to maintain at all hazards the war during the next fiscal year if it shall so long continue.

When we reached this point in our discussion the committee were somewhat divided. Some desired to raise a larger sum than $100,000,000 and some a larger sum than $150,000,000, but we undertook to raise a sum—by methods which I shall describe hereafter in a general way—which would approximate from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty million dollars, and I believe we substantially agreed as to the various items up to that point.

If it be true that this bill as it came from the House would raise $105,000,000, as I think it would, then the amendments which we have put upon it, without, I may say, serious differences, will increase it to $150,000,000. There were put on it by a majority of the committee, in addition, a number of sections which were not agreed to by the minority. I ought to make this statement, as there was a division on the subject.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me? If I caught his statement, it was to the effect that the committee determined to raise an amount between one hundred and twenty-five and one hundred and fifty million dollars. My understanding is that the committee positively fixed about $150,000,000 as the amount. There was no minimum or maximum, but the expression of opinion was that in the neighborhood of $150,000,000 should be raised. I think that was the declaration of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I made no statement as to what the committee decided, because I did not believe I was at liberty to do so; but certainly I have no objection to stating that by a vote of the committee—it is proper to state what was done in committee in that direction—it was decided that we should raise $150,000,000 by the pending bill.

Mr. WHITE. I evidently misunderstood the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator did. I said there was this variety of opinion, ranging from a hundred to a hundred and fifty million dollars, and that some of the committee were for a higher sum still.

Mr. WHITE. That is correct.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not undertake to give the vote of the committee.

With the aid of persons who perhaps know more about it than I do, I have endeavored to make an analysis of what the bill will raise without the addition of the sections which have been placed in it by a majority of the committee. It having been shown that the committee voted for $150,000,000, I desire to show from statements which I have here, and which I think are understatements, that the pending bill, without the addition of the sections of which I am about to speak, will produce $150,000,000; and I believe it will produce more than that sum.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator, while he is analyzing the bill, to tell us what, in his judgment, the bill as it came from the House would have produced, and then what the Senate committee has added.

Mr. ALLISON. In a general way, without being specific, I will make that statement. I think the bill as it came from the House would produce $105,000,000; certainly one hundred to one hundred and five million dollars.

Mr. TELLER. I will ask the Senator if that is not considerably larger than the chairman of the committee in the House stated?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would give the Senate and the country an idea as to where the errors are in the estimate of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not an easy thing, especially in the general statement I am making, to analyze each particular stamp tax and each particular item of the tax. When we reach Schedules A and B, which are the schedules that are estimated upon, I think I can show, and I will endeavor to show if need be, that there is more than $30,000,000 included in those schedules as they came from the House of Representatives; and I will be glad then to do so.

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I would not have interrupted him, but as we do not have a written report in this case, I think we are entitled to that information from the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly have no objection whatever to the interruption of the Senator from Colorado or any other Senator. Mr. President, I have here, and I may as well put it in the RECORD at this point, a careful estimate, and I think it is an underestimate, of what the bill will produce under our amendments which were not objected to in committee except as to matters of detail.

Mr. ALDRICH. Read it.

Mr. ALLISON. The statement shows that the tax on fermented liquors, under the provisions as they now stand, with our amendments, will yield $58,908,000, or $59,000,000 in round numbers. That I believe to be an underestimate of a million dollars at least. That includes the total revenue. Senators will see how this table is made up.

Mr. WHITE. It will raise $28,000,000 over the present revenue.

Mr. ALLISON. Not quite $28,000,000 over the present revenue.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish the Senator would state the estimated increase on the different items and not the total amount of the revenue.

Mr. ALLISON. This table is made up in a form which is not quite satisfactory to me, but I will say that the tax upon fermented liquors, as shown by the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in 1897 was $31,000,000 in round numbers; I think perhaps nearer $32,000,000 than $31,000,000. So that this would make an addition of $27,000,000. I am prepared to say that that is a million at least under what the revenue will be. The increased revenue, in my judgment, will be $30,000,000, probably $31,000,000.

The total additional revenue on tobacco and snuff, in the same attitude, will be $25,000,000, as provided for by the House. I will say here that although we have changed the details of the tobacco, snuff, and cigar provision, my judgment is that we have not materially changed the revenue that will be derived from that source. If we have changed it, we have increased it slightly; but I do not think we have materially changed it. In other words, I think our amended bill from beer and tobacco will produce substantially what the bill as it came from the House would produce, which is $60,000,000 additional; and that is a low estimate.

Mr. GRAY. Additional to the present income?

Mr. ALLISON. Additional to the existing law—$58,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Iowa have the figures which he read inserted as a part of his remarks?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is what the Senator from Iowa intends to do.

Mr. ALLISON. I intend to do so. We have placed a special tax upon banks and bankers, brokers, theaters, etc., bowling alleys, and billiard tables.

Mr. HALE. Not in the bill as it came from the House?

Mr. ALLISON. I am speaking of the amendments we have inserted and recommended to the Senate. The tax on bankers alone will amount to $2,500,000, and on brokers to $1,500,000; theaters, circuses, and exhibitions, $1,800,000; which I think is a high estimate.

Then we have increased the stamp tax on sales of stocks, bonds, and merchandise $10,000,000. We have increased the bank-check tax five millions—from the estimates of receipts—bills of exchange, inland, $1,500,000; bills of exchange, foreign, $500,000. I do not think it is necessary for me to read each of these items, but footing them all up——

Mr. TELLER. I wish the Senator would put the statement in the RECORD. I think it would be very useful.

Mr. ALLISON. I am going to do so.

Mr. TELLER. If he does put it in, it is not necessary to read it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will put it all in.

Mr. HALE. It is not a long list. What are some of the items? I should like to know. Let us have the list read. It is not very long.

Mr. ALLISON. Very, well. I have estimated that the revenue from express and freight receipts, etc., covering bills of lading, will be $10,000,000.. That is an underestimate, and in my belief it will be more than that. Life insurance, $1,226,000; as readjusted the mortgage provision will yield $2,000,000 more, and all other items in Schedule B, including the tax on receipts, will yield $28,000,000. I refer to the additions which we have made to Schedule B.

Taking proprietary preparations and perfumery, the revenue will be $20,000,000; legacies and successions, $9,275,000. That probably is a fairly accurate estimate for the first year. If the tax shall continue for a number of years, it would be largely increased. Those are the items of increase in the bill as we have reported it.

Recapitulation—Summarizing the provisions of the bill.

Tax on—
Fermented liquors	$58,906,120
Tobacco and snuff	43,840,560
Cigars and cigarettes	17,340,382

Less revenues for 1897	146,619,593
Provided by the bill H. R. 10100	152,481,306

Mr. WHITE. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Iowa, I wish to ask whether there are any details in his hands as to these computations. Take, for instance, the succession tax. We have a statement that is apparently quite detailed so far as the figures are drawn out rather small, and unless there is some detail furnished or some theory upon which the computation is made, it is very difficult to form anything in the nature of an accurate estimate upon it. It must proceed purely upon matter of faith or judgment in the person making the general estimate, as, for instance, the theater and circus item, which I think is entirely overestimated.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is an overestimate; but that is taken from the receipts as shown by the census of 1890. The Senator will bear in mind that all these estimates are very far from accurate. Take, for example, the stamp receipts. I will state that I have looked up the condition in 1872 with the view of seeing something of the growth and development of our country and what effect that growth would have upon these small stamps or small receipts. I call attention to this now, lest I may not think of it again.

In 1872, which was the last year of some of these stamp taxes, all of the stamps sold by the Post-Office Department amounted to $15,000,000. That was twenty-six years ago. All the stamps and all the stamped envelopes, and all the receipts of the Post-Office Department for what is known as first-class matter amounted to $15,000,000. In 1897, twenty-five years later, the same receipts of the Post-Office Department were $62,000,000, or more than four times the receipts at the first period, and at the first period all letters paid 3 cents, and during the last period less than an ounce in weight pay only 2 cents. Yet these receipts have swollen from $15,000,000 in round numbers to $62,000,000.

Take another item, that of bank deposits. I regret that I have not the document here, but I will state the result from memory. In 1882, only sixteen years ago, the tax upon bank deposits was less than $4,000,000, estimated at one-half cent, the bank deposits then being only seven or eight hundred million dollars—less than a thousand millions. In 1898, as shown by the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, the bank deposits of the United States were $6,000,000,000; and if the proposition of the Senators who have projected into the pending bill amendments which I do not think ought to be there is adopted, there will be raised, upon the basis of one-quarter of 1 per cent per annum upon bank deposits, the sum of $15,000,000 under this bill. So, whilst you have not accurate and detailed statements, by analogy and by comparison you can deal with these great questions, showing approximately what will be raised by this small tax and these small stamps in a country which has developed in the last few years as ours has and which is developing so rapidly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understood the Senator from Iowa, the figures he has read contain an estimate of the receipts from internal-revenue sources for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator state clearly how much the aggregate sum which he expects will be received in that year will exceed the actual receipts in 1897. He has not yet made that clear to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Under the bill as we have amended it, if our bill passes, without the additions of which I have spoken, there will be added to the internal-revenue receipts for the fiscal year 1899, in my judgment, $152,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, in connection with the point just being made by him, can he state when the old bank tax was repealed and what the rate was?

Mr. ALLISON. The tax on deposits was a half per cent.

Mr. WHITE. When was it repealed?

Mr. ALLISON. In 1882 or 1883, perhaps; I think 1883. Of course we have statistics of the deposits of the banks then as now, and at that time the bank deposits of the United States were only a little over one-third of the bank deposits of 1898, showing our growth in this regard in sixteen years.

I now close what I intend to say upon the subject of the amendments of the Senate committee which are agreed to by all, or at least practically so, except as to the details.

I wish to call attention to the amendments which were placed in the bill by a majority of the Committee on Finance, and which are to be found, beginning with amendment 177, on page 59, and ending on page 72, with amendment No. 181. I will not stop at this time and in this general statement to state in detail what I believe will be realized from these sections. I have done the best I could with the aid I could secure from the census of 1890 and from other available data, and I will state that in round numbers these sections, which have been added by a majority vote of the committee, if they are embraced in the bill, will yield $75,000,000 in addition to all that I have stated.

Mr. SPOONER. Making over $225,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Two hundred and twenty-nine million dollars.

Mr. HALE. What do they cover?

Mr. ALLISON. In the first place, I will state briefly upon what data I make this statement. They embrace first the gross receipts of all transportation companies, whether by rail or water, including, of course, all express companies.

Mr. WHITE. Persons and corporations.

Mr. ALLISON. All persons and corporations, of every name and nature, who transport for hire. That item, I estimate, will yield from five to six million dollars; probably not more than $5,000,000. That is the first item. The next item is in respect to telegraph and telephone companies.

Mr. MASON. What page?

Mr. ALLISON. Page 60. This tax, I may say, is called an excise tax, but it is an excise tax of an indefinite amount in the aggregate, being one-quarter of 1 per cent of the gross receipts from all sources of the corporation there named.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator to what paragraph he confined the estimate he made of revenue arising therefrom at about $6,000,000?

Mr. ALLISON. The first paragraph in the amendments with which I am now dealing.

Mr. GRAY. Ending on page 60, line 2?

Mr. ALLISON. Ending on page 60, line 7.

Mr. GRAY. Including the express companies?

Mr. ALLISON. Including the express companies.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Iowa state the rate of taxation upon the same article in the former revenue act, passed during the civil war?

Mr. ALLISON. Two per cent, and 3 per cent part of the time. I am not arguing at this moment. I am trying to get at the facts as I conceive them to exist. Then telegraph and telephone companies are inserted. Of course it is impossible to ascertain exactly what the revenue from that source will amount to; at least I have not been able to do so, because I have been unable to secure accurate data as to telephone companies. The receipts of telegraph companies approach $30,000,000, and one-quarter of 1 per cent upon $30,000,000 is $75,000. The next is a quarter per cent upon all fire and life insurance companies, etc. I think that will yield a pretty large sum, but I am not able to state it. I think two or three million dollars. I guess at that, practically, without having the data upon which to base an accurate estimate. I do not know but that some other member of the committee has it. So with gas and electric light companies.

Then we come to the tax upon banks, and I have stated the data upon which I make the estimate of $15,000,000:

> That every person, bank, association, company, or corporation engaged in the business of banking shall pay a special excise tax which shall be equal to one forty-eighth of 1 per cent each month upon the average amount of the deposits of money subject to payment by check or draft, or represented by certificate of deposit or otherwise, whether payable on demand or at some future day.

If we take the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency as to the amount of bank deposits, which are made from data convenient and accessible to him, there will be levied upon this item alone $15,000,000.

Now we come to the large item in the amendments, and that is the provision which taxes every corporation, no matter what its product may be or what the capital may be, upon its receipts, to be stated monthly under oath. I put it upon record as my belief that that single section of the bill will yield from $40,000,000 to $45,000,000. In the first place, it covers every product in the United States that is sold by a corporation, whether that corporation be large or small. It covers everything that is manufactured in the United States if it be manufactured by a corporation, no matter whether that manufacture be annually $1,000 or $1,000,000. They are taxed upon a royalty of one-quarter of 1 per cent upon their gross receipts, which is the amount they receive from their products.

Mr. CULLOM. It covers mercantile establishments?

Mr. ALLISON. It covers all mercantile establishments, all trading establishments that are incorporated. It includes every corporation of every name and nature.

Mr. President, I do not intend to argue the question at this moment further than to state the objections I have to the provision. The first is that it creates a great duplication of taxes upon everything produced and upon everything sold. In 1890 the manufactured products of the people of the United States were more than $9,000,000,000 in round numbers. Those products were sold. If you estimate that three-fifths of them—and I have no doubt that is not an extravagant estimate—are made by corporations, you have an annual sale of manufactures in 1890 of $5,400,000,000.

It is fair to assume—and I only say this as giving a basis of my estimate—that all these products will be sold twice afterwards, and will be sold by people who are in some way connected with corporations. I know in the little city in which I live the great body of the business is done under the form of trading corporations and mechanical and manufacturing corporations. It is found that by that method manufacturers and traders are enabled to draw into their factories their mechanics and skilled laborers, and by means of certificates of stock, to give them a share in the product of their factory.

These small corporations have sprung up in every part of our country, and there are no exemptions in this provision. I have no doubt that in my own State there are five hundred such corporations which are engaged in the manufacture of butter and cheese. They are the farmers who have aggregated their little capital and subscriptions into $25 and $50 shares. They are thus engaged in this manufacture, and, indeed, I believe that this immense manufacture in the United States is largely carried on in that way by small corporations. There is produced in my State more than $36,000,000 in value of these farm products.

Mr. HALE. May I ask the Senator right there if it is not a fact that within the last ten years it has become a general practice in business for what have been partnerships heretofore and what have been individual enterprises to create themselves into corporations, so that a much larger proportion of business that was formerly private is done under the style of corporations and under an existence as corporations?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. WHITE. It is a great misfortune, too.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a constantly increasing use of the general incorporation laws of States in order to engage in competitive occupations, and corporations are largely resorted to. They are resorted to on the idea that there is some special pecuniary advantage in having corporate authority. That can not be the case here. If these taxes were confined to those corporations which are in their nature securing pecuniary advantages by means of an incorporation, there might be a reason for it. I can see a reason why there might be a tax upon the gross receipts of an electric company where there are but one or two in a city, or that might apply to a telephone company where there is but one, or to a gaslight company, and so on.

But here are men in the same city trading. One is J. T. Somebody & Son, and they are engaged in buying and selling groceries. Another across the street is the A. B. Company, engaged in the same business, and the corporations are in the closest competition, but under this proposed taxation people who are incorporated are put at a disadvantage with the person or the partnership that is not incorporated. I will not enlarge at this time on that point, as I have no doubt it will be argued at greater or less length.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] gives me a very good illustration of a reason why partnerships have been transferred to corporations under our State laws. I happen to know of a case in my own city where two successful men more than fifty years ago established the hardware trade. They have both passed away. They had children and grandchildren. When their children began to grow up, away along in the sixties, the two men who had been in partnership for many years placed their hardware business into a corporation in order that they might divide among the sons who were engaged with them in the business a portion of the fund, so that when they or either of them passed away the whole estate and the trade and business would not be obliged to be wound up in order to settle the estate.

Mr. WHITE. And they might have something analogous to perpetuity.

Mr. SPOONER. But death dissolves a partnership.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I will suggest to him that I think one of the principal reasons which has led to the formation of these corporations is the avoidance of personal liability and the ease with which insolvency may be disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not pretending now to argue against this particular provision except to show that it is an injustice to make this discrimination and distinction in this class of corporations. Of course there must necessarily be in taxing all the corporations that I have described an immense duplication of taxes. These amendments are not supported, I will say, by a minority of the committee. I think that should be understood. Certainly I shall not vote for them.

Mr. President, I have explained as well as I could the several details in the bill, and I will not occupy time as respects the loan provisions.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. TURPIE. I call the attention of the honorable Senator to the succession tax.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Indiana for calling my attention to that specifically. I did not enumerate it, although I mentioned it in the table which I sent to the Reporter and which will be printed. I there stated that the succession tax would yield, in round numbers, $9,000,000 during the next fiscal year.

Mr. TURPIE. I did not understand the honorable Senator from Iowa to say whether he was for or against the succession tax.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated, I think, that the Finance Committee were practically unanimous with regard to the details of the bill, except as to the section which I have just now briefly adverted to and the loan provision; but the Senator must remember that I voted in committee for the succession tax. I expect to vote for it on the floor. I hope that will be a satisfactory answer.

Mr. MASON. On what page is the succession tax?

Mr. ALLISON. On page 60, amendment 180. The only exceptions as respects taxes are those I have named as to corporations.

There are two provisions reported, one by a minority and the other by a majority, relative to the method of raising money to carry on the war not provided for by taxation.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question before he proceeds?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I find on page 64 two amendments of the committee striking out sections 25 and 26. Will the Senator tell us whether that was done by the whole committee or by a minority, and why it was done?

Mr. SPOONER. To what do the provisions refer?

Mr. TELLER. One refers to the tonnage tax, but the other is difficult to state.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Colorado must have been absent when I spoke of that provision. I stated very early in my observations that the tonnage tax, which is section 26, was stricken out.

Mr. TELLER. I was out of the Senate a moment and I did not hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. It was stricken out by the unanimous vote of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. By the unanimous vote of the committee; there was no disagreement on that subject.

Mr. TELLER. How about the amendment on page 64, striking out section 25?

Mr. ALLISON. That was stricken out unanimously, although that was copied by the House committee from an old statute.

Mr. TELLER. Was it ever enforced?

Mr. ALLISON. The statute of 1864, from which it was taken, allowed the person who made a contract to charge it over to the purchaser. I do not know whether it has ever been decided that the provision was constitutional. We thought it not wise to retain it.

Now, there are two projects or plans here for the purpose of raising money not to be raised by taxation. The minority of the committee believed that it was wise, and now believe it is wise, to raise a larger sum by borrowing than the majority believe ought to be so raised, as I understand the position of the committee. The majority of the committee propose to raise $42,000,000 by issuing silver certificates upon what is known as the seigniorage or gain upon silver bullion that has never been coined. They propose to raise that, and then coin the silver dollars afterwards, amounting in round numbers to whatever that seigniorage, so called, amounts to, $42,000,000. They also propose to issue $150,000,000 of United States notes, commonly called greenbacks, which notes shall have all the attributes and perform all the functions and execute all the plans of the present greenbacks. In other words, it is proposed by those amendments to add to our currency $192,000,000.

The other proposition, which receives the support of the members of the Finance Committee who are on this side of the Chamber, is to borrow, if need be, for war purposes, $300,000,000, which borrowing shall take place as the money is needed, and only to be had when it is needed for the purposes of carrying on the existing war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4545) to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses.

Mr. ALDRICH. If it will not interrupt the Senator from Iowa, I will call attention to the fact that the Calendar of Business printed to-day——

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be laid aside informally, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Calendar of Business printed to-day contains three bills which are said to be unfinished business. Under the rules and practice of the Senate there can be but one unfinished business, and the other bills, if they have any status at all, should be denominated as special orders or be put under some other heading. I hope that the custom will be discontinued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At the request of the Senator from Maryland, the unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, Mr. President, just at this point of time I will ask that the bill now under consideration shall continue the unfinished business from day to day until it is disposed of, and that when finished the present unfinished business shall be restored. I do not want to interpose every day at 2 o'clock to have the pending bill proceeded with. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa please restate his proposition?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the pending bill may continue the unfinished business until it is disposed of, and that when it is disposed of, the unfinished business which was laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock shall then be restored to its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TURPIE. I request the Presiding Officer to state the unanimous-consent agreement in regard to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill now before the Senate be continued until it is completed, and that at its completion the consideration of the unfinished business which was laid before the Senate at 2 o'clock shall be resumed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I will repeat what I said before as respects bonds. It is the purpose of one portion of the committee to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow from time to time a sum not exceeding $300,000,000 for the purposes of war expenditures and for no other. We also propose to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow another hundred million dollars, from time to time as the exigencies may arise, to meet public expenditures, and issue certificates therefor bearing 3 per cent interest. We draw the distinction between these two classes as respects the war.

So one plan to be proposed by the bill is, first, to raise $150,000,000 by taxation, and so much of $300,000,000 as may be necessary from time to time by borrowing money. The other plan is to raise over $200,000,000 by taxation, and to issue greenbacks for the balance, or what is substantially the same thing, currency without interest, for the remainder.

In the statement I have made I have merely undertaken to analyze in a general way what is embraced in the bill, and I have so far refrained from arguing the various propositions that the Senator from Indiana did not even seem to know whether I was for or against the succession tax; and what led to that inquiry on his part may lead to still similar inquiries upon the part of other Senators. I expect, however, to be able to support the provisions of the bill in a general way, except those provisions which relate to the taxation of gross receipts (because that is what it is) on a portion of our people without taxing the gross receipts of another portion of our people, and that part of the bill which provides for borrowing money by issuing greenbacks.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether he does not think it would be convenient to have printed for the use of the Senate a limited number of copies of the acts of 1864 and 1866 in so far as they relate to these immediate subjects? I refer to this matter because there are but few of those copies extant. Indeed, I have been unable to procure one for my personal use, and there is constant inquiry from Senators with reference to them. It seems to me it would not be amiss if the Senator from Iowa would request that a limited number of copies of the acts in question in so far as they pertain to this matter be published for the use of the Senate. They might be readily compiled by the Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. I see no objection to that request. Mr. President. By unanimous consent, I suppose the clerk of the committee can be authorized to prepare whatever the Senator from California desires, and it can be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH. It can be printed for the use of the committee under the standing order. An order of the Senate is not, I think, necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. And copies can be distributed to all Senators under that rule.

Mr. WHITE. I understand, then, that that will be done.

Mr. ALLISON. That will be done. I ask unanimous consent that it be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be made.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa one question in a matter of detail which he omitted. How much does he understand that that part of the Senate Finance Committee bill which strikes out the tax on existing stocks of tobacco will reduce the House bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not speak of that. Of course how much the amendment will reduce the amount will depend upon when the bill passes. Just at this moment they are rapidly decreasing their stocks on hand, I am told. I think probably it would make a difference in the bill of $2,000,000 and possibly $3,000,000. That is all I desire to say, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa a question before he sits down. Is the Senator's objection and that of the portion of the committee which he calls the minority to the one hundred and seventy-seventh amendment, which is the tax on transportation companies, railroads, etc., that it raises too much money, or is the objection to the principle of the taxation? I did not understand really what the objection was.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not go into that. I will state to the Senator that if we retain the rest of the bill, it is too much tax to be placed upon railroads in my belief. We already have taxed all bills of lading for everything that they may transport, which is a heavy tax and which will amount to a great number of millions of dollars. I do not think in a proper distribution a tax should be levied upon the railroads to that extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Complaint is made that the Senator from Iowa can not be heard.

Mr. ALLISON. And very justly.

Mr. TELLER. Then I understand the Senator to say, not that this tax is too much, but that he is opposed to any tax of that character, and that that is the sentiment of the minority of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. So far from stating that, I stated the reverse of it.

Mr. TELLER. Then I wish the Senator would state again what his objection is to this particular provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated that there is already in the bill a provision which taxes all bills of lading 1 cent, and if duplicated 2 cents, and requiring every railway and transportation company to make such bills of lading and see that the stamp is put on. That is a tax upon transportation which will be a reasonably heavy one; and my answer to the Senator was that I thought if that tax was imposed it would be unjust to put an additional tax of a quarter of 1 per cent upon their gross earnings.

Mr. TELLER. Or even a less amount?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not say a less amount.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I understood the Senator to state in general terms that he thought the revenues from the one-quarter of 1 per cent tax on the gross receipts of corporations would produce from forty to forty-five million dollars annually. I should like to know where he gets the data and how he arrives at that conclusion. He did not give us any detail. It seems to me that that estimate is vastly too much.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Texas for asking me that question. That does not relate to railway corporations or transportation companies.

Mr. CHILTON. I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. It relates to all corporations. I stated it from the best data I could get of the amount of products of manufactures by the census of 1890, which certainly was largely below the product of 1898, assuming that three-fifths of the manufactures were produced by corporations, which I think is a fair estimate. If that be so, there is $5,400,000,000 of receipts from these corporations that manufacture alone, and one-quarter of 1 per cent on that would be $13,500,000 upon manufacturing corporations alone.

I assume that the products of manufacturers are largely sold, first, to what are called wholesale dealers; that the wholesale dealers in turn sell these same products to retail dealers, and that the retail dealers in turn sell them to the consumers. So, taking the manufactured products of the country alone, which amount to nine thousand million dollars, those products are certainly sold three times—first, by the manufacturer; secondly, by the wholesale dealer, and thirdly, by the retail dealer, according to the course of trade in our country.

Mr. CHILTON. I thought the Senator stated the amount at $5,000,000,000, instead of nine thousand million dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. Five thousand four hundred million dollars.

Mr. CHILTON. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. That relates to the articles created in our own country from iron ore and the raw product of coal to the finest fabric that is spun or woven or created by the mechanical skill of our people.

Mr. MORGAN. May I ask the Senator whether there is any corresponding duty laid on the importation of articles of a similar character which are made in other countries?

Mr. ALLISON. In the pending bill?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no duty upon them.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me, the same tax which applies to imported articles applies to the domestic articles when they are sold.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to state that. I was speaking only of articles which are fabricated in our own country.

Our annual importations, according to the foreign valuations, amount in round numbers to $700,000,000 per annum, and they are sold certainly for $700,000,000 plus the transportation—I will say nothing about the tariff—plus the transportation when they reach our shores, and these specific importations are also sold plus the tariff. These imports when they reach our shores are paid for by the importers. The importer must return his one-fourth of 1 per cent upon the sales that he makes of every one of those articles. The importer will sell those articles to a jobber, who in turn will sell them again to a retailer, and thus this process, covering a thousand million dollars or more per annum, is carried into this scale of a quarter of 1 per cent, because this quarter of 1 per cent reaches every place where there is a corporation, little or big, or whatever it may be; it reaches all their receipts, no matter whether they pay out again 99 per cent or 90 per cent of those receipts for the raw material which they use.

Here is iron ore, if you please, in Alabama or on Lake Superior, that is worked out by a corporation—and it is generally worked out in that way—and that iron ore is sold and resold and sold again, over and over, and at each time, at each change, it pays one-quarter of 1 per cent, if it is done by a corporation.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me, there is one other link in the ordinary chain of transactions which he has omitted entirely. All the chief manufactures are sold, in the first instance, by the manufacturers to commission houses; they sell them, in turn, to the wholesale dealers, and they in turn sell them to the retail dealers.

Mr. ALLISON. That is another illustration of what I was saying, which shows that this tax is like the air we breathe, practically it goes into everything and takes something out of everything that we consume in this country. So I say it is a duplication and it is a necessary thing which will have to be taken into the calculation of every manufacturer, every trader, every merchant, and business man, and will require him to sustain losses that the trade and business of this country will not justify.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, while I do not intend to enter into the discussion at this time about the matter, I wish to say generally, in considering this corporate tax, the Senate certainly will have to vote not only on the main question, but it will be plainly put before the Senate in such a way, for instance, as to present these questions: Will it be proper for the oil-refining interests of the United States to pay a delicate and patriotic tax to the Government at this time? Will it be proper for any of the great and vast business enterprises of this country to make a payment of any tax at this war time? Of course it can not be that Senators who object to a general corporate tax upon the ground that it involves those who are but little able to pay will find it in their hearts to object to a tax that will reach such legitimate subjects of taxation as these.

I simply call the attention of the Senate to the various provisions of the bill, so that when this matter comes up it may be made the subject of intelligent and full discussion.

There is no question that there are expressions in the bill which may be improved, and it is to be hoped, and no doubt will be found to be true, that every Senator will try to improve the bill and place it in such a position as to raise not only adequate revenue, but to put the burden upon some others as well as upon those who occasionally take a little tobacco or perhaps drink a glass of beer.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether this provision, as reported by the committee, of one-fourth of 1 per cent tax on gross receipts is the same upon the sugar trust and the great railroad corporations as it is upon the small business corporations of the country?

Mr. WHITE. If I understand the Senator's question correctly, it is the same upon all corporations, with the exception of a very few that are taken out of the bill entirely. There is no discrimination in the rates.

Mr. GORMAN. The rates are the same?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. GORMAN. Then how does the Senator suggest that we shall have an opportunity to test the sense of the Senate as to that class of corporations? How will that opportunity be presented?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator will be asked, if necessary, to vote as to whether or not he is willing to impose a tax upon the sugar trust, or upon the oil-refining trust, and so upon various other interests. Of course if the amount is too large or too small in any particular case, no doubt facts will be produced here which will develop it.

It has been very difficult to get the figures. An attempt has been made to impose a rate—not the same amount—but to impose a rate which it was thought would be just. In the case of these great corporations, indeed, any rate would produce a large amount, as their profits are immense, though the rate might not be by percentage so very great. A very large percentage tax would perhaps be unjust, and yet one-fourth of 1 per cent is vastly less than the tax imposed during the last war. A majority of the committee thought it was just. At the same time, I suppose the majority of the committee is not wedded to that particular rate.

So far as I am concerned, I certainly am not, and I confess that in a great many of these matters I should like to have more information than I have, and will gladly yield any preconceived notions I have of the present rate when facts shall come before us showing that a mistake has been made, inasmuch as the end, I assume, all have in view is to do that which is just, whatever it may be, and to distribute the war burdens as well and as equitably as we can upon those in this country who may be able to pay them.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire some information from the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill. I desire to know if there is any, and if so, what, distinction as to articles taxed after they have gone into the retailer's hands; in other words, on proprietary articles, tobacco, beer, and things of that sort—whether there is a period of time in the distribution of these articles when the tax does not reach them, or whether it reaches them in the last man's hands?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator desires to know whether or not the taxes imposed by this bill will apply to persons who may have articles on hand for sale. As the Senate Committee on Finance has amended this bill, it provides respecting proprietary articles known as druggists' articles, such as may be in the mind of the Senator, that the proprietary article which has passed from the manufacturer or maker shall be taxed, but only when sold at retail; so that all the stock of proprietary articles on hand mentioned in Schedule B are required to have a stamp affixed to them when the articles are sold at retail.

As to tobacco, we struck out the provision which directed that the stock on hand, which has already paid one tax, should be required to pay another, and the same as to beer.

Mr. CHILTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa one question. He made an estimate in regard to legacies and successions. I ask what evidence he has on that subject? I made an estimate, but I do not think the Senator has given the data on which he made his.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not personally made the estimate, but it was made by another. It was made partially by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], who has looked into the matter somewhat, and also by the clerk of the Committee on Finance, by making comparison from data to be found in the last census.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from Arkansas desires to take the floor to speak to the pending bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do; but the understanding of the Senate was that we should adjourn at an early hour to-day, and so it would be impossible for a Senator to make a statement in connection with the bill without having an interruption at a moment when it might be inconvenient for him to be interrupted. Therefore I prefer that the bill shall not be further considered to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. In view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas and in view of the fact that it was understood the Senate should adjourn at 3 o'clock, I ask that the bill may be laid aside; and I give notice that immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] being entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understand I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MILLS. Will the Senator withdraw that motion for a moment to allow me to present a petition?

Mr. ALLISON. I withhold the motion for a moment.

Mr. MILLS. I ask leave to present a petition, and ask that it may be read in full.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Texas? The Chair hears none, and the petition will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the petition, but before concluding was interrupted by Mr. CHANDLER. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his question of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. The paper being read is a petition. The rule requires that the substance of such a paper shall be stated by the Senator presenting it. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the line of reasoning adopted by the petitioners nor to the information which they give to the Senate as to the way the tariff bill should be framed and as to the way our foreign policy should be conducted. I only rise in the interest of the rule itself. It seems to me that the customary course ought to be pursued in regard to petitions and that the Senator from Texas should state the substance of the petition in the usual way.

Mr. MILLS. The reading of the petition is nearly concluded. There are only a few more lines of it left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Hampshire that he is correct in his construction of the rule. The Chair will further state that when the petition was presented the Senator from Texas asked unanimous consent that it should be read; and the Chair stated the request of the Senator from Texas, and there was no objection; so it is being read under the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, of course, I can make no objection; but when the Senator from Texas presents another petition so long as this and of the same character, however respectful the petition may be and however useful it may be that the Senate should know what is in it, I shall object to having the rule violated.

Mr. MILLS. I ask that the petition may be printed in the RECORD, and then we can all read it. It is from very able men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the petition will be printed in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

The petition of the undersigned, the president and a majority of the directors of the National Civic Club, of the borough of Brooklyn and city of New York, most respectfully represents:

Your petitioners, while fully recognizing the necessity of promptitude in devising measures for supplying the means of effectually carrying on the present war and the necessity also of subordinating considerations of convenience and profit to such necessity, nevertheless respectfully call attention to the great evils which have resulted to nearly every country engaged in a great war by the haste and want of proper consideration with which measures of taxation have been adopted, which have exercised most disastrous influences even after the war had ceased.

They would recall to the recollection of your honorable body the oppressive and almost ruinous effects of the internal taxes on manufactures and business generally enacted during our last war, which it was conceded absolutely destroyed at least thirty important branches of manufacture in the United States, besides greatly contracting manufactures in general; and they further call attention to the present misery of the people of Italy and Spain, inciting them to revolt from absolute starvation, which is the direct result of unwise and oppressive methods of taxation adopted hastily under the pressure of foreign wars and never corrected during peace.

Without attempting to criticise in detail the bill now pending before Congress for raising revenue by internal taxes (the details of which have, indeed, not been published by any newspaper of general circulation in this vicinity, if anywhere), your petitioners are informed and believe that, with the possible exception of stamp taxes, the whole burden of war expenses is, by the bill now pending, laid upon the people at large in proportion to their consumption and not at all in proportion to their wealth, thus increasing the burden relatively in proportion to the poverty of the taxpayer. Your petitioners are not prepared to assert that this result can be entirely avoided, but they respectfully urge that it should be to some extent counterbalanced by putting part of the burden upon the wealth and profits of the more successful part of our people.

To this end, your petitioners suggest:

1. That a moderate tax should be placed upon the earnings of corporations having special privileges, such as are not granted to individuals, for example, railroad companies, telegraph companies, express companies, gas companies, water companies, and similar corporations; that it is better to place such tax upon the net profits of such companies than upon their gross receipts, lest there should be excuse given for adding the tax to fares and freights, as was done during the last war; but that, in estimating such net profits, no allowance should be made for interest paid or anything beyond strict operating expenses. Such a tax as this is not in the least affected by the decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax in 1895.

2. That the customs tariff should be so far modified as to abolish absolutely prohibitory duties and to bring them down to the point where they will produce some revenue. This could be done on a number of articles without raising any question with reference to the general policy of protection. Recognizing that this policy is favored by a majority of the present Congress, your petitioners have no desire at present to raise any issue upon it. They only urge that when taxes are heavily increased upon articles of common consumption, and therefore the burden is imposed upon the poorer classes, patriotism requires that those classes which receive the benefit of absolutely prohibitory duties, to the exclusion of all revenue to the Government, should be as willing as the poor to make some sacrifice in the present emergency for the benefit of public revenue.

Finally, your petitioners beg to call attention to the extreme importance of certain questions which will come up before your honorable body for decision within a very short time, as the result of conquests of foreign territories. The inexpediency of unqualified annexation to our Union of territory acquired by conquest must be obvious to every thinking citizen. Such territories ought not to be acquired in any manner which will even imply any moral or honorable obligation ever to receive them as equal States of this Union. It is impossible to see where such annexation would stop. With our Federal Constitution prohibiting any distinction in voting privileges between any colors or races, conquests might be forced upon us against our will, involving the addition to our population of two or three times our entire present number. We might end by being governed by the Philippine Islands, instead of governing them.

Moreover, the extension of all Federal tax laws, including not only the tariff, but internal-revenue laws, to distant colonies would be disastrous to us and possibly fatal to them. Yet our Federal Constitution is imperative that such laws shall be uniform in every part of the United States. These laws are framed solely with reference to our own geographical situation and industrial development. No one would pretend that they are in the least fitted for the administration of distant islands and half-civilized or savage races.

Your petitioners therefore respectfully suggest that whatever new territory the United States may by force of circumstances be compelled to acquire should be taken subject only to a protectorate; that none of it should be annexed to and made a part of the United States, so as to be subject to our Constitution and laws, and that separate governments should be provided for such territories under the direction and absolute control of the United States, but without formal annexation.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 16, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

RELIEF TO THE INHABITANTS OF CUBA.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I have a conference report on Senate bill 4518, to provide assistance to the inhabitants of Cuba and arms, munitions, and military stores to the insurgent forces, and for other purposes.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 4518) to provide assistance to the inhabitants of Cuba and arms, munitions, and military stores to the insurgent forces, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows, viz: After the word "effective," in the last line of the amendment to the text, insert the word "fighting;" and after the word "war," in the same line, add the words "against Spain;" so that the section as amended will read:

"SEC. 2. That the President and general officers commanding troops in Cuba are hereby authorized to furnish to the Cuban people such arms, ammunition, equipments, and military stores and supplies as they may require in order to increase their effective fighting force in the existing war against Spain."

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House amending the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

B. F. MARSH,
M. GRIFFIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. R. HAWLEY,
THOMAS H. CARTER,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MARSH. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is there not a statement accompanying the report?

The SPEAKER. The statement will be read.

The statement was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4518) have agreed, and the House conferees submit the following written statement in explanation of the accompanying conference report:

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House amending the title of the bill and agrees to the same.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to section 2, and agrees to the same with amendments as follows, viz: After the word "effective," in the last line of the amendment to the text of the bill, insert the word "fighting," and after the word "war," in the same line of the bill, add the words "against Spain;" so that the section as amended will read:

"SEC. 2. That the President and general officers commanding troops in Cuba are hereby authorized to furnish to the Cuban people such arms, ammunition, equipments, and military stores and supplies as they may require in order to increase their effective fighting force in the existing war against Spain."

The effect of these two amendments is to limit the furnishing of arms, ammunition, etc., to Cubans engaged in fighting the Spanish, and also limits the authority conferred by the bill to the period of the existing war with Spain.

B. F. MARSH,
M. GRIFFIN,
N. N. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MARSH. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MARSH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the report was agreed to was laid on the table.

GEORGE M. ANDERSON.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill (S. 995) for the relief of George M. Anderson, of the State of Nebraska.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George M. Anderson, of Rock County, Nebr., be, and he is hereby, permitted and authorized to make a homestead entry of 160 acres on any of the public lands of the United States which are now, or may hereafter be, subject to homestead entry, and that in making proof thereof he shall be given credit for any time he may have spent in residing upon and improving homestead entry, by mistake, on the northeast quarter of section 28, township 95 north, of range 69, in Gregory County, S. Dak.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SUTHERLAND) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 995) for the relief of George M. Anderson, of the State of Nebraska, beg leave to report the same favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass. We adopt the subjoined Senate report as a part hereof.

[Senate Report No. 21, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 995) for the relief of George M. Anderson, of the State of Nebraska, beg leave to report the same back favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass as amended.

George M. Anderson resides at Mariaville, Rock County, Nebr. August, 1892, he established a residence on the NE. ¼ of sec. 28, T. 95 N., R. 69 W., in Gregory County, S. Dak., constructing thereon a sod house 14 by 30 feet, a sod barn 14 by 75 feet, an outside cellar 10 by 16 feet, dug and curbed two wells, fenced 75 acres, and put 80 acres under cultivation. These improvements had an aggregate value of about $600. The settlement on and improvement of the land was made in good faith by Mr. Anderson and with a view of acquiring title under the homestead laws, and in the full belief that he was locating upon that portion of the Big Sioux Indian Reservation opened to settlement by the proclamation of the President of the United States of February 10, 1890. His belief was founded upon the best information obtainable at the time.

When the United States survey was made in 1895, and the line between the ceded and reserved Indian lands in Gregory County, S. Dak., was established, he learned for the first time that the land he had taken as a homestead was within the boundaries of those set apart for the Indians receiving annuities at the Rosebud Agency. In August, 1895, Mr. Anderson abandoned his land in Gregory County, S. Dak., leaving his improvements, thereby sustaining a loss to the amount of their value, as above stated. His homestead entry and residence on and cultivation of said land were bona fide and continuous from August, 1892, to August, 1895.

The committee submit as a part of this report the following affidavits:

STATE OF NEBRASKA, Rock County, ss:

I, George M. Anderson, being duly sworn, depose and say that my postoffice address is Mariaville, Rock County, Nebr.; that in August, 1892, I established residence upon the NE. ¼ of sec. 28, T. 95 N., R. 69 W., in Gregory County, S. Dak., and made the following improvements thereon, to wit: Sod house, 14 by 30; sod barn, 14 by 75; outside cellar, 10 by 16; 2 good wells, curbed up; 75 acres fenced; 80 acres broken and under cultivation, of the aggregate value of $600; that said settlement and improvements were made in good faith, with the view of acquiring title to the land under the homestead laws, and in the full belief that the same was upon that portion of the Big Sioux Indian Reservation opened to settlement by the proclamation of the President of the United States dated February 10, 1890, which belief was founded upon careful observation and the best information obtainable.

That when the Government survey was made in 1895, and the line between the ceded and reserved lands in Gregory County, S. Dak., was established, I for the first time learned that land above described was within the boundaries of the land set apart for the Indians receiving annuities at the Rosebud

Agency; that in August, 1895, I abandoned said land, leaving thereon all of the above-described improvements, by which removal and abandonment I sustained a loss of not less than $650; that my residence upon said land was bona fide and continuous from August, 1892, to August, 1895, and was made and maintained with the view, as above stated, of acquiring title thereto under the homestead laws.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of this bill, with the following amendment: Strike out the words "without any fees or payments to the Government, excepting the local land office fees," in lines 7, 8, and 9.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska what committee made the report.

Mr. GREENE. The Committee on Private Land Claims. This man simply went on the land by mistake, and made large improvements and lost them all; and now he wants the privilege of making an entry on other public lands.

Mr. LACEY. I think that ought to have been examined by the Committee on Public Lands. I followed the reading of the report, and the report seems to state facts that would justify the granting of relief; but it is not a subject for investigation by the Committee on Private Land Claims. However, I make no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREENE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On May 11, 1898:

H. R. 5885. An act to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to punish the carrying or selling of deadly or dangerous weapons within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved July 13, 1892.

On May 12, 1898:

H. R. 9638. An act to increase the number of surgeons in the United States Army.

On May 14, 1898:

H. R. 5975. An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes;

H. R. 137. An act granting a pension to Annie Saffell;
H. R. 802. An act granting a pension to Benjamin F. Moulton;
H. R. 1546. An act granting a pension to Annie Wittenmyer;
H. R. 1722. An act granting a pension to Ellen O'Rorke;

H. R. 5809. An act granting a pension to Charles E. Taylor;
H. R. 6515. An act granting a pension to Grace Gudgell;
H. R. 6680. An act granting a pension to Janet Wemple;
H. R. 6988. An act granting a pension to Emory T. Hipple;
H. R. 7449. An act granting a pension to William S. Adams;
H. R. 7952. An act granting a pension to William C. Ryan;
H. R. 8197. An act granting a pension to Mary B. Hulings;
H. R. 8860. An act granting an increase of pension to Calista Hadley;
H. R. 4160. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Garrison;
H. R. 4981. An act granting an increase of pension to William D. Seamans;
H. R. 6928. An act granting an increase of pension to Eva Seeley;
H. R. 9043. An act granting an increase of pension to Ann M. Smith;
H. R. 4469. An act increasing the pension of Katherine L. Cushing; and
H. R. 1295. An act to increase the pension of Frederick G. Moore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Treasury Department Steamboat-Inspection Service 300 copies each of the Proceedings of the Board of Supervising Inspectors of Steam Vessels for the year 1897 and 1898.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4578) to remove all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth article of the Constitution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed Senate concurrent resolution 39, providing for the printing and binding of 3,000 copies of the Compilation of Laws relating to the Navy, Marine Corps, etc.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4031. An act granting a pension to James J. Wheeler—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1619. An act granting a pension to Michael Lannon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4547. An act granting a pension to Eli M. Couch—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1519. An act granting a pension to Jennie A. Kerr—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1976. An act granting an increase of pension to Annie E. Ruff—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4563. An act granting a pension to Julia G. Fay—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3325. An act granting a pension to Maria S. Whitney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3466. An act granting a pension to Sarah Hamilton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4582. An act to provide an American register for the steamship Centennial—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4567. An act to organize a volunteer signal corps.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 4556, to provide for the increased volume of work in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint one assistant adjutant-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel and one assistant adjutant-general with the rank of major: Provided, That the vacancy created in the grade of colonel by this act shall be filled by the promotion of officers now in the Adjutant-General's Department according to seniority, and that upon the mustering out of the volunteer forces and the reduction of the Regular Army to a peace basis no appointments shall be made in the Adjutant-General's Department until the number of officers in each grade in that Department shall be reduced to the number authorized by the law in force prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I object, Mr. Speaker. I want to say a word in explanation of that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The tellers will take their places. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] will take their places.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his objection. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has twenty minutes in favor of the bill and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] twenty minutes in opposition.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Military Affairs reported the House bill unanimously in favor of adding 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, and 1 major to the force of the Adjutant-General at this time. In 1894 Congress reduced the force in the Adjutant-General's Office by 1 colonel and 1 major. The bill as it passed the Senate put the force back in the Adjutant-General's Office exactly as it was prior to 1894. In addition to that, it provides that after the close of this war no further nominations shall be made to the office until the force is reduced to the number now provided for by law. I think every member of this House who has been at the War Department will bear me out in the statement that the Adjutant-General's Office is absolutely overworked. Every member of that force is in the office by 7 o'clock almost every morning, and a large part of the force is at work as late as 12 o'clock at night.

With all that, it is impossible for them to keep up with the demands made by the increased force being mustered in. This measure would be necessary even if the war should close in the near future, because for three months or more after the close of the war that office will be busily engaged in reducing the Army to a peace footing; so that I believe it is one of the measures that should be passed by Congress, and that it should have been passed long before this.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa rests his claim for the passage of this bill upon the necessity for an increase in the clerical force of the Adjutant-General's Office?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; the clerical force could be increased, I think, without any difficulty. I rest my claim for the passage of this bill on the necessity for the permanent increase of the officers of that department—not the clerical force—while we have war.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. As I understand, the reason the volunteer officers who have been commissioned as assistant adjutants-general could not be assigned to that work is that after the war is over, and after the volunteers are disbanded, the increased force will be needed in getting the records in shape before the force in the Adjutant-General's Office is reduced.

Mr. HULL. Not only that, but I think that these officers require more training than the average of those in the Adjutant-General's Department.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. But some of those already there, I understand, are regulars.

Mr. HULL. Their work is so great that their time is absolutely taken up in the discharge of their duties with volunteers, and they could not be detailed for these positions in the Office of the Adjutant-General.

Mr. SAYERS. This bill, as I understand, is intended to supply the Adjutant-General's Office with additional force, is it not?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not think there is any question about the propriety of the passage of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I know there is not.

Mr. DOCKERY. The reason for my suggestion was that the matter of the increase of the clerical force in the Adjutant-General's Office is now pending before the Committee on Appropriations and is being examined by a subcommittee of that committee.

Mr. HULL. This has nothing to do with the clerical force.

Mr. STEELE. The fact is that these officers perform double functions; they act as military officers and also as clerks—necessarily so.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it not true that the officers appointed under this bill may hold their places for fifteen or twenty years; that they will not be mustered out when the Army is reduced to a peace basis until vacancies are created by death or resignation?

Mr. HULL. It is not intended that they shall be mustered out. They are promoted from the officers of the Army, and the bill simply provides that after peace is restored, when retirements or deaths take place, no other officer shall be promoted to fill these places. The retirements or deaths at the head of a corps soon work an equalization, and the two additional officers that this bill provides for would soon be dispensed with. A provision of law passed in 1894 cut off a colonel and a major and made it impossible to fill those places. In a few months after that provision was passed those positions became vacant and remained so.

Mr. BAILEY. The trouble is that we are creating two officers to meet an emergency, and we propose to continue those officers after the emergency has passed.

Mr. HULL. These are Regular Army places, and it is not intended that the officers shall be mustered out.

Mr. COX. Let me call attention to one point. When the war ceases the services of certain officers will necessarily cease; but it does not follow that in the Adjutant-General's Office these services cease immediately, because the labor is continuous to a certain extent in that office.

Mr. BAILEY. I perfectly understand that; and I perfectly understand that there might be a necessity for these additional officers for three or four months; but I do not believe there is any necessity that they should continue in service for three or four years, or perhaps fifteen or twenty years. If we are creating offices or providing armies to meet an emergency, the offices and the armies ought to go out of existence with the cessation of the emergency. That is my idea.

Mr. HULL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask——

Mr. DOCKERY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas so much time as he may desire.

Mr. BAILEY. I merely wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether it is not true that there are now on the retired list officers entirely capable of performing these duties? Why could they not be detailed for this service?

Mr. HULL. Because the law absolutely prohibits it. And when we had a proposition to allow army officers to be detailed for staff duties, the overwhelming sentiment of the House was opposed to it. It was urged by men on the floor—I do not remember just who—and also urged upon us in committee by a great many members, that these men on the retired list had had their day, that active men were wanted in these places, and that we ought not to undertake to fill them by drawing from the retired list.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course; the object was to keep the men who have retired out of the way of men who desire promotion. That is the whole truth.

Mr. HULL. The opposition to the proposition came from the volunteers and from men in civil life, not from the Army itself.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not suggesting any interference with the volunteers. This, however, I understand to be a bill for the promotion of such persons as are now in the Regular Army. My suggestion is that there are men, possibly, on the retired list of the Army who might be detailed to perform this duty.

Mr. HULL. That could not be done, of course, without an act of Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that. But would it not be just as easy to pass such a special act of Congress as to put this measure through?

Mr. HULL. I stated before that a similar effort had met with defeat in the House. I think it would be difficult to pass such a bill. This bill has already passed the Senate, and the demand for its immediate enactment is urgent. No man who has been to the Adjutant-General's Office within the last three weeks can have failed to see the urgency of such a measure. It is impossible for the officers there to discharge their duties with promptness under present conditions. The needs of the service demand this increase.

I reserve my time, if it be necessary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

BOARD OF MANAGERS, NATIONAL VOLUNTEERS' HOME.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H. Res. 237) appointing four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That WILLIAM J. SEWELL, of New Jersey; Martin T. McMahon, of New York; JOHN L. MITCHELL, of Wisconsin, and William H. Bonsall, of California, be, and they hereby are, appointed members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States for the term of six years commencing April 21, 1898, and until their successors are elected; the said WILLIAM J. SEWELL to succeed himself, his present term expiring April 21, 1898; Martin T. McMahon to succeed himself, his present term expiring April 21, 1898; JOHN L. MITCHELL to succeed himself, his present term expiring April 21, 1898, and William H. Bonsall to succeed A. W. Barrett, whose term of office will expire April 21, 1898.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LOUD. I demand a second.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the only one of the appointments provided for in the joint resolution in reference to which any question seems to be made is that relating to the appointment from the State of California. The appointment of General SEWELL is a reappointment of himself to succeed himself. That of General McMahon is of the same character, and that of Colonel MITCHELL, of Wisconsin, is also an appointment to succeed himself. These appointments are all agreed upon, without dissent, by every one interested, so far as the Committee on Military Affairs has been advised. The appointment, however, from California is a change. The committee recommend for that position Maj. William H. Bonsall, of Los Angeles.

In support of the action of the committee, I desire to say that one of the Senators from California, the only Senator who seems to have taken any active interest in the matter, or who has expressed an opinion to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, favors the appointment of Major Bonsall for that position. Two other Representatives from the State of California who have taken some interest in suggesting the appointment for that place also favor Mr. Bonsall. A third gentleman who has taken an interest in the appointment on this board favors the selection of Colonel Smedberg, of San Francisco.

The recommendations from all parts of the State of California are overwhelmingly in favor of the appointment of Major Bonsall. The Committee on Military Affairs, in reaching the conclusion that it did reach, was guided by two important considerations. We concede the qualifications of each of the gentlemen to be ample and in all respects satisfactory. Each is worthy of the nomination and appointment. But the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers in the State of California is at Santa Monica, 500 miles away from San Francisco.

Major Bonsall is a resident of the immediate locality and resides within thirty minutes' travel of it, and can easily reach in a short time, by electric cars, the Home where his duties will require his attention. It is convenient for him at any time when his presence at the Home is required or rendered necessary, in which case he will have but thirty minutes by electric car to travel from his residence to the place where his duties will require his attention. Colonel Smedberg, the other candidate who was named, and the only one as competing with the nomination of Major Bonsall, resides in San Francisco, 500 miles distant from the local Home at Santa Monica.

I apprehend that it is understood by the members of this House that the Government pays the traveling expenses of the members of this Board of Managers in visiting the various Homes. The practice of the Board of Managers is to depend upon the local manager of every State in which a Home is located to keep them informed respecting the condition of that Home. Not only that, but the local member ought to be so situated that, without incurring these heavy traveling expenses, he may reach the Home speedily and inexpensively when his presence is required. It is economy to the Government. We considered that a second ground for making the recommendation which we have made.

The local member of a National Home in a State is a sort of arbiter and umpire, so to say, who determines differences which may arise between the management of the Home—that is, the governor, who lives at the Home, and his subordinates, as well as the inmates. How many times a member of the board residing in a State having a Home in it may be obliged to visit that Home, in order to keep it in proper condition and discipline, will depend altogether upon the success of the governor in keeping his subordinates in line and in enforcing the necessary discipline of the Home.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I notice you have put in this list two Senators of the United States. Is not that forbidden by section 6 of Article I of the Constitution?

Mr. HULL. No pay or emoluments are connected with the position.

Mr. LACEY. Section 6 of Article I of the Constitution provides that—

> No person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

That is without reference to the question of compensation. Does not the Constitution expressly forbid the appointment of both these Senators?

Mr. GRIFFIN. It has not been so considered in the past, and I will say that a previous statute prohibiting Members of Congress and Senators from becoming members of this board was repealed, in order that they might hold that position. In my judgment the conclusion which has heretofore been reached with reference to their eligibility is a sound one. I am not aware, Mr. Speaker, that the question has ever been raised before; but if the practice is an erroneous one, it has been indulged in for many years.

Mr. HULL. Ever since the Home was started.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Ever since the origin of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers. It seems to me too late to-day to make the objection that they are not eligible. They receive no pay or emoluments of any kind.

Mr. HULL. If my colleague will yield for a minute, I will say that on the first organization of the board, when General Butler, of Massachusetts, was elected a member, and was also elected president of the board, he was a member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Of course General Butler was a fine constitutional lawyer, and a presumption grows out of that fact that he, being a member of Congress, would not have accepted a position on this board were it contrary to the provisions of the Constitution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have stated why we have recommended Major Bonsall in preference to Colonel Smedberg. Another thing which I want to state to this House is that Colonel Smedberg is a retired regular army officer, and the volunteers who are the inmates of this home object to a regular army officer being placed upon the board to fix rules and regulations to govern them.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I should feel compelled to take up any of the time of this House in a matter in which the House has no interest whatever. I do not believe there are five men in this body who have any interest in this question as to who may be appointed manager of the Soldiers' Home. I regret also, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN] has seen fit to move to suspend the rules and pass this bill, because it rather lends strength to the suspicion that I have had all this time, that there has been some unfairness practiced in relation to these appointments.

I supposed, after consultation with the gentleman as late as this morning, that he was to call this up for consideration by unanimous consent, which would have permitted any member of this House to offer an amendment to the resolution.

But I find that every advantage is to be taken of the situation, and I am prevented by the rules of this House from even offering an amendment. Now, I will briefly review the situation in this case. I do not propose to fight this. Neither should I have fought it if the gentleman had brought it up under a request for unanimous consent. I had the fortune, or misfortune, to serve during the late war. I have taken a somewhat prominent part in my own country, when there, in Grand Army matters. These appointments have been given, in days gone by, supposedly to people who are closely allied to the soldier interest. The soldier interest of the State of California, knowing that I was the only ex-soldier of the delegation, naturally in good faith came to me and urged not this one man, but one of three or four or five gentlemen who have been identified with the interests of the soldiers in the State of California.

I will tell you in a moment who vouches for and indorses this one man. Early in the winter I went to the chairman of the committee, whom I had supposed to be my close personal friend, based on many years of close association on the floor of this House, and notified him to inform me about what time he would reach these appointments. I went to him two or three times with that purpose in view. I was busy; he was busy himself. He asked me once or twice who my candidate was. I told him frankly that I had no candidate, and that my ultimate purpose was to get the delegation from California together, irrespective of any question of politics, and see if we could not make some selection that was acceptable at least to the majority of us, as this is not a matter of politics.

As I say, I was busy during the winter; so was the chairman of the committee. Time passed on, and when I made another request of the chairman of the committee, and stated whom I thought should be appointed, the chairman said, "I think that matter has been all settled." Then I asked a hearing before the committee, and discovered then that a recommendation was made last December by the Senator and, I understand, two of my Republican colleagues, and the same had been in that committee all the time, notwithstanding that I had been continually asking this gentleman to notify me when the time arrived for a conclusion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to any man on the floor of this House if it does not lend strength to the suspicion of foul play. Much stress is laid upon the fact that this man, Major Bonsall, resides near the Home. That is the only leg the gentleman has to stand upon. I can say, gentlemen, in good faith, that all the rest of the managers of the Soldiers' Homes do not live close to the Soldiers' Homes; and the question of transportation, which weighs most, of course, in the case of the managers, is the concentrating of those delegates here in Washington, where they are compelled to come once a year to hold their annual meeting; and it would not make much difference whether the manager lived in Los Angeles or San Francisco when it comes to the matter of transportation.

The gentleman lays stress upon the ground that I had recommended one man. I said I was willing to indorse any of them, because there is no politics in this for me. The gentleman has made objection to the selection of Colonel Smedberg, on the ground that he was an army officer on the retired list. Let me say that no man is closer to the volunteer soldier in California than Colonel Smedberg. He is a most gallant officer, and left one of his legs in the South in the late unpleasantness. He is a man who for twenty-five years has taken the most active interest of any man there in those matters, having held all those little positions where there was a great deal of work to do and no recompense.

Now, then, this matter has resolved itself into a condition that I regret to see. It is a mere matter of politics; and I will prove it to you before I get through, that the selection of this man is simply to pay a personal political debt of a man in the other end of this Capitol. I think this House had better retain the man who is in, although a Democrat, General Barrett, who is a most estimable man, who was a fine soldier. I was talking to the Representative from this district, who sat by me here a moment ago (I see him now), and who lives within a few miles of Los Angeles.

Says he, "Who is Major Bonsall? Is he the book man of San Francisco?" "No," I said; "he lives in Los Angeles." "Why," he says, "I have never heard of him." Neither do I believe either of my colleagues on this floor who have indorsed this man ever heard of Major Bonsall before. Colonel Smedberg, whom I have recommended, is known to the people of California as a reputable business man in the city of San Francisco, and has been for a great many years. Now, what is there in this case? Major Bonsall was a candidate for either the position of register or receiver of the land office at Los Angeles; and, unfortunately, I suppose, the Senator had promised two men this office, and he could not give it to both; and Major Bonsall must be provided for in this House. That is paying a political debt, and debauching the Soldiers' Homes of this country to pay a political debt.

These facts I presented to the committee with as great vigor as I was in possession of, and I propose, as I have done, to present it to the House. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the selection of the managers of the Soldiers' Home has fallen into such a dirty, low, contemptible slough of politics as is demonstrated in this selection here to-day. I say that Major Bonsall, although he may be a good man, is wholly unknown to the volunteer soldiers of the State of California. If he ever had taken any interest, if he ever had affiliated with the soldiers of the State of California, they would have known him. I received a telegram a few days ago from a gentleman well known, a man I would have been perfectly willing to have had this place, a reputable gentleman well known all over the country, and he said, "Who is Major Bonsall?" He said: "To admit I don't know Major Bonsall, I suppose, is to admit I am unknown myself."

I see among this list of managers of the Soldiers' Home the names of many eminent gentlemen, men whose names are written on the pages of the history of this country and will be handed down to posterity; men who are loved, revered, and admired by the volunteer soldiery of this country; but when they come to contemplate that you have placed side by side with General Franklin, General SEWELL, General McMahon, and General Henderson, late a member of this House, a gentleman who has been put there to pay a paltry political debt, then I say the blush of shame will come over the face of every volunteer soldier of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have said all I have to say about this matter. I was impelled to do this through a sense of duty I felt that I owed to the cause of the soldiers of the late unpleasantness in the State of California. So far as it is in their power they will resent your act to-day, which I am satisfied will be consummated after having adopted the tactics you have——

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, I do not know.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I think so; but I want to call the attention of the committee on the floor of this House to the suggestion that it would be a more manly thing for you to do to let General Barrett, who is indorsed by neither the Republican members of the delegation nor by anybody else, but a man whom I believe—I do not know positively, but I believe—has rendered most efficient service upon this board—to let him remain for six years longer. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, so far as the political question is affected by the resolution, I want to say to the House that the question of politics did not enter into the consideration or report at all. We followed the universal rule since I have been a member of the committee of dividing these places between the two great parties, the party in power taking a majority of one of the board; and you have in this report two Democrats and two Republicans, so that the charge of politics is absurd. Major or Colonel Barrett was not even a candidate for reelection, did not ask for it, did not seek it, and, I understand, did not want it.

Mr. LOUD. I know he would accept it.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from California says he spoke to me early, and he did. I said before it was settled we would be glad to have his views and that of other Republicans in California. He said it was all settled long ago, and that I told him it was settled. That is not so. It could not have been so, for it had not been even considered by the committee at that time.

Mr. LOUD. You said you thought it was settled.

Mr. HULL. I did not say I thought it was settled. I had not spoken to a member of the committee in regard to the matter; and when communications came to me bearing on the Soldiers' Home, I referred them promptly to the subcommittee, of which my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN] is chairman. It is now past the time for the offices to be filled, and we have before us the statement as to the relative merits of these men.

It is true that a United States Senator recommended Major Bonsall. It is also true that two Republican members of the House recommended Major Bonsall, and we assumed—we may have been mistaken—we assumed that the two Republican members from California were just as much in sympathy with the people of California as the distinguished gentleman who has just addressed the House. Before a vote was taken in the subcommittee and before a vote was taken in the full committee, before it was canvassed among any of us, the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] had a hearing before the committee and made his statement. He says Major Bonsall is unknown.

This is a contest between Republicans. Is Major Bonsall unknown? The chairman of the Republican State central committee of California recommended Mr. Bonsall. One United States Senator and two Members of this House recommended him. He lives near the Soldiers' Home, as my friend has said, and in view of all the facts and recommendation the committee was compelled to decide between the gentleman from California and the Senator and two leading Republicans, and while acknowledging his honesty and fairness, we did not believe we should be justified in turning down the two Republicans and the Senator. I believe, further, that it is better to select a man who lives not more than 50 miles from the Home, inasmuch as he is compelled to be there once a month and sometimes once a week, than to take one hundreds of miles away.

It is better in the interest of economy and good government and fair play and fair dealing. The committee believe that Major Bonsall is an honest and capable man, that he will be able to discharge his duties, and that he is known to the people of California. I believe that he will not be as unknown a factor as the gentlemen from California assumes, but that he is known to the people of California and will be able to discharge his duties. My understanding is that he served a term in the State senate; I think the papers show that.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. HULL. If a Senator and two Republican Representatives and the chairman of the Republican State central committee can indorse this man, he must be somewhat known.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I am justified in replying to the charge which the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has so ungraciously made. I have endeavored heretofore to bring this joint resolution up for consideration, and have waited the pleasure of the gentleman from California in order that I might do so. Once he had an unfortunate headache; at another time he had a conference report in charge. I waited; I deferred the bringing up of the question.

This morning, he knowing as well as I did that this is suspension day, I approached him on the subject, and asked him whether he had any objection to my calling this matter up to-day, and he said, "No; call it up and let us kick it out of the way." That was his language. He knew very well that that meant a suspension of the rules. He had an opportunity to object to the second being ordered when the request for unanimous consent was made. In view of these considerations, Mr. Speaker, I submit that it comes with ill grace from him to say that there was anything underhanded about the manner in which this joint resolution was brought up for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, until the gentleman rose to address this House to-day, personal matters did not enter into the consideration of this question. It was treated purely upon its merits—solely upon the advantage it might be to the proper government of the Soldiers' Homes and to the Government itself. It is evident that the difficulty grows out of a contention between the gentleman and some other Representatives; and so far as that may have a bearing on this question, I trust that this House will appreciate the fact that no question of merit is involved in it, and that it is not for the House to determine questions of this sort upon the likes or dislikes of gentlemen unless they reach the merits and affect them.

The Committee on Military Affairs knows nothing whatever respecting the attempt on the part of any of the Representatives, Senators, or other persons from California to pay political debts by elevating Major Bonsall to this position. He comes here indorsed, although he may not be known to the gentleman from California who has addressed the House—he comes here indorsed by some of the most prominent men in California. He certainly has a being. He exists. He lives near the Home in question. He is a man abundantly capable, according to the testimony presented to the committee, and I will say that so far as anything to the contrary is concerned—so far as his alleged standing in his own State, his alleged lack of knowledge, his alleged lack of acquaintance with the State of California are concerned—when the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] appeared before our subcommittee in connection with this question no consideration of that kind was urged.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, it is hardly in the proper course of procedure for my side of the question to close the debate. I only want to say in reply to what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRIFFIN] has said——

Mr. COX. The gentleman will allow me to say that I believe he never appeared before the full committee. I was not present when he made his statement; but I was very happy when the controversy arose between the Republicans; when they got two Republicans and we two Democrats I was very willing to compromise on that.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman is correct; I did not appear before the full committee.

I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I think he has always been, so far as it is possible for a man to be, perfectly fair on this question until to-day; and but for what had gone before I never should have thought anything of the transaction to-day. I feel that I was treated as I myself never would treat a member of this House. I was willing to overlook that until it came to the occurrence of to-day, when the gentleman moved to suspend the rules.

I told him that I should offer no objection to the consideration of the question; that I simply desired to present my position upon it. But the gentleman, it seems now, has at least lent suspicion to what went before—that every opportunity has been taken advantage of to suppress your humble servant, when I could have been suppressed in a perfectly easy way under the ordinary rules of the House. I feel that the committee have made a mistake which they would not have made if they had given this subject that investigation that they should have given it when they found there were two representations before the committee.

I have such confidence in the fairness of the gentleman from Wisconsin that I feel that if he were to investigate the conditions surrounding these two men, while he might not be persuaded to recommend Colonel Smedberg, he would see that the best interests demanded the selection of some other man than the one whom the committee now recommend—the selection of a man known to the people of the State of California.

There are some things in connection with this matter that I can not say on the floor of the House. I feel—and I have been perfectly honest with the gentleman, too—I feel from what I know that if this House adopts this report to-day it will make a very serious mistake, one which the gentleman himself I know would not make if he had given the subject investigation.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I call for a vote.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 47.

Mr. HULL (before the negative vote was counted). I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 50 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 53, answered "present" 16, not voting 160; as follows:

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR, has voted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Ohio has not voted.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I was sitting in the rear of the Hall and my attention was temporarily diverted when my name was called. I ask to be recorded as present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will be so recorded.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WARD, and desire to be recorded as present instead of voting.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have been paired generally with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAMS. If he has not voted, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. If he were present, he would vote "aye" on this proposition, and for that reason I have broken the pair with him and voted in the affirmative myself.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ANNUAL REPORT OF UNITED STATES CONSULS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanying the annual reports of the consuls of the United States upon foreign industries and commerce. In view of the value of these reports to the business interests of the country, I indorse the recommendation of the Secretary of State that Congress authorize the printing of a special edition of 10,000 copies of the general summary entitled "Review of the world's commerce," and of 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations (including this summary), to enable the Department of State to meet the demands for such information.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 16, 1898.

ADMINISTRATORS OF ISAAC P. TICE AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, House bill No. 2219, entitled "An act for the relief of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, and others," without my approval.

The object of this bill is to confer upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to retry and determine a case brought by the representatives of Isaac P. Tice against the United States in the Court of Claims in the year 1873 to recover from the Government the sum of $25,000, the alleged value of certain meters invented by Isaac P. Tice for the purpose of measuring the quality and strength of distilled spirits.

It was claimed that this amount, together with the sum of $733.33 for storage of said meters, was due to the claimant under a contract made between Tice and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in pursuance of section 15 of the act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stats., 481). From the report of the case in 13 Court of Claims Reports, 112, it appears that the matter was fully and deliberately tried and argued both on behalf of the claimant and of the United States, and that at December term, 1877, the Court of Claims rendered a decision adverse to the claimant, expressly stating that the claimants had failed to establish their claim both in law and on the facts. Not satisfied with this conclusion of the Court of Claims, the claimants took an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the case was again argued and was decided, October term, 1878, the judgment of the Court of Claims being declared to be in accordance with the law and therefore affirmed. In these two decisions the law and the facts pertaining to the claim were fully set forth and discussed.

The bill further confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to try and determine certain alleged claims of said Tice and others for money collected on account of the Tice meters, but not paid over to him or them under the regulations of the Treasury.

The amount of the latter claim, according to the report of the committee of the House of Representatives to which this bill was referred, is $140,000. It does not appear from the report of the committee, nor from any documents to which I have access, who are the other persons by whom this latter sum is claimed. The claim for $140,000 must have accrued prior to July, 1871, and therefore at this time is of at least twenty-seven years' standing.

It will thus be perceived that the object of the bill is to remove from the pathway of the claimants two legal bars to the prosecution of their claim in the courts—one, the bar of the statute of limitations, which requires all claimants against the Government to present their claims and bring actions thereon within six years from the time the cause of action accrues; and the other, that bar of estoppel which arises by reason of a former adverse judgment, rendered in a court of competent jurisdiction. This is not a general modification of the law in these respects, but a special application of it to these particular claimants.

If the principle on which the statute of limitations is founded is wise and beneficent, then the effect of it ought not to be impaired by special legislative exemptions in favor of particular persons or cases except upon very clear and just grounds, where no lack of diligence in the prosecution of the claim is apparent. I can not find in the papers submitted to me any sufficient grounds to justify a special exception from the ordinary rule in favor of these claimants. As to the claim for $140,000, no reason is stated why it was not included in the original suit nor why action upon it was not brought against the Government within the six years allowed by the statute for that purpose. To permit such an action to be brought now is simply, without any reason of a special nature, to grant a privilege to these claimants which is denied to all other citizens of the United States, in accordance with the provisions of the general statute of limitations. The principle underlying statutes of limitations and the reasons for the maintenance of such a rule of litigation are much more cogent when applied to claims against the Government than when applied to claims against individuals.

These claims do not differ in their character from ordinary business transactions such as transpire every day between private persons or business corporations. The Government can only defend itself against claims of this nature through its public officers and with the use of such public records as the Departments may furnish. Great difficulties are experienced by it in contesting fraudulent and unjust claims, and it is only fair in the interest of the public that a rigorous adherence to some rule of limitation should be maintained.

The provision of the bill which practically directs a new trial of the claim for $25,000, decided adversely to the claimants more than twenty years ago, is still more objectionable. These parties had their day in court. They produced their witnesses and were heard both originally and upon appeal, and upon the case they were then able to make the court decided they had no claim against the Government. It is now suggested that other witnesses have been discovered who can supply the lack of proof which was produced on the former trial. Such a ground for a new trial would never be considered in any court of law in the land in a case between private parties where such a length of time had intervened since the former trial. No explanation of a satisfactory nature is furnished for the failure of the claimants to produce these witnesses upon the original trial.

The bill further provides that upon a retrial of the original claim, or upon the trial of the new claim, the claimants shall be at liberty to offer in evidence the depositions of witnesses now on the files of any of the committees of Congress in relation to the aforesaid matters, which may be introduced as evidence in case of the death or disability of the deponents.

This provision will enable the claimants to present ex parte affidavits, prepared by the claimants or their attorneys, without opportunity being afforded to the Government to cross-examine, provided the claimants can show that the deposing witnesses are either dead or under disability, by which, no doubt, is intended any such disability by reason of absence, illness, and the like, as may render them legally incapable of being produced in person to testify upon the retrial. Such a provision as this is most dangerous to the interests of the Government.

I fail to see any reason in the facts connected with these claims for granting to these parties relief of this extraordinary nature.

The Treasury of the United States ought to be very carefully guarded against attacks of those who come forward with stale claims, and especially from the attacks of those who have already been fully heard according to the methods prescribed by the statutes.

To approve this bill would be to furnish a very dangerous precedent which would open the door to demands upon Congress in other cases which have been fully heard and determined.

For these reasons I am constrained to withhold my approval from this bill.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 16, 1898.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to retry and determine according to law and in equity the case of the administrators of Isaac P. Tice, deceased, against the United States, decided by the Supreme Court at the October term, 1878, and also to try and determine according to law and in equity the claims of said Tice and others for money collected on account of the Tice meters, but not paid over to him or them under the regulations of the Treasury, or based on contract with the United States, and that in said retrial and trials the statute of limitations shall not be available to the United States against the rights and claims of the estate of said Tice and others: Provided, however, That on the retrials or trials of said cases the United States or the claimant or claimants may offer in evidence any evidence given and filed in the prior trial, and also the depositions of witnesses now on file in the Court of Claims or on the files of any of the committees of Congress in relation to the aforesaid matter, which may be introduced as evidence in case of the death or disability of the deponents, together with such other material evidence as the United States or the claimant or claimants may wish to introduce: Provided, however, That all such evidence and depositions, alluded to as aforesaid, shall be subject to all other legal objections, and the court shall render its judgment in favor of the administrators of said Tice, or in favor of the other persons or their estates, for such sums as may be found to be due and unpaid to said Tice or others on any of said accounts: Provided further, That either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the judgment of the said court.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, upon reconsideration, agree to pass the bill? On this question, by the Constitution, the vote must be taken by yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 0, nays 139, answered "present" 18, not voting 148; as follows:

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the House, upon reconsideration, refused to pass the bill.

The Clerk announced the following additional pair:

Until further notice:

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. BARTLETT.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. VAN VOORHIS, voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. VAN VOORHIS, voted.

Mr. McDOWELL. Then I desire to vote. I answered "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. McDOWELL; and he voted in the negative.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, voted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, did not vote.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am assured that he would have voted "no" on this question, and therefore I have broken my pair and voted.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ASSAY OFFICE AT SEATTLE, WASH.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 3145) to establish an assay office at Seattle, Wash.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE], on behalf of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to establish an assay office of the United States at Seattle, in the State of Washington; said assay office to be conducted under the provisions of the act entitled "An act revising and amending the laws relating to the mints and assay offices and the coinage of the United States," approved February 12, 1873; that the officers of the assay office shall be an assayer in charge, at a salary of $2,500 per annum, who shall also perform the duties of melter; chief clerk, at a salary of $1,500 per annum. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building for the use of such assay office; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,000 for salary of assayer in charge, chief clerk, and wages of workmen, rent, and contingent expenses.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] will take their places as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 113, noes 2.

Accordingly a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] is recognized for twenty minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to control the twenty minutes in opposition.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, the bill that is before the House at this time is a Senate bill. It is practically the same as a bill introduced in the House and submitted to the Treasury Department, and upon which the Secretary of the Treasury reports, practically approving the passage of the bill. The purpose of it is simply to give to the gold producers of Washington and the Klondike regions the same facilities which in the past have been given other mining centers. The Government has established assay offices at Helena, Mont., Boise City, Idaho, and at Charlotte, N. C., for the little gold produced there, and at New York City on account of the important business there, and at St. Louis, Mo., for some reason, I do not know what, all of which have received relatively very much less than the probable production of gold that would come to Seattle.

The production of the Alaska field is difficult to approximate; the production of the Washington field for the last year is more than equal to the deposits of any assay office now existing except New York. If you add to that the large production which is unquestionable in the future from the Alaska field, you have more demand for an assay office at Seattle, it seems to me, that will accommodate that traffic than at any other point of the United States. A conservative estimate of the production of the Alaska field for the present year is $12,000,000.

The purchase of the material and leather bags and various appliances for bringing it out of that country in this present year is for an amount of $10,000,000, and the character of the production of Washington, with the increased production of eastern Oregon and the Klondike region and the region along the coast of Alaska, is estimated by some people as high as $20,000,000. But, placing the very conservative estimate on the production at $10,000,000 or $12,000,000, some facilities ought to be provided for taking care of it.

It is true there is a mint in San Francisco; but it is also true that of the incoming returning miners from the Klondike region it is estimated that 90 to 95 per cent of them come to Seattle. They do not come to San Francisco. Wherever the men may start from, when they come back they come to Seattle, and there is where they are called upon to dispose of the product of their labors.

Now, it may be said they may take it and sell it as easily as any other producer sells the product of his labor. But it has been the policy of this Government to afford them a market that should have their confidence, and without paying large assay fees, giving to the miner the guaranty that he is properly treated and that the Government would take the product of their labor at the assay office, where there is no one interested in cheating them, where they simply submit it to a sworn officer of the United States and receive his certificate of its fineness and its character, and a draft, if desired, upon the subtreasury for its value.

This is simply a provision that this assay shall be made at Seattle for that great northwestern region. There are several points that have asked this accommodation; but an investigation by the committee satisfied them unanimously, and the opinion of the Treasury Department was to the same effect, that the most convenient point, the point which would accommodate this great incoming traffic most completely, was the city of Seattle. Especially is this true when you take into consideration the fact that the Canadian Government is proposing to compete for this product through its great banks by the establishment already of branch banks at Dawson for the purpose of purchasing the gold there and at Vancouver and Victoria.

Every effort is being made by the Canadian Government to attract the incoming product of these mines into its channels of trade instead of letting it come into the United States, where the gold would naturally come. All these considerations have prompted the committee to unanimously recommend the passage of this bill. It makes provision for putting in operation the assay office as economically as possible; but it is also advisable that it shall be done promptly, in order that it may be ready to receive the incoming product of this year's labor.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I observe as I rise something of a quiet smile on the faces of my Republican friends. They anticipate the repetition of the same old, old story. It is true that for months in this Chamber, in committee room, while at luncheon, and in their private homes I have besieged my friends with reasons incalculable and arguments unanswerable why the great city of the universe should have this assay office. My distinguished fellow-member, Governor SAYERS, insists that if he does not hasten to visit the great State of Washington at his first convenience he will soon be persuaded that not above but there is Paradise, particularly if I am left longer free to agitate this assay office. [Laughter.] I am delighted to congratulate you all that your agony is at an end. Soon you will have your fate as well as my own in your hands. This office is urged here to-day under some disadvantage. Prominent members on the Republican side are opposed both to the consideration and the passage of this bill. I regret this. I am satisfied they labor under a false impression.

This assay office is not sought as a favor, but as a Government necessity; not as a gift to Seattle or the State of Washington, but as a benefit to the Treasury of the United States. The necessity for having this assay office in that country is very apparently established from the fact that otherwise you lose the business of these miners and men engaged in Alaska. These miners come down from Alaska with their gold, and they can not have it assayed there. They could take it to the mint at San Francisco; but instead of going that distance, losing that time, they will return to Canada, at either Vancouver or Victoria, and there, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has explained, to the Canadian banks, will have their gold assayed for no charge, pay them mint price, the Government of Canada getting the benefit of the gold for their country, and our American merchants lose the trade. This ought not longer be tolerated. Canada will not permit any of our citizens to take a miner's license out in any of the American cities or ports. This to prevent them trading in American cities and forcing them to go to Canadian towns, where they will have to purchase their supplies. This is our loss. It it a most unjust discrimination. You must help us to avoid this injustice,

Mr. HAY. How does this office help the matter?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. It brings them with their gold to a city where they can have it assayed freely and without charge, and the American miner, all things being equal, is like every other American, a patriot to his country, and will come to her shores to scatter his possessions as well as to enjoy his blessings. [Applause.]

Mr. MAHANY. You say the Treasury Department has recommended this?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. In two separate full communications; likewise the Director of the Mint.

Mr. MAHANY. Then I will be with you for that reason, as well as to be with my friend from Washington.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I can not in more terse or complete detail describe Seattle's commercial and general advantage over all her competitors than to use the words of one of Seattle's eminent citizens, Hon. Erastus Brainerd, to whom I am indebted for much aid in the compilation of facts in this matter. From his figures and arrangement I inform you there is no known source of gold production so rich as Alaska and the northwestern territory of Canada, the gold belts of southeastern Alaska and of the Yukon River. By the energy and enterprise of American citizens in the establishment of lines of transportation and trade this unprecedentedly rich gold-producing area has been made tributary to the United States.

The product of the year 1897-98 from the Yukon-Klondike district alone is conservatively estimated at not less than $12,000,000, and the total of all Alaska and northwestern territories at over $20,000,000. This gold has been produced chiefly by American citizens. Every possible effort, as members of the House well know, has been put forth by Canada to divert the great trade which is at the basis of this product from the United States to Canada. The Dominion Parliament reports show both Conservative and Liberal united to this end. Every obstacle possible has been put in the way of the American miner, and no other need be considered, because the miners are practically all Americans, and every help has been extended to Canadian merchants. It is a known fact among mining men that miners will trade, as a rule, where they dispose of their gold. Heretofore they have traded in the United States. Now the Canadian Government has caused two branch banks—the Canadian Bank of Commerce and the British North American Bank—to be established at Dawson to buy and handle the Yukon gold.

Unless some step is taken to offset this Canadian movement, much of the trade is likely to be lost to us. Such a step is the establishment of a United States agency to buy gold—an assay office—at the most available point. The establishment of an assay office on the Yukon is impracticable by reason of climatic conditions, by lack of interior transportation, and by its remoteness from mints. Seattle is the natural point for establishment of such an office. It is only seventy-two hours from Alaska, and half a day from British Columbia. Thither not only the output of the Yukon will go, but that of southeastern Alaska, of Cooks Inlet, Copper River, and other similar points must go, for there the United States proper is first reached from Alaska. To send gold from Cooks Inlet, which last year produced nearly $750,000, to the Yukon would be an absurdity. The establishment of an assay office at Juneau would be open to the same objection, only in a less degree. The Government would then take all the risk of water transportation from Juneau, of nearly 1,000 miles, before the United States is reached.

There is still another reason relating to the gold product by itself why Seattle should be selected. The gold and silver product of the State of Washington itself is already important and increasing in value. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his letter of February 7, 1898, to the House Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, estimates the gold product of Washington at $406,000 for 1896 and $500,000 for 1897. Add this amount to the Alaska and Yukon product and it will be seen that the bullion receipts at Seattle are of the first importance. At the present time to turn these into cash the miners, who naturally arrive at Seattle first, often with no cash in hand, must send their bullion to the assay office at Helena or to the mint at San Francisco, in either case causing a delay and loss of time to them of not less than one week. This difference in time, with its costs and annoyances, is not unlikely to make him dispose of his gold in Canada or in British Columbia, whereas if he could exchange it at once on arrival at Seattle, the nearest point on Puget Sound, he would go there.

The Atlantic coast, with a minimum gold product, affords opportunities to exchange gold at assay offices or mints at either New York, Philadelphia, Charlotte, N. C., or New Orleans. The Rocky Mountain belt and its spurs are provided for at Deadwood, Boise, Denver, Carson, and Helena; but the Pacific coast, from the Arctic Circle to Mexico, is provided with but one place where the citizen can secure the stamp of his Government on his gold, and that place is 1,000 miles distant from the present central receiving point of the greatest prospective and already great producing gold fields. Such a discrimination, in view of the facts, is unfair to enterprise. Last year alone the shipments of gold from Seattle, by Great Northern and Pacific express, to Helena and San Francisco equaled one-fifth of all the gold received at all the assay offices in the United States. They were equal to two-thirds of the Boise deposits, and seven times as large as the deposits at Charlotte. This year they will exceed all.

This measure is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. It has passed the Senate. It is of more than local importance. If adopted, it is likely to put millions of gold into circulation which otherwise may go elsewhere; and it will surely retain a large percentage of trade, which may be directed to Canada, which is not temporary, but permanent, and which has already amounted to millions of dollars.

The question may be asked, if Canada establishes banks at Dawson to buy gold, why would not establishment of American banks serve the same purpose? United States banks have no authority to do business in a foreign country. Moreover, the miners, being American citizens, naturally prefer the stamp of the United States on their metal. Our coin circulates in Canada. Canada has no coin and her bank notes do not circulate here, but they will serve to buy goods with in Victoria and Vancouver, and it is the purpose of the Canadians to try to force or to induce Americans to trade there rather than in Seattle, which at present has just enough advantage in price over Canadian tariffs to induce prospectors to outfit in Seattle rather than in British Columbia. With facilities for disposing of their gold in Canadian territory, which do not exist in the Pacific Northwest, many may be induced to make the British Columbia cities the base of their supplies.

The question may be also asked, what will become of the gold if the assay office is not established on Puget Sound?

There is little doubt that most of it will be sent to England for coinage there and be lost to our circulation. The Canadian Pacific Railroad, it is well known, has the closest possible connection with the Canadian Government. Its rail line crosses the continent, and its steamer lines cross both the Atlantic and the Pacific. It has been a most vigorous advocate of the diversion of the Klondike trade to Canada, because it gets the long transcontinental haul of all freights to British Columbia, the Canadian outfitting point for the Yukon, and it also gets the complete passenger haul. Its desire to get this trade can be seen by its reduction of rail passage from Boston, Mass., to Victoria to $25. Heretofore, since the railroad had been built, Canada has produced so little gold as to make its control a matter of little moment.

Now that it is likely to amount to not less than $10,000,000 a year for years to come, it is an item worth securing by any nation. If Canada, by affording facilities for the purchase of this gold, can both secure the gold and divert the trade, there is little doubt that the Canadian Pacific Railroad will undertake to deliver it by its rail and ocean lines to the London mint at a nominal figure. If it could secure the trade by doing so, it would pay the Canadian Pacific Railroad to haul the gold free of expense to the Canadian banks. An idea of this trade can be formed when it is known that 14,666 persons left Seattle for Alaskan points between January 1 and March 20 of this year, and they spent on an average not less than $200 each in Seattle, or practically $3,000,000, for goods produced in all parts of the United States.

This measure is not local, as it may seem. It is of importance to the manufacturers and workingmen of Illinois, of Massachusetts, of Pennsylvania, and of nearly all the great manufacturing States. For this spring's trade two Seattle houses each took a million pounds of bacon from Chicago. Baking powder by the carload came from New York, and woolens and hardware from Pennsylvania and Connecticut, rubber and leather from Massachusetts, and so all along the line. In the opinion of those competent to judge, this trade is only beginning. Shall Canada do more for the cities of British Columbia than the United States will do for the State of Washington, when so many other States are also interested? As to the location at Seattle I urge the facts I now state:

Her population (1897), 73,000; railroads, Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Canadian Pacific, Seattle and International, Columbia and Puget Sound; water lines, Alaska fleet (March) 90 vessels, Puget Sound "mosquito fleet" 68 daily, 133 total; ocean steam arrivals (1897), 293; general business (1897), $20,000,000; 300 manufactories, employing 4,000 hands; lumber cut, 77,000,000 feet; shingle cut, 402,000,000; coal produced, 472,311 tons; exports (11 months, 1897), $2,811,009; imports, $1,070,664; wheat shipments, 698,160 centals; flour shipments, 118,104 barrels; cotton shipments, 20,000 bales; assessed valuation, at 70 per cent actual value, $30,174,128; city revenue, $560,000; city expense, $500,000; city property, $2,000,000; city and county tax, 24.5 mills; graded streets, 100.75 miles; sewers, 36.17 miles.

City contains 28 square miles, 20 public schools, and State university; fire department, 68 men, 9 engines; bank clearances (eleven months, 1897), $30,906,482; mean temperature, warmest month, 64.7°; coldest month, 40.6°; Federal establishment—United States district court, custom-house, corps of engineers, steamboat inspectors, internal-revenue office, recruiting office, constructing quartermaster, army post, post-office, marine-hospital service, naval pay, dry dock (Port Orchard), and revenue-marine service.

Sir, all these estimates of figures can be added to largely when brought down to this date. And she but typifies the great State of which she is a glorious part. [Applause.]

The Treasury Department has evinced by constant expressions the necessity for us to have that gold. The Government in its present crisis greatly needs it, and aside from that the great demands of the Alaskan output, which undoubtedly this year will be $30,000,000, is enough alone to necessitate this office for our uses and the Government's welfare. I can not add to the reasons given by my friend in any stronger way; and I now yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. JONES of Washington]. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, if it can be said that there are portions of the United States where gold is both produced and used as money, and there are other portions of the United States where gold is neither produced nor used as money, it might be urged with much force that all of the minting of the country ought to be done in that part of the country where gold is both produced and used, rather than in that part of the country where it is neither used nor produced. But in this case we are not asking to establish a mint in the city of Seattle. We are only asking to furnish the miners who come to that city, who come to that portion of the United States, with the same facilities that are afforded to other miners in other mining districts in other portions of the country.

This bill is of vastly greater importance, Mr. Speaker, than merely furnishing facilities that are only right to be furnished to this branch of the great industry of development of our mines and mineral resources. It is a matter of keeping the trade which legitimately belongs to the United States within its borders. As stated by my colleague—and I think the statement will bear a little stronger putting in this case—nearly all the vessels returning from Alaska stop either at Vancouver or Victoria on the British side. When they stop there, the miners aboard these vessels are assiduously informed that there they can exchange their gold for money without delay, cost, or annoyance, whereas if they come to our side of the line, they must be willing to do one of two things, either to take it to the mint at San Francisco and have it exchanged for money, or else they must take the chances of bartering it at the bank.

Nobody knows when he looks at a sack of gold how much it is worth. There is opportunity for very wide margin between the actual amount and the apparent amount of gold; and when the miner is compelled to barter it with a private individual, he never knows whether he is getting the worst of it or not, and for that reason every miner desires to place his product in the hands of the Government. On the other side of the line he can place it there and know that he is getting the full amount for that which he brings down without delay, without cost, and without annoyance.

But further than that, where he gets his money he is going to spend it, or at least a very large part of it. This trade legitimately belongs to us. Nine out of every ten of these men are American citizens, and their ultimate destination upon our side of the line is the city of Seattle, Tacoma, or some other port on Puget Sound. That is where nearly all of them intend to come when they start from Alaska, but many of them are side-tracked on the other side of the line because we have not been furnished the same facilities that they have on the other side of the line nor the same facilities that are furnished other mining districts. But in this case it is a question of a good deal more importance than merely furnishing facilities. It is all of that question and an infinitely more important one added to it—the question whether the Americans shall have this trade or whether we shall surrender it to the British on the other side of the line. [Applause.]

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee made a slight mistake in stating that the committee was unanimously in favor of the bill. If it is the intention of the Department to carry out the policy of paying for the shipping of gold from every part of the country to the mints, this bill ought to pass.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I stated that this was the unanimous report in favor of the bill.

Mr. HILL. That is right.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he was present in the committee when the bill was voted upon?

Mr. HILL. I was not. I do not dispute the gentleman's statement. The House ought to understand this measure. Juneau asks that an assay office be established there; Portland and Seattle ask that an assay office be established there. The House must settle the question whether it is going to take bullion at Juneau and pay the freight on it to San Francisco. I should be in favor of establishing an assay office at Seattle if the mint price was paid there, less the freight to the mint.

The question I raise is this, Whether we are in favor of taking the gold product of the mines at Juneau and the stamp mills in Alaska and bring it to the mints at our own expense. I am opposed to it. I have no doubt Seattle is the best place of the three. The thing I fear is that after the assay office is established at Seattle the calls will be persistent that further assay offices shall be established at Portland and at Juneau. It does not strike me that it is a good business proposition to go into, and I want the House simply to understand the situation.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have the attention of the House for a brief time. If the House understands what this legislation means, and if it meets the judgment of the House, then amen; let it pass. But I do not want the House to pass this bill under a misapprehension.

Now, first, there is no place in the United States where gold bullion seeks a market where private assay offices and assayers can not at a very small charge perform the service and give the value of the bullion; so that the establishment of an assay office at Seattle, at Spokane, at Tacoma, at Juneau on the Yukon, or at Portland or any other point is not necessary to enable the producer or holder of the bullion to ascertain without considerable cost the value of his product. And there is no place in the United States where the holder of the bullion after he has ascertained its value can not get its value at the mint price, less the cost of transportation.

Now, in what I say I want to measure my words, and I say it upon the information and authority of the late Director of the Mint, Mr. Prescott. And what I am about to say everybody must understand to be true if he will stop and think a minute. Now, why should we establish an assay office at Seattle? There is no reason for it save one. I do not take into account one way or the other the $20,000 to begin the plant or the salaries of the assay officers. This measure would make a little office or two or three out there. That is of little consequence except to the persons who would draw the salaries.

Now, why is it that Seattle wants this office? And she does not want it half so much as citizens from my State want it. She wants it because every ounce of gold deposited in a Government assay office at Seattle brings the Philadelphia mint price. Now, how much less is it worth than the Philadelphia mint price? I have here a dispatch from the Treasury Department in response to an inquiry which I sent this morning:

Charges for transportation of gold from Seattle to Philadelphia, $3.06 per thousand.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Why does not the gentleman give the price of transportation to the nearest mint?

Mr. CANNON. I inquired as to the cost of transportation to San Francisco, but the officers could not give it to me. They said they would do so as soon as possible. I have an unofficial statement that it is $2.50.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It can not be that.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Not more than about 25 cents.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. From 23 to 25 cents.

Mr. CANNON. I am making these statements on the best information I have been able to obtain. My friend here [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] says that the cost of transportation to San Francisco is 25 cents a thousand; my friend over there [Mr. LEWIS of Washington] says 25 cents a thousand. I think my friends are mistaken. If the cost were only 25 cents a thousand, then parties would not be half so anxious to get an assay office at Seattle as they are. And I am not referring especially to my friends who represent the locality interested, or either of them, because they are not the most anxious persons to get this office established, except as they desire, of course, to represent their localities.

Now, if there should be established an assay office at Seattle where gold bullion can be deposited at the Philadelphia price, why should there not be one at Portland? Why should there not be one at Tacoma? Why should there not be one at Juneau? Why should there not be one at Spokane? Why should there not be one at every mining town? Why make fish of one and fowl of another?

I hold in my hand a communication—I am not going to give anybody's name—addressed to me:

It is important to our interests, and we think those of the United States, that an assay office be established at Seattle. A large amount of gold dust will come to that point, much of it largely from British possessions. If it is required to go to points farther East or South, or to San Francisco, you lose British shipments entirely.

Then the writer goes on to give an estimate.

Now, it is perfectly natural for parties who write such letters to look at this matter in the light of their own interests. But let me tell you where you ought to establish an assay office, if there is any point in establishing an assay office for the benefit of the miner, and if you want to get British gold. Establish it upon the Yukon, at Circle City. There is where the miner is. Who picks up the gold at the Yukon and transports it down to Seattle? The transportation company. And when the transportation company put it at Seattle, having, in most instances, bought it, it is enabled to unload it at the Philadelphia mint price. How much is that? Three dollars and six cents more than the commercial price at Seattle. It is not the poor miner who is to be benefited.

Oh, but you want to get British gold! If you want to get British gold, put your assay office at Circle City, away up on the Yukon, and you will get all the gold that is produced up there in British territory or American territory. It will cost you about six or seven dollars a thousand to transport it to the mint, but such a measure would relieve the poor miners up there working in the frosts of winter. There is no demand, however, for the establishment of an assay office up there where it would really give some relief.

The truth of the matter is that the law on this subject, enacted in 1879, and now on our statute books, is wrong. It provides that at any United States assay office the holder of the bullion may put down his bullion and Uncle Sam will pay him the Philadelphia or the San Francisco mint price for it. I tried to have that law amended at the last session, or it may have been this session. The combination swept me out. There were too many of these assay offices. Our Populist friends, strange to say, who always want to protect the Treasury, flocked together and to a man helped to "knock me out" on that legislation.

They are the greatest fellows on earth to pretend one thing and, to coin an expression of a constituent of mine, "protend" another. [Laughter.]

Now, what are the circumstances connected with this matter? We have seen what has been the experience of the past, and I hope, taking this proposition singly and alone, that we will not be induced to involve ourselves in similar unnecessary expenditures hereafter. I hope we will build no more institutions of this character. Not one of them.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption just there?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. BLAND. When the gold is deposited at the Government assay office, and is paid for by the Government, it belongs to the Government, does it not?

Mr. CANNON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BLAND. Well, is it not as good a way as the issuing of bonds, in the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois, to secure gold for the Government? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri knows that the question he asks has nothing whatever to do with the proposition which is now pending before the House. I want to say that every dollar expended in this way is, in my judgment, practically a waste of the public money. If you establish this office at the point proposed, there is no reason why one should not be established at Portland, at Tacoma, at Juneau, and all of the mining centers; because if it is a good thing in one place, it is a good thing in all other places; and if it pays the Government in one place, it will pay money in all of the other places just as well.

Now, if you are going to establish such an office at all, in place of establishing it at the point proposed by this bill, why not put it up on the Yukon River? If we have got to do the thing, for God's sake let us go up on the Yukon River and establish our office at Circle City, or somewhere up in that region, where the miner may obtain the advantage, if there is an advantage to be obtained, of the enhanced value of his product.

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Why, certainly.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does the gentleman from Illinois know that the Secretary of the Treasury opposed in the committee, when it was suggested, the establishment of an assay office on the Yukon River?

Mr. CANNON. Why?

Mr. RIDGELY. It was opposed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. I ask you why it was opposed.

Mr. RIDGELY. That is for you to answer. You are suggesting the establishment of this assay office on the Yukon River for the benefit of the miners of that region. Why, let me ask you, did the Secretary oppose such an establishment? There must have been some reason for it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman knows well enough that the miners from that region are not supposed to carry the bullion in their pockets. Whether it costs $6 or $2 for the transportation of the bullion to the mints, somebody gets the benefit of it, whether it be the miner or the transportation company. I am perfectly willing to admit that the transportation companies in my State are interested in this business. All transportation companies are, and there is no reason why they should not be. These companies will take care of themselves, and all they ask of this body is to take care of the production, of the treasure itself. They only ask proper legislation in the direction of protecting the miners, and the transportation companies will find a way to take care of the miners and of themselves as well.

I only ask the House now not to adopt hasty and unnecessary legislation in this direction. I ask you not to adopt improvident legislation that will be of no advantage either to the miner or to the transportation companies.

But, says my friend—or one of my friends representing the State of Washington—the man who mines the ore can sell the bullion at its full value in Victoria. I stop here now to challenge any statement of anybody that at Victoria the mint price at Philadelphia can be paid or will be paid by anybody for the bullion of the miner. It can not be true in the very nature of things.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is about all I desired to say on this question. It seems to me that the matter is too simple to require any further discussion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow an interruption?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the transportation charge for bullion from Seattle to San Francisco is, as some gentlemen assert, only 25 cents on each $1,000, is not that expenditure on the part of the Government the cheapest mode of obtaining gold and placing it in the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CANNON. Why, my friend must know that the figures he gives do not in any respect measure the cost of this service. The best information we have is that the cost is about $2 per thousand.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you mean to say that there is not more than 50 cents on the thousand difference between the charges for the transportation of gold from Seattle to Philadelphia than from Seattle to San Francisco?

Mr. CANNON. Such is my information. If the gentleman has any other information on the subject, of course he can state it in his own time and give it for the benefit of the House.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to read the newspaper clipping which I hand to him, containing the information that the mint price is paid at Victoria by the Canadian Government. I give the gentleman an Associated Press dispatch, so that he may see it. The Canadian Government, of course, will not give us any official information as to anything they do.

Mr. CANNON. Now, this does not say any such thing, and I challenge the statement and make the declaration here, after something of inquiry, that neither the British Government nor the Canadian Government anywhere pays the mint price for gold, and this does not say that it does. Now, I want to yield a moment for a suggestion from my friend from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE].

Mr. TONGUE. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment to this bill at the close of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. TONGUE. Well, after making a statement I will ask unanimous consent to be allowed to offer this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I want simply to say that whatever arguments have been used in favor of establishing an assay office at the city of Seattle are of equal force for the establishment of an assay office at the city of Portland. The output of the mines of Oregon during the last calendar year, from the best information I can get, amounted to three and a half million dollars. The mining interests of Oregon are only just being developed.

While that is an old State, there are a great number of mines of which people knew nothing, which they have just begun to discover, and which they are developing with remarkable rapidity. I have assurances from men who have an opportunity of knowing, and who are reliable, that the output of the gold and silver mines of the State of Oregon for the coming calendar year will equal $7,000,000. If this is true, Oregon is going to be one of the greatest mining States of the Union, one of the most productive. There is no assay office in Oregon. There is none near Oregon. The city of Portland is situated upon the northern boundary, within 15 miles of the State of Washington and close to the Columbia River.

The mining sections of that State and of Washington are connected with Portland by a system of railroads. An assay office there will be of infinite benefit to the citizens of that State, as well as of the adjoining States. The mining interests of Oregon are sufficiently important to authorize this expenditure of money for the establishment of an assay office. The amendment I propose asks no appropriation for a building. The Government is about to construct a building, and it would require only a small outlay of money for the expense of running the office. The cost of sending ore to San Francisco will be but a very small item, will cost the Government but a very small amount of money.

I think the United States ought to encourage the mining interests of Oregon, at least to that extent. I hope there will be no opposition to this amendment. If the one office is established, certainly the other ought to be. If an assay office should be established at Seattle, there should be one established at Portland. I trust the amendment will not meet with any objection. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is not in order to offer an amendment when a motion is made to suspend the rules. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be acted upon. I do not know whether that is in order.

The SPEAKER. It is in order only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. CANNON. Objection is made. Now, I am glad my friend from Oregon [Mr. TONGUE] has said what he has. It shows just how this thing is. It is a proposition, if they can get an assay office established, to pay substantially $3 a thousand more than gold bullion is worth at Seattle. Portland can not do it because, as she has no assay office, she has got to pay the transportation herself. Now, there is the whole thing in a nut shell—favoritism, improper legislation, unwise legislation! There are enough assay offices already established; so that when I sought to have the law repealed some months back they flocked together and knocked me out. Now, I want this House to flock together unanimously enough so that the combination will not be made any stronger than it is.

Mr. TONGUE. I voted with you the other time.

Mr. CANNON. I will now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], and then I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I think there should be no misunderstanding about this. We are not going to get more gold in this country by having this assay office established at Seattle. It is a business proposition to bring trade and outfitting of outgoing and returning miners to Seattle. Now, that is a laudable ambition for the city of Seattle; but there is no mint in Canada, and that gold must come to us. If we leave the law as it is, it will go to San Francisco or the other American mints. I know of no reason why an assay office should not be established at Portland as well as at Seattle, for the product of that State is larger than that of Washington, if you confine it to the home product of the respective States.

If you are looking for Alaska gold, you will get that anyway. This is a question whether you will benefit the trade of Seattle at the expense of the other cities on that coast. That is all there is to it. It is not a question whether you are going to get more or less gold, and the members of the House ought to vote understandingly on that proposition, whether the United States Government can afford to pay $20,000 to build an assay office at Seattle and maintain it for the benefit of Seattle, or whether it can afford to do the same thing for the benefit of the commercial interests of Portland. You will neither get more nor less gold by the transaction.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if I had known that my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] would present the views which he has submitted, I should not have asked recognition. But I want to say to this House that you will only get a more or less proportion of gold mined in this country to remain here, whether you have a mint or assay office. Gold will go where there is a commercial demand for it; and you can neither get it to the place where there is not a commercial demand for it nor keep it when it goes without a commercial demand. It is impossible, and can not be done.

This country has not commercial, economic, or monetary demand for half the visible gold we now have. The fact is, we have two or three times more gold than we have an economic, commercial, or monetary demand for; and I am opposed to this whole thing. The people have equal use for the gold and for silver; they should be treated alike. I am opposed to taxing the people in the interest of either metal, and that is exactly what this bill proposes. It is to add just so much to the profit of mining gold; and all the effect it will have will be to supplement the profits of mining by the percentages that it saves to the miners, and also by helping the trade of Seattle, in which this gold is sought to be assayed, and that will be very small indeed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I would like one minute more.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mexico coins more silver per capita every year than there is in circulation per capita in Mexico, and so it has been for thirty years. Coining silver in Mexico does not add by the smallest fraction to the silver in circulation in Mexico. Every country, whether it be a gold measure of value country or not, will have just that much gold, and no more, that its trade demands if its laws are framed on true economics.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Your opposition is on the general law on the question?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I am opposed to all of them. I am opposed to assaying anywhere except at the mint. If I had my way I would make coinage of gold at the expense of the men who present the gold. There is no reason why owners of gold should be favored over owners of silver. [Applause.]

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, as to the general theories of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I propose to have no discussion. I simply say that for one I am in favor of attracting into the United States of America all the gold that can legitimately be obtained. I am in favor of doing it by giving to the producers of gold in the extreme Northwest all the facilities that we give to North Carolina, that we give to Idaho and Montana, and all other sections, which have indicated the policy of this Government to be to encourage the production of gold. That would be a reason why we should put this assay office at Seattle, and not at Portland and not at Juneau and not at Circle City.

I propose to say simply, as to Oregon, that it has a large production, but it has an assay office on its eastern border almost, at Boise City; that provision is made to accommodate the people of Oregon there, and that western Oregon is not very far from the mint at San Francisco.

Mr. TONGUE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I have not time. I propose also to say that, so far as the State of Washington is concerned, according to the estimates of the Director of the Mint, it has as large production of gold for the present year in proportion as the State of Oregon.

Mr. TONGUE. I would ask the gentleman how much that is?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. A careful investigation made by the committee and made by the Secretary of the Treasury demonstrates that it is impracticable to have an assay office at Juneau even, or at Circle City. The purpose of establishing it at Seattle is to accommodate all that production which comes from the Klondike and from the coast regions, the product of which is growing very large from year to year. In reply to the suggestion as to whether this gold would go to Victoria or Seattle, I will state that the British Government in the Province of British Columbia has an official assay office in the city of Victoria, and that we have not any corresponding accommodation at the next nearest point in the United States. Gentlemen say that it is proposed to favor the trade of Seattle.

I am in favor, Mr. Speaker, by any legitimate means, of favoring the trade of any American city in preference to the trade of a Canadian city. [Applause.] I propose to give to the city of Seattle the encouragement to its trade which the British Government gives to the city of Victoria in its trade, and I believe every patriotic American citizen will join in that purpose.

As to the ideas of economy advanced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] upon the general proposition, I am not going to enter into a discussion with him. If it is proposed that every assay office, the one located at Deadwood, the one located at Boise City, the one located at St. Louis, shall pay the expenses of transportation from them to the mint, I will say nothing; but I say there is no more propriety in visiting upon the man who has brought his gold from the far regions of Alaska to Seattle the additional expense of taking it to the mint than there would be to impose it on other regions, and this House at this session has decided that that was not proper public policy.

Now, as to the cost of transportation, the gentleman rolls over his tongue the phrase "mint value at Philadelphia." I want to know if gold bullion has any different mint value at Philadelphia than it has at San Francisco. I want to know if there is any varying value, so far as the locality is concerned, in the value of gold. I take it not. The cost of transportation from the far Northwest to Philadelphia may be what the gentleman says. The cost of transportation from Seattle to the near mint at San Francisco, which does a very large portion of the gold minting of this Union, is one-quarter of 1 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. My friend can not afford to make that statement unless he has accurate information or proof. My reliable unofficial information is that it is over $2 a thousand.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Can the gentleman give us any better information than his unofficial information? My reliable unofficial information, which is reiterated by other men on the floor, is that it is one-quarter of 1 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. I will give my friend what information I have.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Let me finish my statement. There is no possibility of official information from Seattle to San Francisco until you establish your assay office at Seattle. The information I have given comes to me from the express charges by express companies that do the transportation from Seattle to San Francisco, and that is that it is one-quarter of 1 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is $2.50 a thousand; that is a little more than I think it is.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I did not go into the amount per thousand, but that is the information, that it is one-quarter of 1 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. That is a little high; it is a little less than $2.50 a thousand.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON) there were—ayes 128, noes 17.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the rules be suspended and that the following bill pass: H. R. 10049, to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to open their reservation for settlement.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10049) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to open their reservation for settlement.

Whereas David H. Jerome, Alfred M. Wilson, and Warren G. Sayre, duly appointed commissioners on the part of the United States, did, on the 6th day of October, 1892, conclude an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, formerly a part of the Indian Territory, which said agreement is in the words and figures as follows:

"Articles of agreement made and entered into at Fort Sill, in the Indian Territory, on the 21st day of October, 1892, by and between David H. Jerome, Alfred M. Wilson, and Warren G. Sayre, commissioners on the part of the United States, and the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory.

"ARTICLE I.

"Subject to the allotment of land, in severalty to the individual members of the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, as hereinafter provided for, and subject to the conditions hereinafter imposed, and for the considerations hereinafter mentioned, the said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache Indians hereby cede, convey, transfer, relinquish, and surrender, forever and absolutely, without any reservation whatever, express or implied, all their claim, title, and interest, of any kind and character, in and to the lands embraced in the following-described tract of country in the Indian Territory to wit: Commencing at a point where the Washita River crosses the ninety-eighth meridian west from Greenwich; thence up the Washita River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to a point 30 miles, by river, west of Fort Cobb, as now established; thence due west to the north fork of Red River, provided said line strikes said river east of the one-hundredth meridian of west longitude, if not, then only to said meridian line, and thence due south, on said meridian line, to the said north fork of Red River; thence down said north fork, in the middle of the main channel thereof, from the point where it may be first intersected by the lines above described, to the main Red River; thence down said Red River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to its intersection with the ninety-eighth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich; thence north, on said meridian line, to the place of beginning.

"ARTICLE II.

"Out of the lands ceded, conveyed, transferred, relinquished, and surrendered by Article I hereof, and in part consideration for the cession thereof, it is agreed by the United States that each member of said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians over the age of 18 years shall have the right to select for himself or herself 160 acres of land to be held and owned in severalty, to conform to the legal surveys in boundary; and that the father, or, if he be dead, the mother, if members of either of said tribes of Indians, shall have the right to select a like amount of land for each of his or her children under the age of 18 years; and that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or some one by him appointed for the purpose, shall select a like amount of land for each orphan child belonging to either of said tribes under the age of 18 years.

"ARTICLE III.

"It is further agreed that the land in said reservation shall be classed as grain-growing and grazing land; and in making selection of lands to be allotted in severalty as aforesaid, each and every Indian herein provided for shall be required to take at least one-half in area of his or her allotments of grazing land. It is hereby further expressly agreed that no person shall have the right to make his or her selection of land in any part of said reservation that is now used or occupied for military, agency, school, school-farm, religious, or other public uses, or in sections 16 and 36 in each Congressional township, except in cases where any Comanche, Kiowa, or Apache Indian has heretofore made improvements upon and now uses and occupies a part of said sections 16 and 36, such Indian may make his or her selection within the boundaries so prescribed so as to include his or her improvements. It is further agreed that wherever in said reservation any Indian entitled to take lands in severalty hereunder has made improvements, and now uses and occupies the land embracing such improvements, such Indian shall have the undisputed right to make his or her selection within the area above provided for allotments, so as to include his or her said improvements.

"It is further agreed that said sections 16 and 36 in each Congressional township in said reservation shall not become subject to homestead entry, but shall be held by the United States and finally sold for public-school purposes. It is hereby further agreed that wherever in said reservation any religious society or other organization is now occupying any portion of said reservation for religious or educational work among the Indians, the land so occupied may be allotted and confirmed to such society or organization, not, however, to exceed 160 acres of land to any one society or organization, so long as the same shall be so occupied and used; and such land shall not be subject to homestead entry.

"ARTICLE IV.

"All allotments hereunder shall be selected within twelve months from the ratification of this agreement by the Congress of the United States: Provided, The Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may extend the time for making such selection; and should any Indian entitled to allotments hereunder fail or refuse to make his or her selection of land in that time, then the allotting agent in charge of the work of making such allotments shall within the next thirty days after said time make allotments to such Indians, which shall have the same force and effect as if the selection were made by the Indian.

"ARTICLE V.

"When said allotments of land shall have been selected and taken as aforesaid, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the titles thereto shall be held in trust for the allottees, respectively, for the period of twenty-five years, in the time and manner and to the extent provided for in the act of Congress entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of land in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes,' approved February 8, 1887, and an act amendatory thereof, approved February 28, 1891.

"And at the expiration of the said period of twenty-five years the title thereto shall be conveyed in fee simple to the allottees or their heirs, free from all incumbrances.

"ARTICLE VI.

"As a further and only additional consideration for the cession of territory and relinquishment of title, claim, and interest in and to lands as aforesaid the United States agrees to pay to the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory the sum of $2,000,000, in manner as follows:

"As fast as the lands opened for settlement under this act are sold, the money received from such sales shall be covered into the Treasury and placed to the credit of the said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians: Provided, That no part of said money shall be paid to said Indians until the question of title to the said lands is fully settled between said tribes and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes by a suit in the Court of Claims, as hereinafter provided, and said court shall by its decree direct the payment of said $2,000,000 to the tribes entitled to the same, as herein provided.

"Nothing herein contained shall be held to affect in any way any annuities due said Indians under existing laws, agreements or treaties.

"ARTICLE VIII.

"It is further agreed that wherever in said reservation any member of any of the tribes of said Indians has, in pursuance of any laws or under any rules or regulations of the Interior Department, taken an allotment, such allotment, at the option of the allottee, shall be confirmed and governed by all the conditions attached to allotments taken under this agreement.

"ARTICLE IX.

"It is further agreed that any and all leases made in pursuance of the laws of the United States of any part of said reservation which may be in force at the time of the ratification by Congress of this agreement shall remain in force the same as if this agreement had not been made.

"ARTICLE X.

"It is further agreed that the following-named persons, not members by blood of either of said tribes, but who have married into one of the tribes, to wit, Mabel R. Given, Thomas F. Woodward, William Wyatt, Kiowa Dutch, John Nestill, James N. Jones, Christian Ke oh-tah, Edward L. Clark, George Conover, William Deitrick, Ben Roach, Lewis Bentz, Abilene, James Gardloupe, John Sanchez, the wife of Boone Chandler, whose given name is unknown, Emmit COX, and Horace P. Jones, shall each be entitled to all the benefits of land and money conferred by this agreement, the same as if members by blood of one of said tribes; and that Emsy S. Smith, David Grantham, Zonee Adams, John T. Hill, J. J. Methuin, H. L. Scott, and George D. Day, friends of said Indians who have rendered to said Indians valuable services, shall each be entitled to all the benefits in land only conferred under this agreement, the same as if members of said tribes.

"ARTICLE XI.

"This agreement shall be effective only when ratified by the Congress of the United States:"

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed as herein amended.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause the allotments of said lands, provided for in said treaty among said Indians, to be made by an Indian inspector or by the agent of said Indians.

SEC. 3. That all allotments of said land shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to said Indians within one year from the passage of this act, subject to the exceptions contained in article 4 of said treaty.

SEC. 4. That the lands acquired by this agreement shall within twelve months after the completion of allotments be opened to settlement by proclamation of the President, and be disposed of under the general provisions of the act of Congress approved May 2, 1890, entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in Indian Territory, and for other purposes," relating to the disposal of the public lands in that Territory, and also those general provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1892, and for other purposes," relating to the disposal of public lands in said Territory.

SEC. 5. That the payment for said lands shall be made to the Indian tribes entitled to receive the same under the provisions of this act as fast as the lands opened for settlement under this act are sold and payment received for the same. The money received from such sale shall be covered into the Treasury and placed to the credit of the said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians: Provided, That no part of said money shall be paid to said Indians until the question of title to said lands is fully settled between said tribes and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes by a suit in the Court of Claims as hereinafter provided for. And said court shall direct the payment thereof, as herein provided, to the tribes that they may find entitled thereto.

SEC. 6. That none of the money or interest thereon which is, by the terms of the said agreement, to be paid to said Indians shall be applied to the payment of any judgment that has been or may hereafter be rendered under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations."

SEC. 7. That should any of said lands allotted to said Indians, or opened to settlement under this act, contain valuable mineral deposits, such mineral deposits shall be open to location and entry, under the existing mining laws of the United States, upon the passage of this act, and the mineral laws of the United States are hereby extended over said lands. Whatever sums may be received for the sale of such mineral lands shall be placed to the credit of the tribes of Indians entitled thereto, as provided herein for nonmineral lands.

SEC. 8. That as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty, as soon as the same are abandoned by said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim of the Chickasaws and the Choctaws, and to render judgment thereon, it being the intention of this act to allow said Court of Claims jurisdiction, so that the rights, legal and equitable, of the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, in the premises, shall be fully considered and determined, and to try and determine all questions that may arise on behalf of either party in the hearing of said claim; and the Attorney-General is hereby directed to appear in behalf of the Government of the United States; and either of the parties to said action shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided, That such appeal shall be taken within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment objected to, and that the said courts shall give such causes precedence: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be accepted or construed as a confession that the United States admit that the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations have any claim to or interest in said lands or any part thereof.

SEC. 9. That said action shall be presented by a single petition making the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim title to said land; and said petition may be verified by the authorized delegates, agents, or attorneys of said Indians upon their information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statement or verification shall be necessary: Provided, That if said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations do not bring their action within ninety days from the approval of this act, or should they dismiss said suit, the same shall not be reinstated, and their claim shall be forever barred.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask my friend, if he will allow me—and I hope unanimous consent will be given that this shall not be considered as debate—if he will not modify his motion so as to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I am perfectly willing if the gentleman desires.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me it is so important a bill that there ought to be a little leeway given for inquiry and amendment.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman can so modify his motion that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the bill will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The first reading of the bill has taken place, and the second reading will now be for amendment. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, before the bill is read for amendment, I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that he give the House an explanation of the general scope and aim of the bill, that we may better understand it.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to ratify an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, which was entered into in 1892. The bill, or a similar one, was favorably reported in the Fifty-fourth Congress from the Committee on Indian Affairs. At this session of Congress the committee unanimously agreed that it should be attached to the Indian appropriation bill, and since that time have directed that this bill be reported.

There are about 2,819 Indians on the reservation, and they occupy 2,900,000 acres of land. There are 477 families occupying their own dwellings, and it is claimed that within one year they will all be provided with homes. Under the agreement it will take about 450,000 acres of land for their allotment. The balance, 2,500,000 acres, is to be opened to settlement under the law opening the Territory of Oklahoma, which provides that the lands shall not be sold at a price less than that agreed to be paid to the Indians, and provides also that it shall not be sold for less than $1.25 an acre.

In the agreement it was provided that $2,000,000 should be paid for the surplus land; but your committee thought it best not to bind the Government to pay for the land at this time, but to authorize the selling of the land by the Government for the benefit of the Indians. As fast as the money is received from the sale it is to be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians.

There is another question which came up in connection with this matter, and that is the claim of the Chickasaws and Choctaws. This land is located in what is known as the leased district. Your committee was of the opinion that these two tribes had no claim against this land or interest in it; but in order to protect the interests of the Government it is provided that the money shall be put into the Treasury and shall not be paid to either of the tribes until the question of the title is settled by the Court of Claims. The bill directs that the suit shall be brought by the Chickasaws and Choctaws within a certain time; that the court shall find which of the tribes is entitled to the money, and, when judgment is rendered, that then the money received from the sale of the land shall be paid to the tribes that the court may hold are entitled to it.

I think there is nothing in the claim of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, as they leased, by their treaty of 1855, to the United States all that portion of their common territory west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude for the permanent settlement of certain tribes of friendly Indians thereon. For this they were paid $800,000.

By the treaty of 1866, eleven years after they had leased this large tract of land to the Government, the Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, ceded to the United States the territory west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude, known as the leased district, which includes the lands covered by this agreement, and, in my judgment, when they ceded the lands for a valuable consideration eleven years after they had leased them they can not now claim that they only intended to make a new lease. The Government already had a permanent lease for which they had paid $800,000, and it is plain to me that the $300,000 paid eleven years later was to extinguish the title of the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

All the interests of the Government, we believe, are protected in this matter. There is one section of the bill which provides that none of the money derived from the sale of these lands shall be held responsible for claims for damages against these tribes. That section was put in the bill because it was a part of the agreement with the Indians.

As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who has been on the committee for five years, I want to say there has not been within that time more than one claim filed against the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians; and my recollection is that there has not been a single claim for damages against those Indians, though there may possibly have been one claim.

Mr. CANNON. I have been looking for the clause in the agreement to which the gentleman just referred, and I have not been able to find it. Is he quite sure it is in the agreement?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I may be mistaken, but my recollection is that it is there. I have no objection to striking out section 6, which provides for this matter.

Mr. CANNON. I think that if it should be found on examination that this agreement exempts this sum of money from the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims in the Indian depredation cases, the agreement ought to be amended, besides striking out the provision referred to in this proposed legislation. My friend is aware of the legislation of 1891, sending to the Court of Claims what were known as the Indian depredation claims, amounting to forty or fifty million dollars. I have no doubt that a very small amount of it pertains to these tribes; but if their liability should be established by the court after full litigation, then the money must come from their fund or it must come from the Treasury of the United States. Hence I have suggested to my friend that section 6 be stricken out, and he has expressed a willingness that it should be done. I trust we shall carefully examine the agreement, so as to see whether this legislation ratifies that agreement, and if so, whether the language should not be modified.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I am perfectly willing that such a modification should be made. If it is not in the agreement, there was some representation to the committee to the effect that there was a promise made to the Indians or some understanding that the money derived from the sale of the lands should not be used in the payment of claims against the tribes.

Mr. MADDOX rose.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

Mr. MADDOX. If the court should find that the reversionary interest in this property is in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, how will it be possible for the United States to give title to the lands?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The gentleman may remember that we had this matter up in our committee before.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes; several times.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. The gentleman reported a bill of this kind in the Fifty-fourth Congress, with the same provisions in regard to the claim mentioned, and we had the same claim before us; and the gentleman will remember that I took the ground that the Chickasaw and Choctaws had no valid claim against the lands because they had ceded them to the Government in 1866. The committee thought the provisions in the bill were sufficient, as all the Chickasaws and Choctaws claimed in the Fifty-first or Fifty-second Congress was that they were entitled either to the land or to $1.25 an acre for it. Now, under this bill no land can be sold for less than $1.25 an acre, which will give them all they ask, all they have claimed; and if the land is not sold, the United States will hold it in trust for them, and it will be subject to another treaty. I think this conclusion was arrived at when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] was upon the committee.

Mr. MADDOX. When the gentleman gets through I want to say a few words for the purpose of informing the House what it is doing.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON. Before the gentleman does that will he allow me a single suggestion? Let me read a provision of the bill on page 10:

> SEC. 8. That, as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty, as soon as the same are abandoned by said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim of the Chickasaws and the Choctaws, and to render judgment thereon.

Now, it seems to me that in the last line of this paragraph the word "judgment" should be struck out and "decree" substituted, and after the word "thereon" there should be added the words "settling the rights of the Chickasaws and Choctaws and of the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians."

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I have no objection to such an amendment. I wish to say to the gentleman from Georgia that there is already a suit pending which will probably be decided within a very few months, or possibly within the next month. We provide in this bill that the allotments shall be made within a year after the treaty is ratified, so that if in the meantime the decision is such as is expected by the gentleman from Georgia the matter can be arranged in that way. And of course the gentleman knows that a suit is now pending against the Wichita tribe of Indians for this amount.

Mr. MADDOX. That is true——

Mr. CANNON. And the courts will have to determine the matter.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not know what the court will determine, but I wish to call the attention of the House to a fact in connection with this matter, and I think it is worthy of consideration. In the Fiftieth or Fifty-first Congress the reservations of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians were opened for allotment, as now proposed by the pending bill. They were opened up to settlement, and the older members of this body will remember that the gentleman from Arkansas, who was then a member of this body, Mr. Peel, came in and asked the House to appropriate $2,900,000 in a bill for the Choctaws and Chickasaws, who it was claimed had a reversionary or legal interest in the lands proposed to be allotted.

When these Indians relinquished their title, the property reverted to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and it was necessary that there should be some arrangement made with them to secure the Government title. That bill was passed and went to the President, and President Harrison vetoed the bill as it passed this body, and the Secretary of the Interior, in the opinion accompanying it, said he did not think that these Indians had any interest whatever in the property, but the House and the Senate, on a full consideration of the matter, came to a different conclusion and thought that they had an interest, and so determined, and they agreed to pay the sum of $2,900,000.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption just there?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. If it does not interrupt my friend, I have an apt recollection of that transaction——

Mr. MADDOX. I remember the gentleman from Illinois was aiding me in my efforts to prevent the enactment of the legislation proposed.

Mr. CANNON. It was forced, I will state to the House, in the closing hours of the Fifty-first Congress on an appropriation bill by a Senate amendment, against the protest of the Committee on Appropriations, which I had the honor to represent at that time. After as exhaustive and as bitter a fight as the committee I represented has ever made, this matter was brought to the attention of the House for its final action.

The matter was determined at an early hour in the morning, some time near the hour, as the poet said, when "graveyards are supposed to yawn and give up their dead"—by an almost solid minority and a yielding majority that measure passed this body; and without undertaking to criticise anybody, or any party, or any member of this body, in my judgment the enactment was as iniquitous a provision of legislation as has ever passed the House of Representatives since I have had the honor to be a member of this body.

Mr. MADDOX. I think perhaps the gentleman from Illinois is entirely correct. I have quite a distinct recollection myself. I do not know, of course, who was responsible for it. I only know that the fact was accomplished. It is also a fact that if it was possible to pass such an appropriation at that time, which it is admitted was an improper measure, it might be done again. You have now a precedent for the action, and that precedent will be used to carry such a condition of things to a still further point.

Now, I have no possible interest in this matter one way or the other. I have served for about four years on the Committee on Indian Affairs, and this question has been presented constantly, continuously, and steadily all of that time. My idea has been to settle, in the first instance, the title of this property, and then consider the other conditions which necessarily follow.

Mr. CALLAHAN. May I interrupt the gentleman from Georgia for a few moments?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Do you undertake to say that the opening of this land for settlement affects in the slightest degree the title of the property?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. CALLAHAN. How could that be possible?

Mr. MADDOX. Why, if I had the reversionary interest to the property, I would like to know who can sell it without my consent? It seems to me that that is a plain legal proposition that can hardly admit of any question.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. If I recollect aright, you were upon the subcommittee that investigated this claim?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I believe the gentleman will remember that I took the position that the Choctaws and Chickasaws had no claim, in my judgment?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes; I think so.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. And does not the gentleman remember that we virtually agreed to this proposition, submitting the matter to the court, and that the gentleman himself reported that bill?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes; we submitted it to the court, and, as I understand, that case is now pending.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. In this case we follow that very provision that was agreed upon by the gentleman from Georgia and myself, except that we protect the Government more than we did in that amendment.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, it is a fact that there is a case pending in which this title is going to be determined as to who this land belongs to. If it belongs to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, then we must treat with them.

Mr. LACEY. Let me ask the gentleman if any possible danger can occur when all the parties to that suit agree that the land shall be thrown open to settlement and the litigation finished up to determine who shall receive the proceeds? What harm can occur to the Government if it treats with all the parties?

Mr. MADDOX. Do I understand that the Choctaws and Chickasaws agree to this?

Mr. LACEY. They are fully protected.

Mr. MADDOX. If my friend will put in an amendment to this effect, that would settle the whole question, if they are to be made parties to the suit.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. They are parties to the suit. They must bring the suit within a certain time, or they are forever barred.

Mr. CALLAHAN. And the bill provides that their funds are protected until the question is settled.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The provision of the bill is this:

Provided, That no part of said money shall be paid to said Indians until the question of title to said lands is fully settled between said tribes and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes by a suit in the Court of Claims as hereinafter provided for. And said court shall direct the payment thereof to the tribes that they may find entitled thereto.

I think that fully covers that.

Mr. MADDOX. The difficulty about that section is that we can not legislate the title out of these people, if it is in them, without their consent. That is the difficulty which presents itself under this section. Every lawyer here will see that readily. If the courts decide that this property, or the reversionary interest, belongs to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, what right has the Government to sell that land to anybody without their consent? If I have a reversionary interest in property, and it vests in me after certain conditions have been performed, who can appropriate my land and sell it without my consent? Perhaps these Choctaws and Chickasaws will say, "We could sell this land for vastly more money than you have received for it. We will not accept the bargain. We will not be bound by it."

Is there any court in this country which will hold those people to it unless they agree to it? That is a legal proposition which, as I have said, presents itself to every lawyer in the House. You can not do that sort of a thing. If the title is in them, you can not legislate it out without their consent.

I have no interest in this matter whatever, but I served on this committee for four years. I have watched this proposition. I have kept up with it. I find that the Government was mulcted out of $2,900,000 in the opening of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Reservation, and I have attempted up to this time to protect the people from another such invasion on the Treasury. Now, having called the attention of the House to this question, I have no more to say.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to say that the interests of the Government are even better protected than they were in the bill which he and I agreed upon in the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. MADDOX. I remember we agreed about the suit, and that suit is now pending.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. And this is exactly the same kind of a provision under which that suit was brought.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to say to the House that I do not see any reason for hurry about this business, because this very identical question is now pending in the courts. Why not postpone this until that question is determined and settled as to who owns the title to this property? Then we shall know whom to deal with. That will settle it.

Mr. GAINES. That suit has been pending for several years, dragging along in the courts, has it not?

Mr. MADDOX. No; it has not been so long as that. It was only in the Fifty-fourth Congress that we authorized it.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It was submitted in January.

Mr. MADDOX. I know it has not been a great while. It is getting along as well as could be expected. Now, the thing which suggests itself to my mind is that the best thing to do with this case is to postpone it until the next session and see what the decision of the court is, and then proceed intelligently.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think we should postpone this bill, because the country surrounding this reservation demands that it be opened up for settlement. The bill protects the Indians in every direction, because the money arising from the sale of the reservation is to be held in the United States Treasury, subject to the disposition to be made of the funds by the Court of Claims. The plain language of the bill is that the decree shall state to what tribe of Indians this money shall be paid.

There is what is known as the leased district, west of the ninety-eighth meridian, which was set apart to these wild tribes, several tribes having separate reservations. All the reservations except this one have already been opened up.

Now, we provide ample protection here for any suit or any claim arising between the Chickasaws and Choctaws and the Comanches, Apaches, and Kiowas. The land is to be sold at $1.25 an acre. The purchaser pays the amount to the United States, and the money remains in the Treasury pending any suit that the Chickasaws and Choctaws may bring to determine the title of the land. If it is determined that the Chickasaws and Choctaws have the title, then the court will decree it to them; and if it is determined in favor of the Comanches, Apaches, and Kiowas, the court will decree it to them. The consequence is that, both being before the court, they can be amply protected.

Now, on the question as to whether the Government has the right to open that country. We have passed upon this question, and it is not necessary to raise it here. A few days ago the House passed a bill opening up the entire Indian reservation of the Five Civilized Tribes. It is true the United States Government gave them patents to that land, and it was stated in the patents they should have it perpetually; but the Government reserved the right to control these Indians, and it has taken possession of the lands just the same as it has the right to take possession of this land west of the ninety-eighth meridian. The Government, at the time that this vast scope of country was settled by these Indians there, did not settle any of the wild tribes on it, but only the Five Civilized Tribes. But those Five Civilized Tribes did not at the time have a fee-simple title, and it has not been so regarded by the courts of the country.

If we have the right to allot the lands to the Five Civilized Tribes, we certainly have the same right to allot these lands to the wild tribes of Indians; and the trouble in this question is simply this—as to whether or not when the Government made a treaty a great many years ago with the Five Tribes to settle west of the ninety-eighth meridian it parted with that title, or whether it reserved its rights. That raises a legal question as to the construction of that treaty with the United States. The tribes were claiming it; the courts must settle it. There are no Indian courts; and what court must settle it? The Comanches and Kiowas never had a court of any kind. The consequence is this, being a legal question, it must go to the courts of the United States, because there is no other place to settle a legal question.

Then does it make any difference whether you try the title of the land or the money arising from the sale of the land? There is no difference. It is the same question exactly. Now, as to the policy of opening these lands up. There is no opposition, as I understand, to that. I represent a district adjoining this territory on the south. The reputable people in Kansas, in Oklahoma, in Texas demand that the country shall be opened up, because it has become the rendezvous of train robbers, murderers, thieves, and every other bad character of people that run from the different States of the Union and congregate there. It is for the benefit of the entire southwestern country that these bands centering on the reservation should be broken up, and in order to do that we must spend a large amount of money.

The governor of the Territory of Oklahoma in 1895 and 1896, Governor Renfrew, and the present governor this year have declared in messages directed to the President of the United States and to Congress in favor of opening all this reservation on the ground that it would break up these bands of outlaws congregated in that country. I think the bill ought to pass. The Indians in 1892 adopted this treaty on their part, the Government of the United States on their part being represented by three commissioners. The treaty was made and signed by the Government, making a treaty with the Indians and they signed it, and all we ask to-day is that the treaty be ratified by Congress.

Under that treaty, made by the Comanches, Kiowas and Apaches, and the Choctaws, and the Chickasaws, we provide in this bill that the Court of Claims may determine the question between those Indians. We must refer it to a court somewhere and some time, and it makes no difference whether you divide the money or the lands. We leave the money in the hands of the United States Treasury, to be distributed by the courts; and no one will be injured, but all the country will be benefited.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, a portion of this land is claimed by certain Indian tribes, or all of it, in fact. They have entered into a written contract authorizing the sale of the land. That, of course, binds them; but the contract is subject to approval by Congress. The proposition approves it in this bill with amendment. Now, there are other tribes, not parties to that contract, that claim an interest in the land, and the question suggested is whether Congress has the power to convey or to sell the interest of the Indians not parties to this contract. The Indians are the wards of the nation. If they were not the wards of the nation, being wards, the courts would have to decree and to give authority for the conveyance of the land.

But where the guardianship is held by the Government, supreme in power, giving to Congress the right to exercise and control these things, the guardian must be a legislative capacity, and when Congress declares the legislative title shall be disposed of, that binds all parties in the contract as well as those who are not bound by the contract. This bill is brought in, and we are modifying the contract. It is modified. It gives the Congress of the United States, as the guardian over each and every one of these tribes, accountable to nobody except the tribes, bound to the tribes only in an honorable way to preserve justice and right in its dealings with the tribes, the power to adjust this matter.

We have provided in this bill that the land shall be disposed of at once, the proceeds turned over to the court, so that if there is a conflict between the tribes, the conflict as to the land shall cease, and it shall be settled as to the funds which will be the proceeds of the sale of the land. That is the theory upon which the jurisdiction of the claims of the tribes not a party to the treaty is based.

Mr. CANNON. Has my friend read sections 8 and 9 of this bill?

Mr. LACEY. I have examined them, and it was deemed by the committee a sufficient protection as to those tribes or parties. Whatever rights might be claimed by the Chickasaws and Choctaws, it was thought they had no rights, but if they did, the right in the land could be transferred to the right in the proceeds.

Mr. CANNON. If we are legislating upon his theory—I must confess I have not enough inclination to combat his theory, and have no desire to do it—it seems to me that sections 8 and 9 ought to be recast.

Mr. LACEY. I am not sure that apt words have been used all the way through, and the bill is now being considered by sections so that it may be amended. I should be glad to hear my friend's suggestion as to what amendments ought to be made.

Mr. CANNON. Section 9 seems to provide that if the tribe of Indians do not bring an action within ninety days from the approval of this act their claim shall be forever barred. Now, I do not know, but it seems to me that is treating them as wards in one minute and as litigants in another. It seems to me sections 8 and 9 should be so recast, reciting the facts, that one of these tribes, either the Choctaws or the Chickasaws, claim an interest in this land, and in a certain event that the matter should be submitted as to the rights of the respective tribes to the Court of Claims, with such right to interplead as may be necessary; and upon full hearing a decree should be made, and after right of appeal has expired the money should be distributed. My friend is a much better lawyer than I am, and I only want to draw his attention to these two sections, that he may give them such consideration as is proper.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, we have the Kiowas, the Comanches, and the Apache Indians treating with the Government as an interested party on the one hand, and on the other hand the Territory of Oklahoma. These two parties are to be benefited by the conclusion of this agreement. The Indians have entered into and made a treaty, and the Government now comes forward to complete the treaty on its part, to confirm the agreement, and out of this will grow a remarkable blessing to the Territory of Oklahoma and to the Indians themselves. Unquestionably so. We will stimulate and aid the Indians and benefit them, and the opening up of these lands will benefit the Territory of Oklahoma and civilization in general.

Now comes in the other two tribes and present a claim to a part of these lands, a claim that has been before the Government and has been pressed, as I am advised, for a number of years, and investigation after investigation has been had, and it is unquestionably true that all the testimony they will ever be likely to produce has been before the committee, which has read the testimony and has decided that those tribes have no right, equitable or otherwise, in this land whatever.

Now, the question is, Shall we as a Congress, as a body to whom this matter is referred—shall we defer it to the disadvantage of Oklahoma and to the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, for what is supposed to be, on the part of some at least, a mere claim, and a claim that has no actual foundation? That is a question that will be settled by this body this afternoon.

Now, I insist that, taking this view of the facts, their claims, if they have any, have been passed upon against them; and in view of the fact that this bill protects them, I insist that the proper course is to pass this measure.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman from Oklahoma refers to the treaty or an agreement made between the United States and the Indians. The agreement was between the tenant at will and not the landlord; the Chickasaws and Choctaws have the reversionary interest. The Comanches and Kiowas are simply tenants at will; they have no title there, and never will have. I want to call the attention of the House to another thing. We shall never get any money for these lands. The bill provides that $1.25 an acre shall be paid. I am assured by my friend from Arkansas that we will never get any money out of it.

He says we ought not to have any. How long has it been—just a few days ago—that my friend from Oklahoma was asking for a free-home bill to excuse all these people that had settled out there from paying anything, saying it was impossible for them to pay. Now, this measure provides for the payment of $1.25 an acre, and you will get nothing out of it but a lawsuit on your hands.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. If the land leases for 10 cents an acre, surely something will be received from that.

Mr. MADDOX. Did not the Cherokee Strip lease for that and more?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It leased for 4 or 5 cents.

Mr. MADDOX. Did it not go as high as 10 cents?

Mr. SIMPSON. Some of it did, but only a small part.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that twice the House has had up the free-home bill——

Mr. MADDOX. Yes; and you will have it up a third time. It will come back from the Senate again. Now, the gentleman comes here and says these people are not able to pay for these lands——

Mr. CALLAHAN. That is not the question, whether they are able to pay for the lands or not. Stick to the text.

Mr. MADDOX. I insist that is the question for this House to consider. If these people are not going to pay for this land, we should not be fooled with the idea that we are going to get $1.25 an acre for it, and hold the money subject to this lawsuit. That is the idea on which it is proposed to put this bill through. My friend over here says we shall get no money. And I call these gentlemen to witness that we shall get none. What will be the result? Suppose the court should decide, as this House understands it has decided heretofore, that the reversionary title of this property is in the Choctaws and Chickasaws, then the Government will enjoy the benefit of paying for this land and giving it to the settlers.

I call in question another statement. How many times during the last three Congresses have we been asked to extend the time for the payment of these public lands out in the West? In near y every single case I think an extension has been asked from time to time. And now you propose to open more lands and put them in the same condition.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Does not the gentleman understand that this bill provides that no money shall be paid until it is received from the sale of the lands, so that if the lands are not sold, there is nothing for the Government to pay?

Mr. MADDOX. But that money is not going to be paid. That is where the trouble will be.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Then if the Government receives no money, it will not be out anything.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman is mistaken about that. That is where I differ from some other gentlemen on the legal proposition. If the Government takes hold of this property and proposes to allot it out to settlers, we shall have to pay for it if the courts of this country say the title is in the Choctaws and Chickasaws. We can not take the title from these people. I say now, as a legal proposition, that we can not legislate the title out of those people under any precedent of any court in this country; and if the title is in them, it will remain there notwithstanding your legislation.

Mr. KING. If the Indians by cession are willing to transfer their title to the Government, as I understand has been done here, could we not then by legislation deprive them of the title?

Mr. MADDOX. We could if they would agree to it. But let any man show me if he can by what act the Choctaws and Chickasaws have agreed to this proposition. They claim the reversionary title to this property. They say that when the Government ceases to use it for the purpose of settling friendly Indians upon it, the right of the Government ceases and the title reverts to them—the whole of it. That is what they claim, and this body, in the Fifty-second Congress, decided that the claim was a valid one. At the last term of this Congress we had an able opinion that the title vested in those people.

My contention now is that this matter should be postponed until the case already brought in the courts shall be settled and the question determined as to who really owns this land. When such a decision has been obtained, we can legislate intelligently. If the court should decide that the reversionary interest does not belong to the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, that the treaty behind all this, upon which that title is based, transferred the title to the United States Government, then there will be nothing in the way of our legislation and we can go forward.

But this bill simply provides this: In order to establish a safeguard with reference to this question (and it is a grave one) it is provided that the money paid for the lands shall be held by the United States subject to a lawsuit; in other words, if the Choctaws and Chickasaws should show to the satisfaction of the court that the reversionary title is in them, then I suppose the object is to pay the $1.25 an acre to the Choctaws and Chickasaws. But suppose, gentlemen, that the Choctaws and Chickasaws say, "We will not accept your $1.25 an acre; our land is worth more than that." Under such circumstances what right has this Government or anybody else to say what price shall be paid for the property of those Indians if they have the title to it? Who can sell without their consent the reversionary interest in their lands? If you can get the Choctaws and Chickasaws to consent to the transaction, they will be bound by it. But it does not appear by this bill or anywhere else that they have consented.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the Indians are the wards of the Government, then has not the Government the right to direct the allotment of the land and to say how the Indians shall be paid for it?

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman should understand that the Choctaws and Chickasaws are not the wards of this Government.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that they are.

Mr. MADDOX. I deny it. While other Indians are wards, this class of people are not. They have been able to take care of themselves; they have made several treaties with the United States Government which the Government has pledged itself to observe, in the language of the old Jacksonian treaty, "as long as water runs down hill and grass grows." That is what the treaty provides. Are we observing it?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to say that this House had decided in 1892 or 1893——

Mr. MADDOX. In the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky (continuing). That the reversionary right to these lands was in the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Mr. MADDOX. Congress did so decide, and the Government paid $2,900,000 under that decision, and it has never been reversed. Now we have a case in court standing on all fours with the present proposition—a case in which this question will be settled, I apprehend, very soon. As I have said, my contention is that we should now postpone this matter until next session—until the court shall have decided who owns the title to this territory.

Do not, Mr. Speaker, let us get into the same trouble that we got into in reference to this matter in the Fifty-second Congress. We do not want to pay twice for these lands. Let us consider a little more carefully before we proceed, and know exactly what we are doing. There is no reason whatever for it. There is no reason why we should hasten to open up these lands when the probability is that the effect would be to lead us into serious troubles. Let us proceed slowly in a matter of so much importance as this. I see no reason why we are not in duty bound required to postpone the matter until the next session of Congress, when we will be in a better position to determine exactly what is proper to be done, and at that time we can act understandingly upon this proposition. There is no need for this haste.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, the policy in reference to the treatment of these Indian lands which has grown up in the last eight or ten years does not seem to me to be entirely a wise one. The old way of dealing with them was for the Government pay the Indians a certain sum for the lands they might be occupying and then assign them to some other location; and the lands they left were added to the public domain, subject to the general land laws applicable to the settlement of all other lands. Now treaties like this are made allotting certain lands and then treating the Indian as the owner in fee of all his claim outside of the lands allotted and fixing a price for the settler on such lands to pay the Government, to be held in trust for the Indians.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reason for preferring this new system over the old. Let the Indian occupy his allotted lands under our treaty regulations, and let the remainder outside of his allotments go into the public domain to be settled by homestead settlers, the same as any other portion of public lands. Why take from the settler who makes his home in the wilderness on these lands a sum greater than that taken from the settler on any other lands? Why should any difference be made with the settler.

The white settler has certain privileges under the homestead laws. He takes the other lands of the Government under certain conditions. Why impose greater burdens upon him when he settles upon lands acquired under recent treaties than upon lands heretofore acquired under treaties with Indian tribes and foreign nations? [Applause.]

These lands which remain after the allotment has been made to the Indians belong to the settler just as much to-day as did those acquired forty years ago, when the homestead law was first passed, and there is no justice in withholding from him the right to which he was then and is now entitled. [Applause.]

Why should the Government continue to pursue this new policy of paying the Indians a certain amount of money and then exacting that same amount from the settlers upon the lands outside of the allotments? Mr. Speaker, this practice of the Government is a greater outrage upon the settler than was perpetrated upon him under the old mode of disposing of the lands when the Government sold to the highest bidder.

I am opposed to this new policy. Mr. Speaker, why should the Government reverse its old policy and go back to a system which has been repudiated for forty years in this House and by the people? Every political party has adopted in its platform in national convention the free-homestead policy for actual settlers upon the public lands.

The treaties which are made for opening Indian reservations are made for the benefit of the public, and ought therefore to be a public charge, and it is a gross injustice to impose it on the white settlers who make a home on this specific land. Pay the Indian a fixed sum, I care not what it is, to leave his reservation or to abandon his tribal relation for single allotments of land. Let it be paid to the Indian for the public benefit, but do not charge the expense of doing it to the settlers who may find homes on the receding footsteps of the red man. [Applause.]

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask for the reading of the bill, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the preamble, or the treaty agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed.

Mr. McRAE. I should like to have two or three minutes.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Then, as soon as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] concludes, I will renew my request.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that this bill will pass, and I do not express that hope because I think the Government ought to get any money out of the transaction. Indeed, if I could have my way, I would have the amendment proposed by the committee voted down and ratify the agreement as made and pay for the land out of the Treasury. The honest way to pass this bill is to appropriate the money to pay for the land and open it to bona fide settlers. The plan proposed is unjust to the Indians, because it delays payment, and unfair to the settlers, because it makes them pay for their homesteads. I am opposed to selling lands that are fit for cultivation. It is wrong. When this land is opened for settlement, give it to the homeless settlers free of mortgage or lien, and do not undertake to make money out of it by selling it, and let the Department adopt some plan of disposal that will be fairer than giving it to the fastest runner.

I will not take up the time of the House to give the reasons why I believe the reservation should be opened, but every man in the West who knows anything about the conditions of Oklahoma and the Indian country knows that it ought to be opened at once. I hope that we shall not stop to discuss the question of when we shall eventually get the money back or whether we shall get a profit upon the investment in money. I do not believe the settlers will ever pay for it as long as the homestead law is in force.

Mr. STEELE. How are you going to dispose of the land if you do not allow the man who runs the fastest to get it and if you do not sell it?

Mr. McRAE. I am perfectly willing that it should be opened by proclamation, or in any other way, so as to let the qualified settlers get upon it and take it without the acre price.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to have you suggest some other way besides those two ways.

Mr. McRAE. We will not stop to discuss the method of opening now. We will leave it to the Department to open up the land in its own way, but we ought to let the settlers who want to cultivate it get upon it in some way. Under this bill as it is proposed to amend it, I think it is possible that the Indians may never get anything, if they must wait until the settlers pay for the land. I say the honest way for us would be to appropriate the money to pay the Indians for it, and open it to settlement under the homestead law, so as to enable people who want to cultivate it to do so.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks that general debate be now closed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

Whereas David H. Jerome, Alfred M. Wilson, and Warren G. Sayre, duly appointed commissioners on the part of the United States, did, on the 6th day of October, 1892, conclude an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, formerly a part of the Indian Territory, which said agreement is in the words and figures as follows:

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, after the word "agreement," in the last line of the first paragraph, I suggest the insertion of the words "as amended by this act."

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "agreement," in the last line of the first paragraph, insert the words "as amended by this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read Articles I and II of the treaty.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of Articles III, IV, and V, as there are no amendments to be offered to them. The treaty has been read once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of Articles III, IV, and V of the preamble. Is there objection? The Clerk calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is a committee amendment proposed to Article III.

Mr. DINGLEY. The understanding was that the bill which was offered for consideration was the bill which the gentleman from Kansas has modified. Therefore in Article IV the word "ninety" was stricken out. Unanimous consent was given to consider the bill as offered by the gentleman from Kansas, and that was modified somewhat from the printed bill.

Mr. LOUD. The Clerk is reading the bill which the gentleman from Kansas offered?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With that understanding, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read Article VI.

Mr. CANNON. In the fifth line from the beginning of Article VI, after the words "the sum of," I move to amend by inserting the words "not exceeding."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, Article VI, line 5, after the words "the sum of," insert the words "not exceeding;" so that it will read: "the sum of not exceeding $2,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of Articles VIII, IX, and X.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed as herein amended.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "herein," in line 4, page 7; also after the word "amended," in the same line, insert "and recited in the preamble of this act."

Mr. CANNON. So that it will read. It is very short.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed as amended and recited in the preamble of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That none of the money or interest thereon which is, by the terms of the said agreement, to be paid to said Indians shall be applied to the payment of any judgment that has been or may hereafter be rendered under the provisions of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations."

Mr. CANNON. I desire to amend by moving to strike out the whole of section 6.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There is no objection to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out section 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That, as the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim to have some right, title, and interest in and to the lands ceded by the foregoing treaty, as soon as the same are abandoned by said Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred upon the United States Court of Claims to hear and determine the said claim of the Chickasaws and the Choctaws, and to render judgment thereon, it being the intention of this act to allow said Court of Claims jurisdiction, so that the rights, legal and equitable, of the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, in the premises, shall be fully considered and determined, and to try and determine all questions that may arise on behalf of either party in the hearing of said claim; and the Attorney-General is hereby directed to appear in behalf of the Government of the United States; and either of the parties to said action shall have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided, That such appeal shall be taken within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment objected to, and that the said courts shall give such causes precedence: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be accepted or construed as a confession that the United States admit that the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations have any claim to or interest in said lands or any part thereof.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 8, page 10, the word "judgment" and insert the words "a decree;" also, after the word "thereon," in line 8, page 10, insert the following words: "settling the rights of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations and of the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians, respectively."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to hear that amendment. I did not get it quite.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what would be the effect of that amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it seems to me that section 8, without amendment, provides possibly for, under a construction, suits being brought by one or other of these tribes against the Government and rendering a judgment thereon. Now, it seems to me that the United States has no interest in these lands except as a trustee, according to the theory of the gentleman from Iowa, as heretofore announced; and the object of striking out the word "judgment" and authorizing entering "a decree" contemplates a proceeding in the nature of an equitable proceeding; and the subsequent amendment, "settling the rights of the respective tribes," would authorize the entering of a decree at the end of the suit in the nature of an interpleader, if you choose, or compelling both by the trustee to determine the rights of the parties in interest.

Mr. MADDOX. What is to become of the white man who enters these lands under the invitation of the United States?

Mr. CANNON. Well, the white man, by other provisions of the bill, will be enabled to make his settlement under the land laws, and when he pays for the lands, as provided in this bill, if I understand it, then there is a fund that comes into the hands of the Government, the Government being the trustee, and the Government then pays the fund out to these Indians respectively as the decree may direct; and if there is no money paid into the hands of the Government, the Government being the trustee, why, of course, the Indians are to get nothing.

Mr. MADDOX. Well, the point is, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted for a few minutes, if there is no title in the United States to this property, certainly the United States can give none to anybody.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will say to my friend, if I understand it—and there is a good deal I do not understand, about Indian legislation especially—if I understand the effect of the proposed legislation, it is to ratify an agreement with these tribes of Indians, by which agreement they cede their lands to the United States for a certain purpose, namely, that the United States may sell the same at a fixed price to a certain class of people, namely, settlers, and when that money is realized then the United States shall pay that money that it gets out to the Indians, but as other Indians, the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, set up some kind of title to this land, why this bill, as I propose to amend it, allows the Government in effect to file a bill in equity to determine the rights of the cestui que trust of the funds.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, if my friend will listen to me, I will tell him where the trouble is. The difficulty is here: The agreement that is made is made with the Comanches and Kiowas, who are only tenants at will. Under the treaty made with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, as construed by this House and the Senate, the United States Government's title extended only to this point, that is, that we will allow you to use these lands to settle friendly Indians upon. The Kiowas and Comanches were considered friendly and were allowed to settle on the reservation. When you have ceased to use it for that purpose, the House and the Senate have said the title reverts to the Choctaws and Chickasaws. Now, you have no agreement with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, who claim the reversionary interest and who have title to the property; you have only an agreement with the tenants at will, who have no title to the land and never did have.

Now, just a little further. That is a correct proposition, for I have been through the whole business and know all about it. You have no agreement with anybody who has got a title to these lands. The Kiowas and Comanches were settled there by act of the United States Government, under a treaty to settle friendly Indians, with the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, and, as I said before, it has been determined in this House and by the Senate that the reversionary title is in the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and they have made no agreement with the United States.

Now, the proposition is to go forward and let the land be settled and refer these matters to the court. Suppose the court decides that the reversionary interest is in the Choctaws and Chickasaws, what is the title that you give the settler worth? It is not worth a bawbee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may have a minute or so to answer my friend. I have no pride in this bill. As my friend knows, I did not report it. In fact, I have had to get what little knowledge I have of it on the run. I did hear what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] had to say about it, and I accepted his theory, namely, that the United States had plenary power touching these lands: that the Indians were the wards of the Government, and the United States could substantially settle this question according to the dictates of the conscience of the United States.

Now, I am quite content, so far as I am concerned, that this whole legislation should go upon the table; but if it is to be enacted, by offering this amendment, with other amendments I have offered, I have been trying to make it certain that the United States will never have to pay one dollar to any of these Indians, either to one set or the other, until it gets the money from the settler to pay them with. That is first. Second, that if there is a contention between these Indian tribes, respectively, as to which is entitled to the money or what their interest is, that they shall interplead in the Court of Claims by bill: and the gentleman from Iowa, as I understand, is to follow with another amendment, more explicit, more express and direct than the one I have offered to the same end.

I want, if possible, if this legislation is enacted, that so far as the Treasury of the United States is concerned it will never have to pay a dollar, because it is acting as trustee in the premises, unless it comes into their hands for the sale of the land. I do not know whether I have been happy in doing that by these amendments or not, but in the hurried manner in which they have been offered and in which I have read the bill it seems that this amendment and the other amendments make a decided improvement on the bill itself before it was amended.

Mr. MADDOX. If my position is correct—and the facts as I have stated them are undoubtedly so—you can not legislate the title out of these people, and there is but one thing to do, and that is to postpone this matter until the Court of Claims has passed upon it.

Mr. CANNON. I am quite content that that should be done. I am only trying, on the theory that it is to pass, to get it in shape so that, whether any title can pass from the United States or not, no money will go out of the Treasury unless it has first been received.

Mr. MADDOX. That is the reason I was trying to find out the scope of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I rather think the bill as amended does go that far; but it has necessarily been done hurriedly. I have no pride in it at all, and I only had that object in view which I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, continuing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 9. That said action shall be presented by a single petition making the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts on which the said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations claim title to said land; and said petition may be verified by the authorized delegates, agents, or attorneys of said Indians upon their information and belief as to the existence of such facts, and no other statement or verification shall be necessary: Provided, That if said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations do not bring their action within ninety days from the approval of this act, or should they dismiss said suit, the same shall not be reinstated, and their claim shall be forever barred.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12, page 11, after the word "necessary," all following words to end of section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That if said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations do not bring their action within ninety days from the approval of this act, or should they discontinue said suit and the same be not reinstated, that the Attorney-General shall institute a suit in the name of the United States, making all said tribes parties defendant, in which suit the rights of said tribes to the proceeds of such land shall be determined."

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to put a legal question to the gentleman from Iowa. The reversionary interest of the Choctaws and Chickasaws depends upon conditions; until those conditions arise those Indians have no title to the land. They can not arise until you do what you propose to do in this bill. Now, how are you going to bring those Indians into court, and what standing will they have in court?

Mr. LACEY. So far as that is concerned, Mr. Speaker, the whole question as to the rights of the Choctaws and Chickasaws is, I believe, out of the case. I believe they have disposed of their rights and have none remaining. But conceding that they have rights to the utmost extent claimed by the gentleman from Georgia, then whatever rights they may have (if I am correct in the suggestion made a little while ago) can be conveyed by the United States as their guardian at any time; and we can also provide for a controversy in the courts between them and the other tribes to determine whether they have any rights at all.

With the bill as it was originally drawn, I think there was force in the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Illinois that its provisions might cut out those two tribes without their having any day in court after the ninety days specified. Therefore I move to strike out that short limitation and to provide simply that if the Indians do not bring suit the Attorney-General, in behalf of the United States, shall bring suit to settle this question.

Thus the rights of the Indians as to the proceeds of these lands can not be cut off until a final determination by the court upon a case brought by themselves or brought by the Attorney-General in behalf of the United States, practically as guardian of the Indians. Of course this all rests upon the assumption that Congress has the power to take the Indian title and dispose of it for the use and benefit of the Indians, treating the proceeds as their property rather than the land itself.

The amendment of Mr. LACEY was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to renumber the sections of this bill wherever necessary.

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Prior to the announcement of the vote, the following business was transacted by unanimous consent:

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2023. An act to pension Henderson H. Boggs;

H. R. 4692. An act to pension F. L. Botkin;

H. R. 2866. An act granting an increase of pension to Myntie L. Hamilton;

H. R. 772. An act granting a pension to William Taylor;

H. R. 5067. An act to increase the pension of Franklin Hull;

H. R. 584. An act granting a pension to Mary I. Valentine;

H. R. 4611. An act granting an increase of pension to Marcia C. Barnes;

H. R. 135. An act granting a pension to Michael Bassett;

H. R. 8906. An act granting a pension to J. S. Waggner;

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3105. An act to correct the military record of Peter Buckley;

S. 4518. An act to provide assistance to the inhabitants of Cuba, and arms, munitions, and military stores to the people of the Island of Cuba, and for other purposes; and

S. 1887. An act granting an increase of pension to Russell R. King.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FITZPATRICK, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. SHUFORD, for five days, on account of important business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MCEWAN obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the Fifty-fifth Congress without leaving copies papers in the case of Francis and Juriah Hay, no adverse report having been made.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with a list of preliminary examinations and surveys of projects for improvement and of the amounts of river and harbor appropriations by bills and by States, these data being called for by section 6 of the river and harbor act of June 30, 1896—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing and issuing charts—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Assistant Secretary of War relating to a credit to the account of Capt. H. M. Chittenden—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service looking to legislation to enable that department to purchase medical works and journals—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting estimate of appropriations of an additional one-half to the appropriation for war expenses during the next fiscal year—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. EDDY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10170) for the relief of homestead claimants who serve in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the existing war with Spain, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1343); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9554) granting certain lands to the city of Santa Barbara, Cal., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1344); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. MESICK, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5748) for the relief of I. Winslow Ayer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1322); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRIFFIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1778) for the relief of Wesley Van Over, late of Company C, One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, and Company G, Eighth Pennsylvania Cavalry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1323); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 89) for the relief of John E. Wilbur, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1324); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 129) to amend "An act for the correction of the military record of Wilhelm Spiegelburg," approved July 21, 1892, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1325); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. McDONALD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1747) authorizing the President to appoint and retire David McMurtrie Gregg, late captain, Sixth United States Cavalry, and late brevet major-general of United States Volunteers, with the rank and grade of captain, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1326); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1747) authorizing the President to appoint and retire David McMurtrie Gregg with the rank and grade of a captain, submitted the views of the minority on said bill, accompanied by a report (No. 1326, part 2); which said report was referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BROWNLOW, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1737) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1327); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10276) granting an increase of pension to George Witter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1328); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 17, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. CULLOM, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

SILVER COINAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 4th instant, a statement showing the coinage value of the silver bullion in the Treasury, and the amount of the seigniorage and the amount of the existing Treasury notes used in its purchase, and the amount of standard silver dollars coined under the act of July 14, 1890, and the amount of the seigniorage, and the amount of Treasury notes redeemed in such dollars and retired; which, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. SENTZ.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of James H. Sentz vs. The United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE H. BALDWIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9210) granting an increase of pension to George H. Baldwin and asking for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SHOUP, and Mr. MITCHELL were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3145) to establish an assay office at Seattle, Wash.

OFFICERS OF THE NAVY.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 167) ratifying and confirming certain temporary appointments of officers of the Navy; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the temporary appointments made by the President on and after April 21, 1898, and up to the date of the passage of this joint resolution, of officers of the line and staff of the Navy, are hereby ratified and confirmed, to continue in force during the exigency under which their services are required in the existing war: Provided, That the officers so appointed shall be assigned to duty with rank and pay of the grades established by existing law, and shall be paid from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the reasons for the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. The Senate will remember that in the naval appropriation bill authority was given to the Secretary of the Navy to appoint certain temporary officers and raise certain men for exigencies not to extend beyond the existing war. Before the bill became a law and was signed by the President certain designations or appointments had been made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the suggestion by the committee to him that there would be no difficulty undoubtedly in Congress validating those appointments. The joint resolution is to cover those cases.

Mr. CULLOM. There are only a few of those officers.

Mr. HALE. There are only a few of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Have those nominations been confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. HALE. I suppose they have. I suppose they came in in regular order. That I do not know. If the Senator would like to look at that point or have me look at it, the joint resolution can go over for a day.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator that it appertains to a very few officers, probably not twenty.

Mr. HALE. It relates to only a few.

Mr. CHANDLER. And it makes a difference perhaps of four or five days or a week in the time of service.

Mr. COCKRELL. Were they nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. CHANDLER. They either have been or are to be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The joint resolution simply gives them their rank and pay from the time at which they were appointed, which may have been half a dozen days, perhaps in some cases ten days or a fortnight, before the naval appropriation bill actually became a law. There can not be any objection to the joint resolution, I think.

Mr. HALE. Just such legislation as this was passed by Congress in 1861 to meet emergencies.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see any objection to it if the appointees were confirmed or are to be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly they are to be confirmed or have been already confirmed.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. CARTER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report a bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 4607) providing for the payment and maintenance of volunteers during the interval between their enrollment and muster into the United States service, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the pay and the allowance of such of the volunteers as are received into the service of the United States under the act of Congress approved April 22, 1898, and the acts supplemental thereto, shall be deemed to commence from the day on which they joined for duty and are enrolled at the battalion, regimental, or State rendezvous: Provided, That troops about to embark for service in the Philippine Islands may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be paid one month's wages in advance prior to embarkation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. HALE. Let the bill be read again.

The bill was read the third time at length.

Mr. HALE. It applies only to cases of enrollment in the States where the troops afterwards are actually received into the service of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY. Sworn in.

Mr. CARTER. That is substantially the provision of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Is that the exact bill?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the bill.

Mr. CARTER. I think it is the exact provision of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I do not think we ought to pass anything that gives pay under a State enrollment where the troops do not afterwards come into the actual service of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. It will be observed by a critical examination of the provisions of the bill that it applies only where the soldiers are accepted into the service of the United States.

Mr. HALE. The language is, "such of the volunteers as are received into the service of the United States."

Mr. CARTER. "Received into the service of the United States."

Mr. SEWELL. It is to cover the period from the mustering of the troops to the actual completion of their muster into the service of the United States, which may be one, two, or three weeks. It is to avoid our having an interminable number of claims by and by for that service.

Mr. HALE. It is to prevent, I suppose, the old way of the States paying them and being reimbursed afterwards.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that is the intention.

The bill was passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MASON introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4608) granting a pension to Salem Rice; and

A bill (S. 4609) granting a pension to Andrew J. Lee (with accompanying papers).

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 4615) for the relief of David Horner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAFFERY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 4616) for the relief of Thomas Kergon, of Rapides Parish, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4617) granting a pension to

John F. Wentz: which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4618) for the relief of Elizabeth Muhleman, widow, and the heirs at law of Samuel A. Muhleman, deceased;

A bill (S. 4619) for the relief of Mrs. Druzilla Stump; and

A bill (S. 4620) for the relief of the trustees of the Baptist Church of Guyandotte, W. Va.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 168) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and return to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company $15,385.76, in accordance with the decision of the Secretary of the Interior dated March 3, 1898; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

BOOKS RELATING TO HAWAII.

Mr. WETMORE submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form 1,000 copies of the "List of books in the Library of Congress relating to Hawaii," 500 copies for the use of the Senate and 500 copies for the use of the Librarian of Congress.

STENOGRAPHER FOR INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings before said committee during the present session of Congress, and that the stenographer employed to report the hearings on Senate bill No. 3354, to amend "An act to regulate commerce," be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 12th instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 6) providing for the adjustment of certain claims of the United States against the State of Tennessee and certain claims of the State of Tennessee against the United States.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 14th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 116) granting a pension to W. L. Faxon;

An act (S. 439) granting an increase of pension to Hannah Letcher Stevenson;

An act (S. 732) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Wright;

An act (S. 1476) granting an increase of pension to Louise M. Rice;

An act (S. 1541) granting a pension to "Itewayaka" or "One-armed Jim;"

An act (S. 1829) granting an increase of pension to James H. Kile;

An act (S. 3345) granting an increase of pension to Martha Ann Hynes;

An act (S. 4142) to provide a life-saving station on the westerly side of the harbor of Gloucester, Mass.; and

An act (S. 4452) authorizing the Campbell-Lynch Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Webbers Falls, Ind. T.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. GRAY was, on his own motion, excused from further service as chairman of the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.

Mr. TURPIE was, on his own motion, excused from further service as chairman of the Select Committee to Investigate the Condition of the Potomac River Front at Washington.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL,

Mr. GORMAN was appointed chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims;

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, chairman of the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress;

Mr. GRAY, chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; and

Mr. FAULKNER, chairman of the Select Committee to Investigate the Condition of the Potomac River Front at Washington.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10049) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma Territory, and to open their reservation for settlement, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 237) appointing four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10100.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, when Congress is asked to impose new taxes, or the people are asked to agree to pay new taxes, it is right that the reason for such taxation should be distinctly understood not only by the members of Congress, but by the public as well. It is unnecessary to say that without regard to politics every member of the present Congress, I believe without a single exception, stands ready to vote all of the money and all of the taxes necessary to a vigorous prosecution of the present war. While we all are willing to vote such taxes, we would not be performing our duty if we were to vote for taxes that are unnecessary. How much money it is necessary to raise under existing conditions is the first question presented for consideration.

As stated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] on yesterday, the opinion of several of the Secretaries was asked on this question. I have carefully read the statement of the Senator from Iowa this morning, and while, in the main, he stated the opinions of those Secretaries, as I understood them, correctly, in some details it seemed to me they were not stated as I recollect them. But whether so stated or not I was not able to determine by a careful examination of the Senator's remarks as printed in the RECORD. The Senator's conclusion seemed to be that there was needed from the present time to the end of the next fiscal year, as I think he stated it, $379,192,000.

The number of statements and calculations which the Senator from Iowa is able to present to the Senate by the aid of the experts connected with the Appropriations Committee and the Finance Committee is somewhat bewildering. It is absolutely necessary for me to consider this thing in a simpler sort of way, free, as far as possible, from complications. Let me call the attention of the Senate to what will be the extraordinary expenses of the Government aside from and in addition to the ordinary expenses. Let us, in this discussion, keep this separate and apart from the ordinary appropriations.

When Secretary Gage was asked as to the amount of money that would probably be needed by the Government for war purposes and in addition to the ordinary expenses, having no relation whatever to the general expense, and not mixing them with that, he stated that at a rough estimate, not being able to make anything like an accurate calculation, he supposed it would amount to $25,000,000 per month. This would amount to an expenditure of $300,000,000, in addition to ordinary expenses, for the next fiscal year.

When Secretary Alger appeared before the committee, making his estimate on the basis of 125,000 volunteers, he stated that the expenditure would amount to a fraction over $150,000,000.

I will here insert the estimates of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy as printed by the Committee on Finance:

ESTIMATE OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 3, 1898.

Approximate deficiency estimates for the fiscal year 1898-99, War Department.

Commissary Department	$15,633,085.05

Inspector-General's Office	348,480.00
	137,263,296.44
Add 10 per cent for contingencies	13,720,329.64
Grand total	150,983,527.08

Estimated on a basis of 125,000 volunteers.

R. A. ALGER, Secretary of War.

ESTIMATE OF THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 4, 1898.

SIR: I have had an estimate made by the various chiefs of bureaus of the amounts which in their judgment it will require, in addition to the provisions made in the naval appropriation bill, to maintain the Navy on a war footing during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899. The estimates are as follows:

Ordnance	$12,000,000
Equipment	10,000,000
Construction and Repair	12,000,000
Steam Engineering	9,000,000
Yards and Docks	6,250,000
Supplies and Accounts	5,500,000
Navigation	606,250
Bureau of Medicine and Surgery	200,000
Navy Department, to meet emergencies and extraordinary expenses (this item is entirely indefinite: if the war is prolonged, if ships are lost or destroyed, if unforeseen demands arise, as is possible in many ways, a great deal more might be necessary)	20,000,000
Total	75,556,250

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

CHAIRMAN FINANCE COMMITTEE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

When asked the question as to how much the filling up of the Regular Army, as was then proposed, from 25,000 men to 64,000 men, would increase this appropriation, he answered promptly that the calculation was sufficiently liberal to cover that, and that the estimate of $150,000,000 was enough to cover all these army expenses.

The Senator from Iowa on yesterday said that he thought that at the time the Secretary of War made this statement that there had been no provision made for the 13,000 other troops which have been provided for in addition to the 125,000. My recollection is to the contrary. Whether or not the law had at that time been passed authorizing the enlistment of those 13,000 men, if I am not very much mistaken the 13,000 men were taken into consideration, and that the Secretary said that the estimate of $150,000,000 was ample to cover this additional expense also. I so understood it.

Mr. ALLISON. If I do not interrupt the Senator from Arkansas, I will say that if he will turn to the statement he will see that it is based upon 125,000, whereas the real number of volunteers is now 138,000.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I stated a moment ago that the statement made by the Secretary of War was that on the basis of 125,000 men the expenditures of the War Department would amount to $150,000,000 and something more, and that when his attention was called to the fact that the Regular Army was to be increased and he was asked whether filling up the Regular Army from 25,000 to 64,000 men would increase that expenditure, he answered that the amount was ample to cover all that. At the same time his attention was called to the propositions to increase the Volunteer Army of 125,000 men by 13,000 men, and the statement was made at the time that the total war footing of the country would be something like 200,000 men, and as I understood the Secretary said his estimate was ample to cover all this. So $150,000,000 is the amount of money which the Secretary of War believes will be necessary for that branch of the military service during the whole of the next fiscal year, provided the war shall continue so long and be prosecuted on the footing now proposed.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not suppose that it is vital in this discussion whether the facts are as stated by the Senator from Arkansas or not. I did not so understand the Secretary of War, and I think that none of the Senators sitting on this side of the Chamber so understood him.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no point of difference, as I understand it, except whether the Secretary of War included the 13,000 extra enlistments which are provided for over the 125,000. That he included the 125,000 who had been called for and the regular troops to be added in addition to the 25,000 there can be no sort of doubt. The other is a small matter and cuts but little figure, as suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island. My recollection of the statement of the Secretary of War is as I have stated it, and he estimates $150,000,000 for war expenses. But assuming that I am mistaken in this, then $165,000,000 at the outside, instead of $150,000,000, would be the amount necessary for the War Department.

Mr. Secretary Long, after appearing before the committee and making his statement, returned to the Department and made out a careful estimate for the Navy Department and sent that down the next day. His estimate was that it would take $75,000,000, in round numbers, for the Navy Department. Now, add $75,000,000 to $150,000,000, or for the sake of argument assuming the extreme ground, $165,000,000, you have $240,000,000 as the total proposed extra expenditure of the Government for military purposes for the next fiscal year, and it is to meet that extraordinary expense that this bill is proposed to be passed.

The Senator from Iowa stated yesterday, to quote his own language, that "this bill is here only because the Government of the United States is involved in a war with a foreign country. If there were no war, there would be no necessity for this bill." It is not here, at least the country is to understand it is not here, for the purpose of taking care of any deficiencies or making up any shortages which now exist in the revenue. The understanding is that the purpose of this bill is to provide for the extraordinary military and naval expenses of the Government on account of the existing war, and for this alone, and that other or ordinary expenses of the Government will be provided for by the laws now on the statute books. This being the case, it should not be difficult to determine what amount of money it is necessary to raise by the bill. Then we can easily determine how much should be raised by taxation during the year, and then what steps should be taken to take care of the balance.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe that $75,000,000 will cover all appropriations needed for the Navy during the next entire fiscal year?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Secretary of the Navy made his statement in writing, in which he said that above the ordinary expenses the expenses of the Navy Department incurred by reason of the existing war, for the fiscal year beginning on July 1 next and ending twelve months thereafter, would be a fraction over $75,000,000, and I presume the Secretary had the necessary information on which to make his estimate.

Mr. HALE. I only want to say——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In this connection I may state that to cover emergencies or to cover deficiencies, as will be seen by reference to the statement, there was an allowance of $20,000,000 in that $75,000,000 for things not provided for.

Mr. HALE. I have not seen the statement, and I do not know on what basis it is made; but judging from extra appropriations that have already been made and deficiency estimates to carry us only until December, I have no hesitation in predicting that it will cost very much more than that sum to carry all the naval appropriations for the entire fiscal year ending July 1, 1899. It will not do for the committee in laying taxation to depend upon spending no more than $75,000,000 in the Navy for the year above ordinary expenditures.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me a moment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us get at the exact facts, as near as possible. The Secretary, in his statement, which is in print (I had a copy of it here yesterday, and I have now sent for some copies), said that it would require $75,000,000, in addition to the $23,000,000 added to the naval appropriation bill on account of the war, which would make about $100,000,000. Then he stated also that there was a deficiency appropriation which would be required between now and the 1st of July of $32,000,000 more. So the expenses from this time to the 1st of July, 1899, were stated by me yesterday in round numbers at $132,000,000, which in my judgment is far short of what the expenses will be.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to inquire if that testimony was printed?

Mr. ALLISON. It is in print.

Mr. HALE. I do not believe that that large sum, if the war continues during the year, will cover the appropriations necessary for the Navy.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What has just occurred on the floor of the Senate, in my opinion, demonstrates the wisdom of those who act with me on the committee in insisting that there should not be a report of this bill without some investigation about the amount of money necessary to be raised. As I understand, the bill was passed through the House of Representatives without any estimates being made by any branch of the Government, without any statement being made by any Secretary as to the amount of money likely to be needed. We were asked to take the bill up and consider it by guessing at what might be wanted. Some of us were opposed to doing that and insisted on having estimates made by those who ought to be better informed than Senators are likely to be as to what the probable expenditures would be. I think the statement made by the Senator from Maine distinctly shows that it was wise that we had the opinion of those whose business it is to know what the public expenses of the Government will be before we propose to levy taxes to pay the expenses. Guessing should not be relied on in matters of such importance.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that the testimony of these Cabinet officers was taken down and that it has been printed. If so, there ought not to be any conflict as to their statements.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am sorry to say that the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury alone was taken down and printed. The Secretary of the Navy made a report, which he sent down the day following his statement before the committee, and upon which he was not examined by members of the committee. Unfortunately, the statement of the Secretary of War was not taken down at all. Many of us thought it ought to be done, but it was not.

Let me call attention to the last item in this estimate made by the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

Navy Department: To meet emergencies and extraordinary expenses (this item is entirely indefinite: if the war is prolonged, if ships are lost or destroyed, if unforeseen demands arise, as is possible in many ways, a great deal more might be necessary), $20,000,000.

That, added to the preceding items, aggregates $75,556,250.

There is nearly 33 per cent of the whole of the appropriations estimated to cover contingencies that can not be known by the Secretary of the Navy at this time.

Mr. HALE. That, the Senator notices, is in addition to the provisions made in the naval appropriation act to maintain the Navy on a war footing during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899. The $75,000,000, with the $20,000,000 allowance for unforeseen emergencies, does not include the extra amount beyond the ordinary expenditures, amounting to about $30,000,000, already appropriated for in the naval appropriation act. That would bring it up to over $100,000,000, or to $105,000,000. Then the deficiencies also that are estimated will bring it up to something like $125,000,000. I shall esteem it a piece of good fortune, Mr. President, if the war continues in full force for a solid year after the 1st of July, 1898, if we get out with a naval expenditure of $125,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, not having the honor to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I do not know what the Committee on Appropriations did in providing in the naval appropriation bill for the next fiscal year. They probably included some extraordinary expenses that came up on account of the war. But in the calculations I have seen, those things are mixed up with so many other items that it is made difficult to separate one from the other, and it is hard to know what are legitimate expenses resulting from the war and what are appropriations that were put in the bill to meet necessary expenses which would have existed if there had been no war.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator that that is not a very difficult thing.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Perhaps not to a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. The appropriations in the naval appropriation bill are not extensive in number, and the parts that relate to war expenditures over and above ordinary expenditures of the Navy, and which swelled that bill so that it is almost twice as large as it had ever been before, are very easily obtainable. I can give to the Senator at a later date the items which show $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 of extra expenditures.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It will all probably come out before the close of this debate.

Mr. CULLOM. If I may be allowed to ask the Senator from Maine a question, I find on the last page of the printed testimony an estimate by the Secretary of the Navy, May 4, 1898, amounting in the aggregate to seventy-five million and some hundred thousand dollars. Now, is that estimate for war purposes alone, outside of any appropriations we have passed in reference to the maintenance of the Navy?

Mr. ALLISON. It is in addition.

Mr. HALE. It is in addition to those.

Mr. CULLOM. I say it is outside of the other appropriations made, and for war purposes.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. It is meant to cover extra expenditures by reason of the war and not the ordinary expenditures of the Navy Department if we were in time of peace. It also excludes a large proportion of the great naval appropriation bill that was passed by the Senate a fortnight ago.

Mr. CULLOM. I assumed that that was the case, but the remarks seemed to make it a little doubtful.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated with as much distinctness as I could, on yesterday, and the Secretary so states, that the $75,000,000 is in addition to the war provisions in the regular naval bill for the next year, and that it is in addition to the $23,000,000 that will be required for naval expenditures between now and the 1st of July. So the naval expenditures, clear and explicit and absolute, are, on the face of these papers, over $125,000,000 for the existing war, and I so stated yesterday.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I heard that statement, and I think it best for these conflicting ideas to be expressed here, so that they may be cleared up and the truth may be arrived at. I understood that the statement referred to, however, did not include the deficiency appropriation for this year of $22,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. It did not.

Mr. CHILTON. On that we agree. I understood also that it included all the extraordinary expenses for next year. There is the difference.

Mr. ALLISON. It is just the contrary.

Mr. HALE. What is the language?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator read the language?

Mr. HALE. The language is:

> In addition to the provisions made in the naval appropriation bill to maintain the Navy on a war footing during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899.

It is in addition.

Mr. CHILTON. I have not read the statement, but the Secretary of the Navy was before the Committee and endeavored to explain that matter fully. There is also, it will be observed here, an allowance which he mentions of $20,000,000 extra, which is a merely problematical thing. It is not known what part of the $20,000,000 it will be necessary to spend; it is merely an arbitrary allowance that he makes, as is shown by this statement.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. However these things may be determined, one thing seems to me to be perfectly clear, and that is, that with the most extravagant calculations made by the gentlemen who are in favor of large appropriations, it is impossible to make it appear that it will be necessary to have $300,000,000 in addition to our ordinary expenses during the next fiscal year. With these extraordinary expenditures to be made, taking the sum for the sake of the argument at $300,000,000—it can not be made to reach that, even on the extravagant calculations which are made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and others—but take that as the necessary amount to be raised, the next question for us to determine is, How will we provide for that $300,000,000 if we propose to do it at this time and in this bill?

In the first place, is it not necessary that all the expenditures which are believed to be necessary for twelve months shall be made now, when in fact the war may not last anything like a full year after July 1 next? Is it necessary for all the money to be provided for now in this bill that will be expended during the next year? The Congress of the United States is bound to assemble on the first Monday in December next, it is in session now, and will remain in session as long as the public interests require that it shall do so. In addition to that, the President can convene Congress whenever there is a necessity that it shall be done. Hence there is no imperative necessity that we shall provide now all the money which may by any possibility be needed during the next twelve months.

But suppose we do, and it is proposed to raise $300,000,000. The question is, How shall it be done? This bill as it came from the House of Representatives provided for raising practically $35,000,000 of additional revenue by an additional tax on tobacco; by an additional tax on beer, thirty-three millions, and thirty millions on stamps. In addition to that, it proposed practically to increase the bonded debt of the United States by the sum of $600,000,000. True, $100,000,000 of the bonds were not to be called bonds, but were to be called certificates; but they were to bear interest just as though they were bonds. A promise by the Government to pay a debt at a day in the future and to pay interest upon that debt, no matter by what name called, is practically a bond.

Here was a proposition, then, to expend possibly $300,000,000 in twelve months. To provide the money necessary for this expenditure $100,000,000 was to be raised by taxation and $600,000,000 besides was to be raised by the sale of bonds. Seven hundred millions of dollars was to be raised to meet an expenditure of less than $300,000,000. Many of us were not willing to pass a bill which provided for a scheme so unreasonable; hence we proposed some changes in the bill.

The plan to raise the $100,000,000 by taxation had some marked characteristics. It was not to be levied on the property of the country, but was to be levied, almost every dollar of it, upon consumption. The tax on beer nobody will deny is a tax on consumption; the tax on tobacco is also a tax on consumption, and the stamp tax, which was the other great item, was intended to be put upon every article of medicine, upon every "packet, box, bottle, pot, or phial" containing pills, powders, tinctures, lozenges, sirups, cordials, tonics, plasters; upon bonds, debentures, mortgages, deeds, bills of lading, etc., and, while general in its application, bears with greater proportional weight upon small transactions than upon larger ones, and is one of the most onerous, as well as one of the most vexatious forms of taxation which has ever been adopted in this country, in my opinion.

The Senate committee modified many of these provisions and made some additions to the bill which, I think, must commend themselves to the Senate as wholesome and be received by the people of the country with approval.

The first material change made in the bill was a provision for an inheritance tax. Property passing by inheritance or by will must contribute to the support of the Government under which this is done. There is no natural right by which any man can convey his property to another when he comes to die; and if the Government gives him the power to do this and the means of doing it, it is but just and reasonable that he should contribute something to the maintenance of the Government which gives him this right, and this is certainly as just as that the man who takes a glass of beer or who takes a chew of tobacco should be required to do so. We believe this to be a just and equitable tax and one which rests upon property.

We propose some other taxes in addition to those proposed by the House. One—I will not stop to read it—is a proposition to levy a small excise tax, equivalent to one-fourth of 1 per cent, on gross receipts of certain lines of business, whether by railroad, street railroad, sleeping car, canal, steamboat, ship, barge, etc., and a like tax is to be collected from those engaged in express business, telephone and telegraph, insurance, electric light, etc. A tax of one forty-eighth part of 1 per cent per month on bank deposits is also provided for. We have levied a large tax, a very large tax, on the people engaged in producing beer; we have levied a large tax on the people engaged in manufacturing tobacco, and we have put a very small tax, an infinitesimal tax in comparison with the other, on the people who are engaged in transportation, banking, insurance, and other kindred occupations.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the question is of some importance. Does the Senator think that the tax imposed upon beer is a tax imposed upon the producers of beer or that it will fall upon them ultimately?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The tax on beer will fall on the beer trade, but what part the consumers of beer will pay and what part of it, owing to the competition among brewers, they themselves will be compelled to pay, and what part of it will be levied upon the dealers in beer even the Senator from Rhode Island, with all his astuteness and his wonderful information about the details of industrial enterprises in this country, can not figure out.

I do not believe the man lives who can tell what proportion of this tax will fall on any branch of the business; but this much we do know, Mr. President, and that is that there is a tax of $60,000,000 to be levied upon that business—that business involving an output annually, say, of $150,000,000—a tax of $60,000,000 is levied upon a production amounting to $150,000,000 a year; and yet the righteous soul of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was vexed on yesterday because of our proposition to levy a tax which would bring $15,000,000 from the banks of the country upon deposits, which he said would amount to $6,000,000,000 a year. One is a tax of almost 40 per cent levied upon an industry; the other is a tax of about one-fourth of 1 per cent upon banking. The one is regarded with great equanimity while the other excites abhorrence.

Then, Mr. President, there is a proposition to levy a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent on all other corporations. The question was raised on the floor yesterday as to whether that would apply alike to all corporations, small as well as large. It does. I confess that I should be glad to see some arrangement made by which we could exempt the smaller corporations from this tax. The larger ones are better able to pay in proportion to the amount of business they do than are the small ones. Small businesses are always laboring under disadvantages in competition with larger enterprises; and if there could be a way devised to relieve the small corporations from taxation, I for one would be glad to see it done. The great corporations, those that embrace millions of dollars of interest, should pay a small percentage on their gross income to the Treasury for the support of the Government under which they prosper and grow rich.

The Senator from Iowa on yesterday spoke of the difficulties which this tax would bring upon the small corporations. The very small corporations which would suffer from this tax seem to be those in whom alone he was interested. The fact that the small corporations would pay an exceedingly small tax did not seem to strike him. These very small corporations would pay a very small sum to the Government, but the great corporations, while paying a very light tax, would contribute materially toward the support of the Government and of the war. I hope they would do this cheerfully, but if not cheerfully done, it should nevertheless be done. Speaking of these small corporations, the Senator from Iowa on yesterday said:

> They are resorted to on the idea that there is some special pecuniary advantage in having corporate authority.

This, Mr. President, is exactly the idea on which we rest this proposition to levy a small tax upon the exercise of this privilege. There are advantages coming to people who transact their business in the form of corporations. It is unnecessary for me to detain the Senate to explain what these advantages are, for they are well known not only to the people interested, but they are well known to everybody else. One of the advantages suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] on yesterday was their continuing in perpetuity, and, as suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], there were other advantages of a very material kind, and these are advantages which those interested ought to be willing to contribute something to the Government for the privilege of exercising.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I will take but a moment. I want the information. I have only read the bill hurriedly, and I ask the Senator, is it a correct construction of the proposition that a manufacturing corporation or a mercantile corporation would have to pay this tax, whereas its competitor, as stated on yesterday by the Senator from Iowa, right across the street, doing exactly the same kind of business, and which is its real competitor, is excused from the tax? Is that a true statement of the effect of that provision?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think so.

Mr. MASON. Then, is it equal and fair taxation? Is it uniform?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think so, for if there are not advantages to be derived from incorporating a business of this kind, no man need incorporate it. I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the tax levied is infinitesimal and can not have any very material effect upon any business. It is one-fourth of 1 per cent on the gross receipts of the business—25 cents on $100 worth of business. If there are advantages coming to a corporation such as were pointed out by several Senators on yesterday—if two old men who have been in business in the Senator's [Mr. ALLISON's] town for a great many years, and they wish to so organize their business as to make it practically immortal, so that it may go down to their sons and their sons' sons, making a practical entail of whatever rights they have, it seems to me right, and that they ought to be willing to contribute something to the support of the Government that gives them the right to do this thing.

The tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent, one-quarter of a dollar on a hundred dollars of business transacted, is certainly not a heavy tax, and any private individual doing business as a corporation who does not believe he gets an advantage of more than one-fourth of 1 per cent, one-fourth of a dollar on a hundred dollars, can and will easily get himself free of the tax by dissolving the corporation, going into business on his own private account, thus becoming personally responsible for his business, and taking the chances of its dying when he dies.

Mr. President, the marked and leading difference between this scheme of taxation as proposed by those with whom I acted in the Committee on Finance and those of the other side is that they seem to think that all taxes ought to be levied on consumption, while we believe that all taxes ought to be levied on property.

If it shall turn out, as the Senator from Iowa seems to think, that this bill will raise $225,000,000 from taxes, then I believe that some part of these taxes ought to be left out; but what part should be left out? I believe those taxes which rest upon consumption should be those omitted, and that those taxes which levy contributions for the benefit of the Government on property should be kept in the bill. Here we propose to increase the tax on beer a hundred per cent and we increase the tax on tobacco 166 per cent.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator consider the inheritance tax a tax on property?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Of course, if there is no property passing, there will be no tax.

Mr. SPOONER. But is it a tax on property?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No; it is not intended to be a tax on property, but it becomes tax where the property passes. I understand the technicality that the Senator from Wisconsin raises in the matter. I do not propose to go into that question of technicality. Of course we can not tax the property itself, but this is a tax on the privilege, and the property has to pay it; it comes out of the property.

Mr. SPOONER. The technicality is not one raised by me, but by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am perfectly well aware of that fact also, but I hardly thought it was necessary to speak of it here. We all know that these taxes will be paid by the property, though of course we can not levy the taxes directly against the property, and we do not propose to do it.

Mr. CAFFERY. Then the tax is not on the property, but is levied upon the right of succession?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Yes, sir. That is the privilege the owner of the property gets by the law, and he pays something to support the law for the right of exercising that privilege.

Mr. STEWART. All taxes are paid out of property.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The spirit which moved the gentlemen who call themselves the minority, who are on the other side, is well illustrated by their action on the tax on tobacco.

The House of Representatives sent a proposition here to increase the tax on chewing and smoking tobacco 100 per cent; to make the tax 12 cents instead of 6 cents a pound, as it now is, on tobacco. The Senate committee has raised that tax from 12 to 16 cents a pound. A 16-cent tax on tobacco is a tax of about 100 per cent on the average value of smoking and chewing tobacco. The House of Representatives sent us a tax on cigars of $4 a thousand. The average price of a thousand cigars of a cheap variety would be perhaps $40 a thousand. So that a tax of $4 a thousand on cheap cigars is a tax of perhaps 10 per cent.

The members of the Senate committee, not satisfied with a tax of 12 cents per pound on tobacco, raised it to 16 cents per pound, and this amounts to 100 per cent tax on this article of almost universal consumption, and almost the only luxury indulged in by the masses, while they reduce the 10 per cent tax on cigars from $4 a thousand to $3.50. The consumers of cigars, in other words, must not be expected to pay such an exorbitant tax as 10 per cent on what they consume, while the poor devil who consoles himself with a short-stemmed pipe after a hard day's work must pay 100 per cent on what he consumes.

Mr. President, this system of taxation is wrong; it is inequitable; it is unjust; and the plan proposed by the gentlemen with whom I acted in the committee which proposes to so arrange these taxes that they shall not be levied upon necessities, but shall be levied upon wealth, is just and equitable and fair.

One of the complaints made against this bill by the Senator from Iowa is that it was like the air we breathe. He says it goes into everything. I have always believed that that was the correct theory of taxation. Taxes ought to be made to bear equally and evenly everywhere, so that they may bear lightly, almost imperceptibly, upon all.

The Senator is not willing to levy a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent upon the deposits of banks, amounting, as it does, to $15,000,000 on $6,000,000,000 of deposits, but he is anxious to levy a tax of 100 per cent on the tobacco consumed by the masses of the people of the country! These two proposed plans of taxation fairly illustrate the difference in the policy of the two sides. Which proposition is upon proper lines and which is not the Senate and the country will judge.

Mr. President, the principles of taxation will be understood after a while by the people of this country. Imagine a community in the South or West, such as many of us were familiar with forty or fifty years ago, where there are but few people and where there is scarcely any property, where the population consists of men who have their little cabins in which they and their families live, scattered around amongst the hills in an almost absolute wilderness. It was perfectly natural, under circumstances such as these, that there should be what we would call a road law, requiring every man physically sound and well between certain ages to contribute of his yearly labor ten days to open up the roads of the country.

Where there was practically no property, where all were equally interested, this was not an unjust system of taxation for this purpose; but when a country grows to be rich and prosperous, when there is a great accumulation of property, when commerce increases, when highways become a necessity, then for any man to say that those highways ought to be maintained by requiring each individual man to contribute an equal share, without regard to the property he owns, without regard to the business he transacts, would simply be monstrous and outrageous. If such a system is kept up after property increases, a man with absolutely no property might be compelled to contribute 3 per cent of the whole of his capital—his time—to maintaining highways, while a man of wealth would contribute only the same. Such a system can not continue.

With growing property, the first step to be taken beyond the tax on persons would be naturally a tax on property; and the justice in such a step is apparent. In the course of time and the increase of wealth a tax on incomes would become the most equitable system, and a system of taxing property would be abandoned in its turn. When a moderate tax on incomes would yield a sufficient revenue to support the Government, I believe that every dollar of tax levied for municipal, State, or national purposes ought to be paid by the profits of business. Such a tax under such conditions would be just and equitable. It is, of course, utterly impossible for us to levy such a tax here and now, but instead of doing the next best thing we can do, and levying taxes on wealth, we are continually levying taxes upon consumption, upon necessities, which, after all, are mere personal taxes.

This system of taxation has characterized the Republican party from its inception down to to-day. This system was necessary in the early life and poverty of the Republic, but we have outgrown all necessity for this now. But wherever you find a Republican, you find one who believes in levying taxes on consumption, on necessities, on poverty, and allowing property to go free. He believes in the text, "To him that hath shall be given; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath." This idea has characterized their efforts to impose taxation everywhere; it has characterized their efforts in this bill; and it seems as if they can never shake off the old idea.

Mr. President, if some part of the taxes imposed by this bill are not necessary, I ask in the name of common sense, in the name of justice and humanity, that those taxes which are levied upon consumption, those taxes which rest upon human necessities, shall first be stricken out, and that those taxes which rest upon wealth and property shall remain in the bill.

I will not discuss the proposition to issue $42,000,000 of currency as against the $42,000,000 of silver seigniorage which belongs to the Government of the United States, which has been paid for and which it owns. We provided once, by an act passed by both Houses, for this, but it was vetoed. If an individual needing money has an asset which is valuable and recognized as valuable all over the world, and should refuse to use it, and should be fool enough to borrow money, leaving that asset unused, I think those interested in him might very well apply for the issuance of a writ de lunatico inquirendo. The Government of the United States would be no more justified in taking such a course than would an individual.

One other feature of this bill, Mr. President, against which there is some complaint, is the proposition to issue one hundred and fifty millions of greenbacks. One Senator said to me yesterday, evidently very much disturbed, "What, issue fiat money!" Mr. President, gold and silver may be fiat money, but a greenback note is a promise to pay and a promise to pay on demand the amount of money specified in the note itself; it is a due bill. The Senator from Iowa yesterday told us how wonderfully this country had grown, what magnificent developments had occurred; and he illustrated it by reference to the quantity of postage stamps sold in 1883 and the amount sold now. He might have gone a step further and said that the estimated wealth of this country in 1860 was perhaps $16,000,000,000 and that it is now $80,000,000,000.

We had outstanding at the close of the war more than twenty-seven hundred million dollars of interest-bearing debt and debt not bearing interest. We have shown to the world our ability, even in that time of our weakness, to take care of this great debt. Then who can say that our promise to pay the paltry sum of $150,000,000 will not be good? The people would readily and willingly accept those greenbacks in payment of any indebtedness due to them. Perhaps men of wealth would not advance gold and silver for them as they would for bonds, but they can be paid out to the people; they will be accepted gladly by the people; they will be used as money; they will not be sent to the Treasury for redemption, but they will form a part of the circulating medium of the country, will tend to relieve the present stringency, and will do good and not evil as long as they exist.

Mr. President, I will not undertake to discuss the details of this bill at this time. During the discussion, of course, the various items will come up and be considered, and the sharp contrast between the propositions of the other side and those of this side will be clearly and distinctly seen, much more strongly than I have been able to state them to-day. I will now content myself with this general statement of the principles which underlie the system on the one side or the other side. I believe that the strong common sense and patriotism of the Senate of the United States will not hesitate to decide this question aright in the interest of the people and in the interest of the honor of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas, if he is willing, to state to the Senate what amount he thinks should be raised by additional taxation by this bill?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to agree that the amount that should be raised is $150,000,000. I believe it would be better and wiser for us to levy more taxes than to issue interest-bearing obligations of the Government, as is proposed in this bill; and if I had to take my choice between doing that and issuing bonds, upon which interest should be paid and which can not be redeemed by the Government for ten or fifteen years, I would rather increase the present taxation, because it is in the interest of a nation, as well as of an individual, to pay its debts, as far as it can, promptly when they are made, and not to postpone the day of payment. It seems to me that the effort to issue bonds by this bill, when there is really no necessity for it, is a deliberate effort to take advantage of the patriotic impulse of the people to accomplish a nefarious purpose.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me further, has he made any estimate, or have the majority of the committee who reported these provisions made any estimate, as to the amount of revenue to be raised from the excise tax upon gross receipts?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. All the experts I know of about the Senate have been employed by the Senators on the other side, and I have not been able to see one of them, except for a minute. I have not been able to get any information except what I have worked out myself, and the Senator knows how difficult it is for one pressed for time as I have recently been to make such an estimate.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have no disposition to make any elaborate presentation in connection with the pending bill or any feature of it at this time, but I have compiled a few figures which I desire to incorporate in the RECORD as bearing more or less upon the subject in hand. I prefer to enter into the details of the measure when it is being regularly considered at length.

Something has been said with reference to the probable realization from this bill. While I have the highest respect for the distinguished Senators who have been guessing with reference to this matter, I confess I have not a great deal of confidence in the entire accuracy of their figures. Time was when I was less acquainted with those able gentlemen, and then I had more faith in this regard. I learn that it is impossible, even in ordinary tariff bills, to correctly calculate with reference to an expected income. There are so many intervening incidents, not only war, but other circumstances, which make it absolutely impossible to present a reliable estimate; and here at this moment, with information altogether less full than that ordinarily presented in connection with a revenue measure, any announcement of the funds obtainable is nothing more or less than a guess. Such are the statements hazarded by Senators upon the other side.

The sums to which I wish to call attention now are found in a résumé of collections under recent revenue acts, and may be read in connection with the prophecies heretofore made regarding realizations from those measures. The last full fiscal year during which the McKinley bill was in operation terminated June 30, 1894. That measure produced in that year:

Customs	$131,807,758.88
Internal revenue	146,722,760.17
Miscellaneous	15,133,841.84
Total	293,664,360.89

The first full year of the operation of the Wilson bill ended June 30, 1896. The revenue received for that period was as follows:

Customs	$159,516,275.50
Internal revenue	145,850,780.29
Miscellaneous	18,441,083.92
Total	323,808,139.71

Then, examining the receipts of the year ending June 30, 1897, we have—

Customs	$176,316,393.18
Internal revenue	146,241,263.97
Miscellaneous	24,627,071.47
Total	365,807,836.32

When the Dingley bill was reported in the House of Representatives, its framers estimated a total revenue from it of $269,105,710, based upon the importations of 1896.

The Finance Committee of the Senate, speaking through the able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], differed with the House Committee and concluded that the House calculation was erroneous in a marked degree, and the same Senator estimated the producing capacity of the bill as amended in the Finance Committee to be $182,744,000.

The receipts from customs for the year 1897-98 up to May 1, 1898, have been $121,797,330.97.

Mr. GRAY. Two months short of a year?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. GRAY. Ten months?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

The receipts for the corresponding period of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, were $137,786,995.72, or $15,989,664.75 in excess of the later receipts.

The receipts for April, 1898, amounted to $14,193,976.99.

The receipts for the present month (May) will probably be about the same, perhaps a little less, and there is no reason to suppose that there will be any astonishing variances in June, certainly not in the direction of increased revenue; hence, if we estimate $30,000,000 as being the probable amount of customs receipts yet to come in for this fiscal year (and this seems to be a liberal calculation), the total receipts on that account will be something over $150,000,000.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] stated yesterday that he would be very well satisfied if the receipts were $180,000,000. Undoubtedly, and so would we all be better satisfied than we will be, because those receipts can not be more than $150,000,000. I have no doubt my friend would be still better satisfied if he thought the receipts would be $250,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated that I would be well satisfied if the receipts were $180,000,000 for the fiscal year ending in 1899.

Mr. WHITE. I understood the Senator to refer to this fiscal year.

Mr. ALLISON. I would be more than satisfied if that should happen this year, which would mean, of course, an enormous increase of receipts for this month and the next. I was not quite so innocent as to suppose that we would receive $180,000,000 this year.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood the Senator to figure out that there would be a surplus. Was that for this year or next year?

Mr. ALLISON. For the year 1899.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. For next year.

Mr. ALLISON. For the next year. I was not dealing at all with this year in my statement. I was dealing with next year.

Mr. WHITE. I did not assume any innocence upon the part of the Senator from Iowa, nor did I say that he stated that such an amount would be realized this year; and I believe the Senator from Iowa admits he would be better satisfied if we realized $180,000,000 this year. So, really, when we analyze it there is no special difference between us.

Mr. ALLISON. No. Will the Senator allow me for just a moment? I was giving the receipts and expenditures for the next fiscal year, and I stated in that analysis that the Secretary of the Treasury had estimated $200,000,000 from imports for the next fiscal year. I stated that that was an excessive estimate, in my judgment, without the intervention of these extraordinary circumstances. I stated that I should be well satisfied if it reached $180,000,000 next year, and I doubt very much whether it will reach $180,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. I feel exactly as does the Senator from Iowa about this whole subject. So we will have no difference.

Mr. ALDRICH. The estimate which the Senator has read, made by myself in connection with the act of 1897, was an estimate upon the bill as it then stood and not as it finally passed both Houses of Congress and became a law.

Mr. WHITE. It may be a question whether the bill as it finally became a law was not more of a revenue producer than the bill when it left the analytical hand of my friend the Senator from Rhode Island and fell into the Philistine camp.

Mr. ALDRICH. That may be, but the fact remains, nevertheless, that the estimate was made at a different stage than that of the final passage of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. There is no doubt that is correct.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether the estimate which he makes is on the basis of issuing $150,000,000 of greenbacks and coining the seigniorage, as reported by the majority, or on the basis of issuing bonds? I think a difference of at least $150,000,000 in the revenue will result from the adoption of one or the other plan. I think I can demonstrate that. I should like to know which it is; whether the estimate is predicated upon more money or more taxation and less money? Because the revenue will be largely affected by that.

Mr. ALLISON. I certainly have no objection to answering the Senator from Nevada. I stated yesterday that the Secretary of the Treasury, in his last annual report, estimated the gross receipts at $390,000,000, and that in that estimate he included $200,000,000 for duties upon imports; and I stated that in my judgment the $200,000,000 was in excess of what would be realized, and I said that I would be fully satisfied with $180,000,000. Of course, I made that estimate upon the situation as it is and not upon any new suggestions that are to be made hereafter by the Senator from Nevada, which I have no doubt will be valuable and may change my view.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from California allow me? At the time when we were putting out new money, fourteen years, while $500,000,000 of new silver was being put out, we retired over $1,200,000,000 of bonds and paid $60,000,000 of premiums to get them retired, applying on the debt $75,000,000 a year. Since we quit putting out new money we have gone into debt about $60,000,000 a year. So the difference between having a continuous supply of money and no money makes in the revenue probably one hundred and forty to one hundred and fifty million dollars a year. If greenbacks and silver certificates are put out, so as to make good times, that will make in your revenue next year at least $150,000,000. So all estimates as to future revenues, without taking that into consideration, must be entirely defective. We see what has gone by, and I think the difference in revenue will be more than $100,000,000 between bonds on the one hand and greenbacks and silver certificates on the other. I am going to demonstrate it hereafter. I think it is very foolish to commence making estimates until you know the basis.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, during the interesting interruption I have examined the remarks of the Senator from Iowa, and I find that he is, as usual, correct, and that he referred to the prophecy of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the next year, and, notwithstanding his faith in the present Administration, dissented from the Secretary.

Contrary to the expectations of that officer, the large tax imposed by the Wilson bill upon spirits has not reduced the revenue, for we find that the receipts for the present fiscal year up to May 1 on account of internal revenue amount to $138,767,465.34, while the receipts for the corresponding period of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, were $122,608,188.80, or a difference in favor of the present fiscal year on account of internal revenue amounting to $16,159,276.54.

Moreover, miscellaneous receipts for this year aggregate over $80,000,000, while for the corresponding period of the last fiscal year but $20,000,000 were received on this account. The increased miscellaneous receipts are accounted for by the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific Railroad settlements. About $63,000,000 were received in this way. Of that money, practically $30,000,000 of bonds have been paid, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury made before the Committee on Finance. Notwithstanding these large receipts, which aggregate for the present fiscal year, up to May 1, $340,926,950.18, as compared with $280,597,186.29, being the receipts for the corresponding period of the last fiscal year, showing a difference of $60,329,763.89, we find an excess of expenditures over receipts which amounted May 1 to $6,797,279.74, and this has been swollen, as shown by the Treasury statement of May 16, to $16,865,710.28.

At this rate there will be a deficiency at the expiration of the present fiscal year amounting to about $45,000,000; and when it is considered that outside of the money paid on account of bonds from the proceeds of the railroad sales about $33,000,000 went into the Treasury, it is apparent that our revenue plan is exceedingly defective, and that it is manifest that the existing tariff law, under prevailing conditions and without unusual aids, such as that arising from the railroad settlement, will not come within $75,000,000 of supplying the Treasury.

It is absolutely impossible to say with any sort of definiteness how much the present bill will produce.

When the Wilson law was under consideration, we were told by the most notable Republican members of this body that outside of the income tax it would net $100,000,000; that we would have a surplus of that amount; and, as I had occasion once before to say, I was frightened, Mr. President, not being then so well acquainted with our friends as I am at present, at the possibility of such an enormous surplus; and I said to myself, "What will become of us if a hundred millions of surplus are added to our woes?" But experience shows that Senators were mistaken; that their ability and their integrity combined were unable to solve the intricacies and mystifications of the future. So when one talks to me about receipts under this bill, I still doubt, and I prefer to see the money rather than to read authority, however high, even though it emanates from the distinguished source which has lately sought to enlighten us.

Mr. President, as we consider the bill in detail, and I presume we will soon inaugurate its sectional consideration, we shall examine various subjects which will no doubt prove interesting, and perhaps some of us will be able to learn much.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I appreciate as well as the Senator from California can how difficult it is to predict in advance the revenue to be derived from any general legislation upon tariff subjects. He has done me the honor to quote a statement which I made in regard to the revenue to be derived from the act of 1897. While I have no special pride in regard to my opinions or my capacity as a prophet, I desire to call his attention to the fact that the estimate which I made in regard to the act of 1897 was $182,000,000, as stated by that Senator. That included $8,000,000 to be derived from the duty on tea and twenty-seven or twenty-eight million dollars, as I remember it, to be derived from the additional tax upon beer and tobacco. The tea duties and the tax upon beer were left out of the bill by the action of the Senate itself. If we deduct these amounts from the $182,000,000, we find that the revenue I estimated would be derived from the other sources was approximately $150,000,000, or almost exactly the sum which the Senator now says was produced by the act of 1897.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Rhode Island will permit me, I will suggest that there were various other things added, and that the entire disruption of the sugar schedule, upon which the Senator from Rhode Island had expended so much skill and labor, perhaps accounts for the fact that the bill was expected to yield more than the Senator from Rhode Island had calculated, without even eliminating the items of which he speaks.

Mr. ALDRICH. The sugar schedule as finally adopted was substantially the same in its effect as a revenue-producing power as it was then in the bill, as the results have shown. So far as that particular item is concerned no change was made. Of course other changes were made, other additions and other deductions, but the estimate was not far wide of the mark, and I believe that the estimate made yesterday by the Senator from Iowa, an estimate which has not been denied by any Senator upon the other side, of $151,000,000 of additional revenue, or $150,000,000 in round numbers, from the bill as reported by the Finance Committee, outside of the amendments suggested by the majority of the committee, will be found to be approximately accurate, if the bill shall become a law.

Mr. WHITE. I trust the Senator from Rhode Island does not hold that the Senators upon this side of the Chamber are estopped to deny statements made on the other side merely because such assertions are not instantly traversed. I am not acquainted with any Senator on this side who thinks the estimates referred to are accurate, and if a call for proof were made, none could be furnished—it is all speculative.

Mr. ALDRICH. I asked the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] at the conclusion of his remarks whether he has made any estimate of the amount to be derived from the additional amendments proposed by himself in behalf of the majority of the committee. I should like to repeat the question to the Senator from California, whether he has made any estimate of the additional revenue to be derived from that source?

Mr. WHITE. As we proceed with the bill and each schedule is under consideration, I will give my opinions. I do not know whether they will be so accurate as those of the Senator from Rhode Island when he made his estimate of $100,000,000 surplus from the Wilson Act, but I will give them for whatever they may be worth when we arrive at the proper point.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from California suggested that the act of 1897 was changed somewhat after I made this estimate. If the act of 1897 was changed, what does he say about the act of 1894, after I made the suggestion, which was entirely transformed in this body and adopted by the other without dotting an "i" or crossing a "t"? It was made an entirely different measure from the first line to the last. I do not remember whether the Senator from California was one of the gentlemen who brought about that change, but a change so marked and so radical was never made, I think it is safe to say, in this body in connection with any measure as was made in the act of 1894. Even the name was changed.

Mr. WHITE. There is not very much in a name, as the Senator from Rhode Island will probably admit, in this connection, so far as the revenue capacity of a measure is concerned. The Senator from Rhode Island made his estimate of $100,000,000 surplus in the face of these additions to the bill. It was at the very close of the discussion and when the Senator from Rhode Island, and I might also add the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] whom I see in his seat, chided us for having made these additions, which would produce a terrifying surplus; and after they had made those statements not a "t" was crossed or an "i" was dotted, and the money was never received.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will not put my recollection against that of the Senator from California, but I will make another suggestion in this connection, which is that the income tax, from which we all expected to receive a considerable amount of revenue, was by the action of another body outside of this Chamber afterwards eliminated from the act.

Mr. WHITE. I will refresh the memory of the Senator from Rhode Island by reminding him that he said emphatically at that time that this was outside of the income tax, and I can refer him to the RECORD without the slightest difficulty.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would be very glad to see it in the course of this discussion.

Mr. WHITE. I have done it once, and I will do it again.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, let the reading of the bill be proceeded with.

Mr. PETTUS. Before the reading is commenced, I should like to learn what is the understanding of the gentleman in charge of the bill as to when amendments can be made and what effect amendments adopted now have on those which are to be offered hereafter.

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday it was unanimously agreed that the bill should be read for amendment and that the committee amendments should be first considered, and then other amendments will be in order. Of course under our system of dealing with these bills there is no difficulty in going back at any time or passing over any particular schedule or any particular amendment. If any Senator desires so to do, of course it will be passed over for the time being.

Mr. PETTUS. When an amendment offered by the committee has been adopted, then what?

Mr. ALLISON. It will remain in the bill, having been made as in Committee of the Whole, and will be voted upon again in the Senate when the bill comes into the Senate; or by unanimous consent, if it is deemed necessary to make any subsequent change, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, can go back and again consider the amendment. I do not think there will be any possibility of disturbance in dealing with the bill if we can only proceed rapidly.

Mr. PETTUS. My only purpose was that the adoption of an amendment proposed by the committee should not be conclusive on the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. It will not be.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think estimates of the probable receipts from the tax bill on business before we have some idea of what the business is going to be are premature. If you put out more money you will have more business and you will have more revenue from your business. There are two schemes in the pending bill, one to issue bonds, which will absorb money and not put out money, and the other to put out $142,000,000 of new money. That will make a difference of at least $150,000,000 in the revenues under a bill like this. If you have a depression of business, as you will have if you offer bonds to absorb money now in circulation and make times tighter, because people will invest in the bonds, that will make business dull. If, on the contrary, you put out new money, you will be able to collect large revenues from your business, and before we know whether we are to have tools for business, we had better not be estimating what we can collect from the business.

I shall take occasion, before the debate is concluded, to give from statistics some little history of the revenue as connected with the volume of money and its effect from time to time. Of course if you are going to cut off business practically, as you will by offering investments for money and draw it out of circulation by your bonds, then you must make heavier taxation and you will get less money with your heavier taxation.

Mr. WILSON. May I interrupt the Senator to ask him a question? Does he think that to tax the deposits in the various banks will cause a contraction of the currency?

Mr. STEWART. I do not think the tax proposed on banks, a small tax, will have the effect of diminishing the deposits. It is a part of the circulating medium of the currency. All the expansion is bank expansion. That is the bubble which is the storm center of panics. When the last panic came, we had out forty-five hundred million dollars of bank credits, with $500,000,000, in round numbers, of reserves, and how much of the four thousand million dollars represented real cash in the banks and how much was mere wind we never knew. But we do know that when the storm came the wind subsided, and they were all broken.

I do not believe in large bank credits. I think there should be a supervision over banks, and they should not be allowed to loan more than 50 per cent of their money. They should keep money enough there so that they would not expand and create storm centers to be followed by panics. But I am not speaking with respect to that point. I do not think the tax here proposed will have any material effect. I am speaking of the business question. If you put out bonds by a popular loan, and people invest their money in that loan instead of investing it in business, it cuts into the Treasury. In that way you will get much less revenue than if you put out new money. The time has come when we ought to have new money. We ought to put out new money and let business revive. Then it would be possible to make an estimate of the probable revenue to be derived. Here it is the wildest possible guessing, and that will be the case until we know the basis upon which the revenue is to be produced, whether it is to be produced on a falling market, with contraction or dull times, or on a rising market and buoyant times, when everybody is busy, because that condition would, in my opinion, make a difference of at least $150,000,000 in the revenues to be obtained under the pending bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 1, page 1, line 7, before the word "or," to strike out "stored;" so as to read:

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be paid, in lieu of the tax of $1 now imposed by law, a tax of $2 on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, brewed or manufactured, or sold, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law. And section 3339 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 13, after the word "accordingly," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act a discount of 7½ per cent shall be allowed upon all sales of the stamps provided for by this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 2, to strike out the following paragraph:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe and furnish suitable stamps denoting the payment of the internal-revenue tax imposed by this section; and until such stamps are prepared and furnished, the stamps heretofore used to denote the payment of the internal-revenue tax on fermented liquors may be stamped or imprinted with a suitable device to denote the new rate of tax, and shall be affixed to all packages containing fermented liquors on which the tax imposed by this act is paid. And any brewer having possession of unaffixed stamps heretofore issued for the payment of the tax upon fermented liquors shall present the same to the collector of the district, who shall receive them at the price paid for such stamps by the purchasers and issue in lieu thereof new or imprinted stamps at the rate provided by this section; and if any packages of fermented liquor shall be sold, stored, or removed for consumption or sale after the passage of this act stamped only with the stamps hitherto used for the payment of the tax upon fermented liquor, and which have not received the imprint or device denoting the new rate of tax, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, by assessment or otherwise, cause to be collected the additional tax imposed by this act upon such packages: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act a discount of 5 per cent shall be allowed upon all sales of the stamps provided for by this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 3, to insert the following:

SPECIAL TAXES.

SEC. —. That special taxes shall be, and hereby are, imposed as follows, that is to say:

1. Bankers using or employing a capital not exceeding the sum of $50,000 shall pay $100 for each license; when using or employing a capital exceeding $50,000, for every additional thousand dollars in excess of $50,000, $2. Every person, firm, or company, and every incorporated or other bank, having a place of business where credits are opened by the deposit or collection of money or currency, subject to be paid or remitted upon draft, check, or order, or where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes, or where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or sale, shall be a banker under this act: Provided, That any savings bank having no capital stock, and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning or investing the same for the benefit of its depositors, and which does no other business of banking, shall not be subject to this tax.

2. Brokers shall pay $50. Every person, firm, or company, whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion-coined money, bank notes, promissory notes, or other securities, for themselves or others, shall be regarded as a broker: Provided, That any person having paid the special tax as a banker shall not be required to pay the special tax as a broker.

3. Pawnbrokers shall pay $20. Every person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money lent thereon, shall be deemed a pawnbroker.

4. Commercial brokers shall pay $20. Any person or firm whose business it is as a broker to negotiate sales or purchases of goods, wares, produce, or merchandise, or to negotiate freights and other business for the owners of vessels, or for the shippers or consignors or consignees of freight carried by vessels, shall be regarded as a commercial broker under this act.

5. Custom-house brokers shall pay $10. Every person whose occupation it is, as the agent of others, to arrange entries and other custom house papers, or transact business at any port of entry relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded a customhouse broker.

6. Foreign insurance agents shall pay $50. Every person who shall act as agent of any foreign fire, marine, life, mutual, or other insurance company or companies shall be regarded as a foreign insurance agent.

7. Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease.

8. The proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100. Every building, space, tent, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances are exhibited shall be regarded as a circus: Provided, That no special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be imposed for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or District.

9. Proprietors or agents of all other public exhibitions or shows for money not enumerated in this section shall pay $10: Provided, That a special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall not exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be required for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

10. Proprietors of bowling alleys and billiard rooms shall pay $5 for each alley or table. Every building or place where bowls are thrown or billiards played, and open to the public with or without price, shall be regarded as a bowling alley or billiard room, respectively.

After the reading of the above amendment had been begun,

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, are amendments to the bill now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLS in the chair). The Senate is now considering the amendments proposed by the Committee on Finance. An amendment to the amendment of the committee will be in order.

During the reading of the foregoing amendment, when the Secretary had read the sixth paragraph, relating to foreign insurance,

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that paragraph be passed over for the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paragraph will be passed over.

The reading of the amendment having been concluded,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment? In the absence of objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

TOBACCO, CIGARS, CIGARETTES, AND SNUFF.

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act——

Mr. MARTIN. I should like to have the tobacco schedule passed over for the present, if agreeable to the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Virginia desires that all the sections relating to tobacco shall be passed over, let that course be taken.

Mr. MARTIN. They are sections 2 and 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, sections 2 and 3, being the tobacco schedule, will be passed over.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes: all relating to tobacco.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All of the tobacco schedule will be passed over.

Mr. BACON. Am I to understand that the Senate is now acting upon the amendments?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. LINDSAY. We are agreeing to all amendments to which no one objects.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree that the tobacco schedule may be passed over.

Mr. BACON. I understand, anyhow, that under the liberal practice of the Senate when we have finished the amendments to any section it will still be considered as in order to move further amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, any amendment offered by any Senator.

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BACON. Although the amendment proposed by the committee has been agreed to, it will still be open to amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. The rule is to go through the bill and act upon the committee amendments first, at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment is open to amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from Georgia speaks of having a distinct agreement on that point.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of parliamentary law, but of the liberal practice of the Senate. Of course under parliamentary law when an amendment has once been agreed to it can not be further amended, but under the liberal practice of the Senate the rule has been acted upon to permit a Senator, even after the amendment has been adopted by the Senate, to offer still further amendments to it, and I understand that to be the intention in this instance.

Mr. ALLISON. That I understand to be the practice of the Senate. Of course it is usual, where an amendment is proposed by a committee and a Senator desires to amend it, that he offer it at the moment. But I see no special objection to going back to any particular amendment and offering an amendment which adds to it or perhaps may change it in any way. In other words, I think we shall facilitate the consideration of the bill by acting with liberality as respects the offering of amendments.

Mr. BACON. Then I will now ask unanimous consent, in order that there may be no mistake about it, that that shall be the rule adopted in this case; that after we have gone through with the bill and the amendments proposed by the committee have been acted upon, it shall still be in order for any Senator to offer any amendment he wishes to either one of those amendments.

Mr. TURPIE. Or to the bill itself.

Mr. BACON. Or to the bill itself.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly any amendment will be in order at any time to the bill itself, but suppose the Committee of the Whole shall agree to a particular amendment relating to a duty or a tax?

Mr. BACON. That is exactly what we want to have the right to amend.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator desire that the consent agreement shall go to the point of taking up that amendment again and striking it out, or increasing it, or diminishing it?

Mr. BACON. That has been the very liberal and elastic practice under which the Senate has heretofore acted on a great many bills equally as important as this measure.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing it shall be the rule now so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BACON. I am simply asking unanimous consent in order that we may not be misled. When I say "misled," of course I do not mean that we would be intentionally misled by anyone, but in order that we may make no mistake. In other words, under that practice a Senator would prefer not to interrupt the progress of the bill in the consideration of the amendments of the committee by offering individual amendments until they had all been finished.

Mr. ALLISON. The only difficulty about the matter is that we shall practically make no progress in that way except in the reading of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa, if all the amendments are to remain open, for what purpose the bill is now being read?

Mr. ALLISON. That is substantially the suggestion I make. For instance, we pass over the schedule respecting beer and the schedule relating to certain special taxes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Banks.

Mr. ALLISON. Banks, etc. Of course, any Senator, later on in the consideration of the bill, can move to add any special item that he chooses to add to it, but to go back to reconsider everything that has been done, it seems to me, is too wide a latitude; we would be making no progress at all.

Mr. CULLOM. It is absolutely foolish to be spending time in the reading of the bill and not make any progress in its consideration. We ought to consider the bill with a view of passing it at some time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If it is the intention of gentlemen on the other side to pursue an iron rule in this matter perhaps it would be better to have the thing gone over and have the contests one by one as we reach them. What action I would take in a given matter might depend somewhat upon what action was taken upon a subsequent amendment. I would be willing to let that amendment go with the idea that when the other was disposed of I would know what action I wanted to take on the first amendment. But if after we pass an amendment I have no right to take it up again, I think everybody ought to have notice of that fact, and we will have these things out as we go, line by line.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly, Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. When an arrangement was being made about the treatment of this bill, the Senator from Iowa said that he should be inclined, in case there was occasion for it, to go back, although an amendment had been agreed to, and open it; and I have no doubt he will be glad to do so if any occasion arises for it. I think it is a great deal better to leave it in that way.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator's inclination is a somewhat doubtful quantity. He might be in a better temper one day than another. He might be very amiable when one amendment was taken up. I do not think it ought to be left to his inclination. I think we ought to have an understanding about the matter, so as to preserve the rights of Senators.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it would be very much better to leave it to be determined whenever the consent is asked to go back to an amendment than to have an agreement now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then one objection could cut a Senator out of his right to offer an amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think that would be very much better than to have a universal agreement that any amendment may be returned to. I do not think any trouble will arise in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say to the Senator from Arkansas, who is equally and perhaps more responsible for this bill than I am, that I shall endeavor to be as amiable as possible on each and every day of its consideration.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have great faith in the Senator's amiability, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no disposition, having nominal charge of the bill, to use the power, if it be a power, to interfere in the slightest degree with the wish of Senators generally.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then, let it be understood by unanimous consent now, that a Senator has a right to go back to the amendments and not depend upon anybody's amiability. I have great faith in the Senator's amiability, but there may be some one not so amiable as the Senator from Iowa, and there may be objections. Of course, if the bill is to be considered under the regular rule as to amendments, any Senator can prevent our going back to an amendment already agreed to, unless we have an understanding to that effect.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me? What is the sense, then, of having the bill read except for our own information? Why can not each of us read it separately as many of us have done, those on the committee especially? If we are to return to every amendment it stands for nothing when we have agreed to it. If a motion is hereafter to be in order to strike out or amend an amendment which has been agreed to, for what purpose are we having the bill read? Is it not better to wait until we are ready in some form to pass upon these questions? Or perhaps by agreement we can pass to some of the other amendments first.

I understand perfectly what the Senator from Arkansas refers to when he says that he may desire to offer certain amendments, or to strike out certain provisions, provided certain other amendments are passed upon favorably. There are amendments which perhaps those who may be opposed to some of these prior amendments would desire to have first considered. I make that suggestion to the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me one moment, I think the proceedings that have always been adopted on these bills are very easily understood and preserve the rights of everyone. I have never seen them in any way violated. For example, it is understood that if any committee amendment is objected to by any Senator while the bill is being read, that amendment will be passed over. Where the amendment has already been agreed to, the question is as to giving unanimous consent at this time to go back to reopen the question on an amendment adopted. Let us leave that in the discretion of the Senator from Iowa who has charge of the bill, and if he does not agree to it when asked by a Senator, the right of the Senator is absolutely preserved by determining to offer the amendment in the Senate when the bill has passed from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But, may I ask the Senator from West Virginia, suppose a Senator stands quiescent when an amendment of the committee is read and agreed to?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Suppose he is absent?

Mr. WOLCOTT. His rights are not abated at all.

Mr. FAULKNER. Not at all. When the bill has been reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole, he has the right to offer any amendment to an amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, and therefore he is absolutely protected in his right. For that reason, if the Senator who has charge of the bill saw that it was really an honest, legitimate attempt to amend the bill and to test the sense of the Senate upon the question desired by any Senator in offering the amendment, in order to avoid a vote in the Senate when the bill passed from the Committee of the Whole, he would, of course, at once consent that the amendment should be reconsidered that was adopted and have it open to amendment then. That has always been the practical action of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not apprehend that there is anybody in the Senate who wants to take advantage of anyone else in the consideration of the bill. All that I want is that if we are going to take up the bill for consideration we shall really consider it with a view to coming to the end of the consideration and passing the bill at some time within a reasonable date, and any iron rule about it, I trust, is not going to be observed. I do not think that anybody is inclined to do so. I want to have the bill considered as though we were doing business, and not be going over it with no sort of inclination to do anything except to hear it read.

Mr. BACON. I do not think it was the understanding with any considerable number of Senators that the bill was being read for the purpose of final action. I desire to say that when the bill was first taken up, the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Missouri were here talking together, and I leaned over the desk and asked them if their understanding was that the bill was then taken up for final action on the amendments as in Committee of the Whole, and they said, "No." Acting upon that remark, I myself did not form any other conclusion. If the liberal design stated by Senators is that by which we are to be guided, it seems to me the simple way is to consent to that course and not leave it for future understanding.

Of course if that is not to be done, and if the bill is up for final consideration on the amendments so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned, Senators ought to know it. They are not in their seats, and certainly do not understand that the bill is being acted upon in that way. I shall myself ask that the bill be resumed at the beginning, because we did not so understand it. I am perfectly willing for it to continue from the point to which we have now progressed if the understanding is such as I suggest, but otherwise we ought to start over, and let Senators know it. Let us have a call of the Senate, if need be, in order that Senators may be informed of the fact that this important bill is up for final action so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The questions raised are very legitimately raised at this time. The Senator from Arkansas, in his opening remarks before the bill was read, clearly outlined the idea that if the estimate of the Senator from Iowa was correct, it might be the opinion of many Senators that the totality of the tax raised was too great; that certain amendments which are here reported were agreed to by the committee tentatively, with a view of securing them provided taxes were not raised to a certain extent by certain other amendments in the bill. Take, for instance, the license, we will say, on bankers. If it shall turn out to be true that the gross receipts are to be taxed, it might be well that certain Senators would say, "Having taxed the gross receipts, we do not care to license the calling;" or, if you like, as to adhesive stamps, which are required to be attached to receipts and which the bill requires shall be used by every shipper and every carrier, members of the Senate may well say, "We have taxed gross receipts; therefore we do not care to pass this stamp law, which is somewhat vexatious."

Therefore I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas and all who share his views whether it would not be wise at this stage of the bill to pass to page 79, which covers the amendments reported by the majority of the committee seeking to impose a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent on the gross receipts of all corporations, and let the Senate discuss and act upon that particular amendment. All of us would then be left very much more free to act upon the other amendments reported in the measure.

The bill is reported by the Senator from Iowa on behalf of the committee, but, as he stated very lucidly in his opening remarks on yesterday, some of the amendments met the view of himself and his party colleagues, and other amendments, which were also passed by the majority of the committee, he opposes, and the two sets of amendments are such that all of us would vote differently if one set or the other were adopted, and nobody wants both adopted. Therefore I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas, if he be ready, whether we might not pass to amendment No. 177 and discuss the question first of the levy of the tax of a quarter of 1 per cent on gross receipts.

Mr. BATE. Before we pass from this question, it seems to me it ought to be very thoroughly understood, so that Senators may know what their rights are. I heard it declared just now, when one of the amendments was read, that in the absence of objection it was passed. Now, if I want to return to that amendment and offer an amendment to it, am I precluded therefrom? That is the very proposition, and it is the one upon which this debate has sprung up. I think those of us who desire to have amendments placed on the bill, whether it is an amendment to a committee amendment or otherwise, ought to have a distinct understanding as to what our rights are, and whether we can do so or not. The question now is whether we can put on an amendment to an amendment which we have passed upon. I do not understand the rule and practice to be as the Senator from West Virginia states it. I understand that we have our rights in the Senate separately and apart from those we have as in Committee of the Whole, and that no one can move an amendment to that which has been passed upon in Committee of the Whole unless he gives notice of that fact before the bill is reported to the Senate. All these things ought to be understood.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from Tennessee is entirely mistaken. The rule is that notice only is required. Where a large number of amendments have been made as in Committee of the Whole, if a Senator wants to object to any of them and have them reread for adoption in the Senate, he gives notice that he will reserve the right to have a separate vote upon certain amendments. That is done only to avoid the necessity of voting upon all the amendments separately in the Senate. But his whole rights are reserved in the Senate to amend any amendment that was adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BATE. Do I understand, then, that it is concluded and agreed such shall be the rule, that if we desire to put on amendments to the bill after it gets into the Senate, we can do so regardless of the fact whether the amendment has been presented before or not?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes.

Mr. BATE. That is the point. I think we had better have this matter clearly understood, so that we will get into no squabble about it afterwards. It is now up, and it ought to be disposed of finally.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In response to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, without consultation with my associates on the committee, I will say that his suggestion, as I understand it, strikes me very favorably. I think it would be a wise thing for us to take up the question on which we know the members of the committee to be divided. We might discuss that question and have it determined by the Senate. When the Senate has determined that question one way or the other, then it is easy for anyone to understand about what his policy will be as to the remainder of the bill. It will be impossible, however, to enter into the discussion of that question to-day, as I understand another order of the Senate is to take place at 3 o'clock. So it would be impossible for any one of the gentlemen who propose to present this case from our side to conclude an argument in the limited time now left. On what page does the Senator from Colorado propose we shall begin?

Mr. WOLCOTT. At amendment No. 177, on page 59.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is what I understood.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me make a suggestion. We have proceeded somewhat with the bill to-day. The Senator from Arkansas expresses his own opinion as to proceeding immediately to the controverted amendments. I do not know but that that may be a wise thing to do. I think it may possibly facilitate the consideration of the bill. But as respects the controverted amendments, the inconsistencies of one set of amendments as against another set will not appear for some time in the bill. So I suggest that we go on with the bill as we are going on now, having the amendments read, and passing upon them as we choose to pass on them. Let us proceed in that way during the remainder of this day, which will give the Senator an opportunity to consult with his colleagues as to the time when we shall take up amendment No. 177; and it will give us also an opportunity to have a little further consultation upon the subject. So far as we proceed, pending that arrangement, it will be understood that any Senator, by unanimous consent, can go back and recall any amendment that has been agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Which shall have been agreed to.

Mr. BATE. Does not that require unanimous consent, though? That is my point.

Mr. ALLISON. I am willing that that should be done now.

Mr. BATE. I should like to have that understood.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is what the Senator from Iowa is now suggesting.

Mr. BATE. In the case of the amendment which has just been acted upon, and which it was announced by the Chair was passed, can we without the unanimous consent of the Senate offer an amendment to it?

Mr. ALLISON. If unanimous consent be necessary, I ask that it be now given, so that no one can be taken by surprise as respects anything that we have considered in the Senate.

Mr. BATE. My suggestion is in regard to the future, not so much as to that amendment. But that is an illustration.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose that we go on this afternoon, having the bill read and amending it, if we agree to amendments, and so proceed to-morrow, unless in the meantime we all agree that it is wiser to take up the controverted amendments; and whatever progress we make to-morrow or to-day, it will be the privilege of any Senator to go back and ask for a reconsideration of any amendment which has been agreed to.

Mr. BATE. Then the view of the Senator, as I understand, is that the amendments already passed are to be considered open whenever so desired, and that we are not to be precluded from recurring to them by the previous action of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to that. If any Senator wishes to recur to any of the amendments, I shall not object to his doing so. I think there will be no difficulty in dealing with this matter. I suggest, therefore, that we proceed with the consideration of the bill, taking up the amendments of the committee as they are reached in the reading; and if any Senator desires that an amendment may be passed over, it may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 14, section 4.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 15, section 5, line 25, after the word "shall," to strike out "upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $50;" and in lieu thereof to insert:

Be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

So as to read:

SEC. 5. That if any person or persons shall make, sign, or issue, or cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped for denoting the tax hereby imposed thereon, or without having thereupon an adhesive stamp to denote said tax, such person or persons shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court, etc.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Iowa a moment. I suggest to him the propriety of inserting in section 5, after the word "shall," in line 19, the word "knowingly." That section provides:

That if any person or persons shall make, sign, or issue, or cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, * * * such person or persons shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, etc.

It is not an uncommon thing for a person to make a contract and through an oversight, not intentionally, to omit the stamp. Such a person should not be convicted of an offense. He should be convicted only in a case where he shall knowingly "make, sign, or issue, or cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document," etc., without a proper stamp.

Mr. CAFFERY. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska, instead of "knowingly" to insert "with intent to defraud the Government." I think that would make it clearer.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it might be inferred that a man who knowingly declines or fails to put on the proper stamp intends to defraud the Government. That is the natural inference that would follow. I do not want to offer the amendment myself, but I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the word "knowingly" be inserted after the word "shall," in section 5, page 15, line 19.

Mr. ALLISON. The penalty imposed is a very light one, and it seems to me that persons who ought to affix these stamps and fail to do so should be subjected to some penalty.

Mr. ALLEN. I should have no objection to their being subjected to the payment of a small sum for failure to do so, but this is in the nature of a misdemeanor, and it is made punishable. We are introducing an altogether new system of business to many of the people of this country. The older men remember the old stamp tax, but since that time a great many thousands and hundreds of thousands of men have engaged in business who know nothing about it whatever, and it would be strange now to introduce an entirely new system, that a man should be punished because of a mere oversight in not affixing the proper stamp to an instrument he executes.

So, if it is in order, Mr. President, I move to insert after the word "shall," in section 5, line 19, page 15, the word "knowingly."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, section 5, line 19, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert "knowingly;" so as to read:

That if any person or persons shall knowingly make, sign, or issue, or cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, etc.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I call attention to the fact that on page 24 of the bill it is provided that if the stamp has been omitted "by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States," the instrument can be taken to the collector, the stamp placed upon it, and the penalty remitted.

Mr. ALLEN. But I do not think a penalty ought to be inflicted unless the man is culpable. Before we inflict a penalty upon any person, he ought to have done or omitted to do something knowingly.

I do not want to detain the Senate or delay the passage of this bill, but there is another very difficult question connected with this section, and that is this: Congress can not pass a law that will make an instrument which is not properly stamped void in a State court.

Mr. ALDRICH. We are not trying to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. The State courts have decided against that, and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided against that. The State courts will not enforce a law of that kind.

Mr. ALLISON. If they will not, it will not become competent evidence. That is all.

Mr. ALLEN. The State courts will hold that it is competent evidence regardless of the stamp.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The decisions are not uniform. Some have held that such papers would be competent evidence and others that they would not be.

Mr. ALLEN. But the Federal courts have held, as well as a majority of the State courts, that you can not tax their machinery and stop their procedure.

Mr. CHILTON. It does not occur to me that it would be useful to insert the word "knowingly," in section 5, as the Senator from Nebraska proposes. It might tend to confuse matters. The old statute read:

That any person or persons who shall make, sign, or issue, or who shall cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever.

That is the language of this provision. One of the court decisions on that clause of the old statute used this language:

This section is penal in its character both as to the forfeiture of the pecuniary penalty and as to the forfeiture of the instrument, document, or paper, etc.

Again it is said:

The omission to put the proper stamp upon any instrument should be deemed presumptive evidence of an intent to evade the statute, but nothing more. It is to be presumed that the parties were aware of the requirements of the statute. Thus, knowing the law, their omission to obey it must, in the absence of any explanations, be deemed willful and with intent to evade its requirements.

I also read from Bump's notes on the old statute the following comment:

The provision invalidating the instrument is punitory and can not be extended beyond the expressed will of the legislature. It is a punishment visited upon the offender to insure the payment of the duty imposed, and the offense is made to consist not in the accidental, but in the intentional, omission of the stamp with the purpose of evading such duty. This is the import of the language of the act.

Mr. ALLEN. Of course that is exactly so.

Mr. CHILTON. In other words, that statute was construed by the courts as it originally existed—and the new one is but a reproduction of the old statute—to mean that the act must be done with intent to evade the statute; and unless that element exists, no crime is committed.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose an indictment were found in the exact language of this statute, does the Senator from Texas suppose a man could be convicted under it?

Mr. CHILTON. I think he could.

Mr. ALLEN. I have yet to learn that an indictment can be sustained against any person for an offense for a felony or a misdemeanor which does not contain in it the element of intentionally or knowingly doing wrong; and any court of respectable standing would sustain a demurrer to an indictment or a motion to quash it. The element of knowingly doing wrong must be made to appear upon the face of the indictment before it can be sustained.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] who always watches me very closely—and I am glad to have him do so—shakes his head at that, but I am not prepared to accept even so eminent an opinion as his to the contrary of what I have stated.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to call the attention of the Senator to a case on this subject which I recollect, under a statute to prohibit the sale of liquor to minors, where a saloon keeper was indicted for selling liquor to a man who had all the appearances of not being a minor—a large man with a full beard, and all that, who stated that he was of age. On the trial it turned out that he was not of age, and the saloon keeper was convicted. The case was taken to the supreme court of Wisconsin on the precise proposition that is made here by the Senator from Nebraska, and the court held that the conviction was a proper one, that the offense was an absolute statutory offense, and that the saloon keeper was bound to know whether a person was or was not a qualified drinker. The court used that expression in that opinion.

Mr. ALLEN. The class of liquor cases which have been given to the world recently by the different States can hardly be taken as a test of the proper procedure on an indictment for an ordinary offense. I say, with all due respect, that many of the courts of the States, under an inflamed public sentiment in some instances, in the prosecution of liquor cases, have gone clear outside of the rules of ordinary criminal procedure; and I have no doubt the case the Senator refers to is one of them. I do say this, however, that possibly, with an exception of that kind—and the exception simply proves the rule—there is no instance where you can draw an indictment or information against a man for a crime or a misdemeanor, and not disclose on the face of that indictment or information the element of intentional wrongdoing, that the court will not sustain a demurrer to it or a motion to quash it, according to the practice of the particular jurisdiction.

Mr. SPOONER. It depends upon the statute.

Mr. ALLEN. And outside of that it is absolutely wrong. Take some man unfamiliar with the drafting of instruments, take, for instance, a man who makes a deed probably once or twice in his life, or a promissory note possibly not over once in a year, and punish him for a failure to affix a stamp upon that instrument when he does it entirely unconscious of the fact that such an instrument requires a stamp; and that is wrong. He ought to be required, of course, to procure a stamp and affix it to the instrument, but he should not be taken before a court and punished for a failure to observe that requirement.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLEN. I will.

Mr. VEST. Take the case of a man who imports goods through a port of entry into the United States who does not pay the duty; the goods are found upon him and he is carried before a United States commissioner, bound over, and then indicted by a grand jury; would it be a defense for him to say that he did not know that that was the import law of the country, but would he not be convicted notwithstanding his attempt to show that he did not know that to be the law? Is not that done every day?

Mr. ALLEN. I am not saying that would be a defense under those circumstances. We are not here administering laws; we are here making laws, or endeavoring to make them, and I submit to the sense of justice of the Senator from Missouri that it would be a travesty to take some farmer in the State of Missouri or elsewhere, some man unfamiliar with business forms and proceedings, take him before a court of justice, and punish him because he failed to fix an adhesive stamp to a deed or to any other instrument he might execute? I have more respect for the feelings of the ordinary man than to do that. I think he ought to be compelled, of course, to purchase the stamp and affix it; and I think if he willfully and knowingly refused to stamp the instrument, he should be convicted, but I would not convict a man simply because he was ignorant of business forms. That is all I have to say about the matter. That is my view of it.

Mr. VEST. I have simply to say that when you come to apply the principles of general equity to the revenue laws, either as to imports or as to internal revenue, and adopt the rule suggested by my friend from Nebraska, you nullify the whole business. You can not carry them out at all. Take, for instance, a case which I have in mind now, which excited great attention in this country, and in which a personal friend of mine was involved. He was coming over from Europe, and had some goods. He asked a person in whom he had great confidence, who had been to Europe several times, whether certain articles were dutiable or not. That person told him they were not. When he made his return, as the custom is on steamships, the customs officer came around and took the statement of the passenger, who did not put those goods in his return; in other words, he believed his friend was right when he said they were not dutiable. The goods were found upon him at the port of entry, and he was carried before a commissioner and bound over before a grand jury; and the court held, as it has held hundreds and thousands of times, that the party saying he did not know that was the law was no defense. You could not collect the revenue if the law were otherwise.

Take the issue which my friend suggests, that a man is to be acquitted because he says he did not know the law required a stamp to be put on certain instruments; how are you ever going to meet that issue? Who knows that? He alone knows it. How are you to prove that he did not know it, or that he did know it? The revenue laws of every civilized country in the world are administered upon the idea that a citizen must know what the law is; and if you permit any such defense as the Senator from Nebraska now suggests, you simply nullify the whole system.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Missouri entirely misapprehends my position. I understand that no man can plead ignorance of the law as a defense; that every man is conclusively presumed to know the law, and that he will not be heard in any court to say that he did not. That question is settled; but that is not the question before the Senate at this time. That is a question of administering a law which is already made—a statute. Here we are engaged, not in the work of construing statutes which have been made, but in making statutes.

Now, what is the position of the Senator from Missouri? That every man is to be subjected to indictment and to punishment for omitting, however innocently, an adhesive stamp from an instrument he may execute. I do not believe that an innocent man should be punished for anything of the kind. I believe that a man who omits ignorantly or in an excusable way to affix an adhesive stamp to an instrument ought to be compelled to make the loss good to the Government, and to do it promptly; but if the omission takes place under such circumstances as to make it evident that he was innocent of any criminal purpose, he should not be punished for it. If the revenue laws of any civilized nation on the face of the earth, or semicivilized nation, are to the contrary, they are wrong, and there is no excuse for them in that respect.

What this Government wants is revenue. It wants every citizen to perform his duty, and I want to see every man perform his duty under this bill if it shall become a law; but I do not want to see a man who is not familiar with conveyances and business forms, who is as innocent as a babe, taken up and punished before a court on account of his mere ignorance, if he indemnifies the Government.

Possibly I ought not to have said anything about this matter, but let it go entirely. This, however, is so manifestly wrong, so manifestly unjust, so manifestly inexcusable, whatever the decisions may be, whatever refinements Senators may indulge in, that I believed it to be my duty to call attention to it; and having done so, I am satisfied to let it go.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I suggest that there should be added after the word "tax," in line 24, the words "with intent to evade the provisions of this act." I see those words are to be found in some of the old acts in regard to stamps in 1864, 1865, 1866, and along there.

Mr. ALLEN. I think you will find that language running all through those acts.

Mr. CHILTON. I suggest that the words I have stated be added, and I think they will meet the ideas of the Senator from Nebraska and perhaps be proper in themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, section 5, line 24, after the word "tax," it is proposed to insert "with intent to evade the provisions of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska withdraw the amendment submitted by him?

Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw my amendment, the amendment submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] having been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is withdrawn. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee in line 25, on page 15, section 5, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 5, on page 16, line 5, after the word "shall," to strike out "be deemed invalid and of no effect" and insert "not be competent evidence in any court;" so as to read:

And such instrument, document, or paper, as aforesaid, shall not be competent evidence in any court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Before proceeding with the reading of section 6, I desire to say at this point, in view of some differences respecting what I intended yesterday to include in the estimates of revenues and expenditures, distinguishing between ordinary revenues and expenditures and the expenditures for war purposes, that I intended to have inserted two tables upon that subject, but I did not do so in my observations, and therefore the Reporter very properly did not insert the tables. I think it will, perhaps, prevent confusion in the future if I ask leave now to have the tables printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, such will be the order of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

ORDINARY APPROPRIATIONS, SECOND SESSION FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

Agricultural	$3,509,202.00

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 6, page 18, line 16, after the word "shall," to strike out "on" and insert "be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon;" in line 17, after the word "thereof," to insert "shall;" in line 19, before the word "be," to insert "shall;" and in line 20, before the word "hard," to strike out "to" and insert "at;" so as to make the clause read:

Then, and in every such case, every person so offending and every person knowingly and willfully aiding, abetting, or assisting in committing any such offense as aforesaid shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall forfeit the said counterfeit stamps and the articles upon which they are placed, and shall be punished by fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment and confinement at hard labor not exceeding five years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. I think the word "offense," in line 15, page 18, should be pluralized, because the penalty attaches to all the offenses enumerated in the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 18, line 15, strike out the word "offense" and insert "offenses."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 7, page 19, line 7, after the word "shall," to strike out "forfeit the sum of $50" and insert:

Be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

So as to read:

And if any person shall fraudulently make use of an adhesive stamp to denote any tax imposed by this act without so effectually canceling and obliterating such stamp, except as before mentioned, he, she, or they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same section, page 19, line 12, after the word "court," to strike out the proviso, as follows:

Provided, nevertheless, That any proprietor or proprietors of proprietary articles, or articles subject to stamp duty under Schedule B of this act, shall have the privilege of furnishing, without expense to the United States, in suitable form, to be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, his or their own dies or designs for stamps to be used thereon, to be retained in the possession of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, for his or their separate use, which shall not be duplicated to any other person. That in all cases where such stamp is used, instead of cancellation by initials and date, the said stamp shall be so affixed on the box, bottle, or package that in opening the same, or using the contents thereof, the said stamp shall be effectually destroyed; and in default thereof the party making default shall be liable to the same penalty imposed for neglect to affix said stamp as hereinbefore prescribed in this act. Any person who shall fraudulently obtain or use any of the aforesaid stamps or designs therefor, and any person forging or counterfeiting, or causing or procuring the forging or counterfeiting, any representation, likeness, similitude, or colorable imitation of the said last-mentioned stamp, or any engraver or printer who shall sell or give away said stamps, or selling the same, or, being a merchant, broker, peddler, or person dealing, in whole or in part, in similar goods, wares, merchandise, manufactures, preparations, or articles, or those designed for similar objects or purposes, shall have knowingly or fraudulently in his, her, or their possession any such forged, counterfeited likeness, similitude, or colorable imitation of the said last mentioned stamp, shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, page 21, line 2, after the word "shall," to insert "be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and;" in line 3, after the word "thereof," to insert "shall;" and in line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert "or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, at the discretion of the court;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That if any person or persons shall make, sign, or issue, or cause to be made, signed, or issued, or shall accept or pay, or cause to be accepted or paid, with design to evade the payment of any stamp tax, any bill of exchange, draft, or order, or promissory note for the payment of money, liable to any of the taxes imposed by this act, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax hereby charged thereon, he, she, or they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 21, line 16, after the word "shall," to insert "be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and;" in line 17, after the word "thereof," to insert "shall;" and in line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert "or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the acceptor or acceptors of any bill of exchange or order for the payment of any sum of money drawn, or purporting to be drawn, in any foreign country, but payable in the United States, shall, before paying or accepting the same, place thereupon a stamp, indicating the tax upon the same, as the law requires for inland bills of exchange or promissory notes; and no bill of exchange shall be paid or negotiated without such stamp; and if any person shall pay or negotiate, or offer in payment, or receive or take in payment, any such draft or order, the person or persons so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12, page 23, line 11, after the word "shall," to strike out "for every such offense" and insert "be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and;" in line 12, after the word "thereof," to insert "shall;" in line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert "or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court;" so as to read:

SEC. 12. That any person or persons who shall register, issue, sell, or transfer, or who shall cause to be issued, registered, sold, or transferred, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax chargeable thereon, and canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 14, page 26, line 21, after the word "aforesaid," to strike out "shall be utterly void, and;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. That it shall not be lawful to record or register any instrument, paper, or document required by law to be stamped unless a stamp or stamps of the proper amount shall have been affixed and canceled in the manner prescribed by law; and the record, registry, or transfer of any such instruments upon which the proper stamp or stamps aforesaid shall not have been affixed and canceled as aforesaid shall not be used in evidence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 16, page 27, line 16, after the word "associations," to insert:

Whose capital stock does not exceed $10,000, and building and loan associations or companies that make loans only to their shareholders.

So as to read:

SEC. 16. That all bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness issued by the officers of the United States Government, or by the officers of any State, county, town, municipal corporation, or other corporation exercising the taxing power, shall be, and hereby are, exempt from the stamp taxes required by this act: Provided, That it is the intent hereby to exempt from the stamp taxes imposed by this act such State, county, town, or other municipal corporations in the exercise only of functions strictly belonging to them in their ordinary governmental, taxing, or municipal capacity: Provided further, That stocks and bonds issued by cooperative building and loan associations whose capital stock does not exceed $10,000, and building and loan associations or companies that make loans only to their shareholders, shall be exempt from the tax herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 17, page 27, line 23, after the word "message," to strike out "on which the company's charges have been paid or are to be collected, except press news dispatches;" in line 25, to strike out the word "duty" and insert "tax;" on page 28, line 4, after the word "required," to insert "on each dispatch or message;" and after the word "companies," in line 5, to insert:

Provided, That the messages or dispatches of the officers and employees of any telegraph company concerning the affairs and service of the company and like messages or dispatches of the officials and employees of railroad companies sent over the wires on their respective railroads shall be exempt from this requirement: Provided further, That official messages of the several departments of the Government shall be exempt from the taxes herein imposed upon telegraphic and telephonic messages.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 17. That on and after the 1st day of June, 1898, no telegraph company or its agent or employee shall receive from any person or transmit to any person any dispatch or message without an adhesive stamp, denoting the tax imposed by this act, being affixed to a copy thereof, or having the same stamped thereupon, and in default thereof shall incur a penalty of $10: Provided, That only one stamp shall be required on each dispatch or message, whether sent through one or more companies: Provided, That the messages or dispatches of the officers and employees of any telegraph company, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON (at 3 o'clock p. m.). The Senate having made another order for this hour to-day, I will not ask for the further consideration of the bill this afternoon.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MILLIKEN.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I call for the special order, the memorial services in honor of the late Hon. S. L. MILLIKEN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BATE in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 15, 1898.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. SETH L. MILLIKEN, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I submit the resolutions which I send to the desk, and I ask that they may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. SETH L. MILLIKEN, late a Representative from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Secretary of the Senate to the family of the deceased; and that, as a further mark of respect, the Senate will, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, stand adjourned.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, my late colleague, the Representative from the Third Congressional district of Maine, was essentially a man of the people. All the honors that came to him in the course of a long public life were gained by near association with the people, by faithful service to them, and by keen appreciation of the everyday life, the preferences and prejudices, the desires and aversions of the public. Mr. MILLIKEN had an extensive service, both in the State of Maine and in Congress, where the State sent him. He had legislative training when a very young man, having been for two terms a member of the Maine house of representatives. Following that he was chosen to the important office of clerk of the supreme court for the county of Waldo, where he lived, and in 1882 he was elected to Congress, where he was continued until the day of his death. His service there covered a period of more than fourteen years. Not many men, Mr. President, since the formation of our Government have been continued so long in the popular branch of Congress.

Mr. MILLIKEN came of good ancestry, his mother's line running back to an old noble family in France, and his father having been a soldier in and a pensioner of the war of the Revolution. But his parents were plain people, in a narrow way of life, and from his earliest years Mr. MILLIKEN was left almost entirely to depend upon his own resources. He paid for his own schooling, he worked his way through college, and in all his after life he was in all things self-dependent and independent. He never forgot the lessons of such a life nor the people who extended to him sympathy and trust, and he was amply rewarded by the sympathy and trust reposed in him by his own district.

He was approachable, agreeable, genial always. He enjoyed being with men and women and children, whether at home or with strangers. He visited many States, and in the last twenty years of his life he made hundreds of political addresses, and wherever he went he made friends, because he took an interest in humankind. He loved talk and jest and story-telling, and all the things that go to make up companionship; and this was a great factor in accounting for the successes of his after life. There is no town in his district, whether large or small, where he had not friends, and very warm ones, who welcomed his coming and worked for his advancement, and who, if the need arose, would sit up nights to help him. So it came about, Mr. President, that long before Mr. MILLIKEN's death he had become one of the popular characters of the State of Maine. I knew him for more than thirty years, and I recall with satisfaction that during all that time we were friends, each glad to help the other.

These qualities upon which I have touched accounted very largely for Mr. MILLIKEN's success in the House of Representatives, and to this kindly side were added great devotion to the interests of his district and unwearied attention to all the details that such a life lays upon a Representative. There was no public building and no river and no harbor of the Third district to which he was ever inattentive. No claim of a constituent, whether it was for money due from the Government or for proper appointment to office, was laid aside or forgotten. No old soldier or his widow ever knocked at his door in vain. He entered largely into the other side, the more extensive side of public life. He participated freely in discussions upon public matters, being sharp, quick, incisive, and in that colloquial form which debates take on so often in the House of Representatives he asked a great many questions which were hard to answer, and made many points which greatly strengthened his side of the question. His committee work was faithful and laborious, and long before he left the floor he had become an authority on all questions of public improvement relating to public buildings.

As I remember him, Mr. President, he was a pleasing and persuasive speaker, and became thus not more by natural gift than by reading and study. I know that one of the things which attracted me to him in our early acquaintance was his liking for good books. I do not think he had the poetical imagination, or that his reading ran largely to that fountain of inspiration which we find in the great English poets, but he loved history and biography and travel, and whatsoever tells the story of man's endeavor and man's ambition. In that immortal gallery of Plutarch he knew them all, and he loved to dwell upon the pictures of great and noble characters, ancient and modern, and this broadened his mind, gave him amplitude and illustration, and communicated life to his speeches and addresses.

In his private life his virtues and good qualities were all of the larger order. His feelings leaned to the human and generous. He was never sordid or mean or envious or uncharitable or revengeful. His death was the first break in the entire Maine delegation in Congress for fifteen years. That State has the fashion of trusting freely and continuing to trust her Representatives. If the people of Maine know their shortcomings, as no doubt they fully do, that knowledge is never intruded to weaken and embarrass those who represent her here. The State of Maine has been most generous, Mr. President, in her dealings with her Senators and her Representatives. Mr. MILLIKEN's district was generous in dealing with him, and he was strong in the regard of that district on the day that he died, and there and here he will be long remembered.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, for many years it has been the custom of each House of Congress when one of its members died to set apart an hour when other business should cease and appropriate funeral obsequies should be rendered to the memory of the departed. These occasions bring vividly to our minds many pleasant recollections of our associates who have left us and joined the innumerable company that are gathered and are ever gathering on the shores of that world which lies beyond the boundaries of our comprehension. One after another of our colleagues falls out of line while we are marching on, and we pause for a moment and say a kind word over his inanimate dust and then close up the ranks and press on. We move on anxiously toward some point that is ever receding from our advancing steps. Life is a continuous struggle of restless forces for the achievement of objects that multiply before us as fast as we acquire them. There is no rest. The inexorable command is to move on. The capture of one prize only whets the desire for another. However noble the motive which animates us, however profound the gratification that follows the achievement of a great good, it fails to satisfy the craving to move onward and upward, the desire to attain a higher and a wider circle of human endeavor.

Our life is a treadmill whose wheel is ever revolving, and we are perpetually in motion with all our physical and mental forces to continue its revolutions. The inevitable law of our life is to move forward. We must continue the struggle and force the fighting at every step until we are mustered out. When that comes, as come it must to everyone, in its train it will bring sorrows, not as single spies, but in battalions. Ties which have grown and gathered around our hearts must be torn asunder. We must go down into the deep and converse with thoughts that live only in the stricken heart, and feel and realize how helpless we are to stay the hand of death or soothe the wounds that emphasize his mission. As we gather around the bier of the friend who goes before us, we may say kind words which may be cherished by many who hold his memory dear.

To-day we pay tribute to the memory of Hon. SETH L. MILLIKEN, one of the Representatives of the State of Maine, one who for sixteen years was elected to the House of Representatives. During nine of those years I served with him in that body, and knew him well and valued him highly for his many excellent qualities. He was a warm-hearted, brave, and generous man. He was constant in his friendships, strong in his convictions, and faithful in the discharge of his duties as a Representative of his people. He was quiet and retiring in his manners and amiable and lovely in his intercourse with his associates. Anyone could approach him, and his big heart was open to every appeal. I became very much attached to him while we served together in the House, and I had every evidence that words and deeds could give that he was my friend. On the floor he was a forcible, able, and ready debater. He was one of the ablest of the very able delegation that the State of Maine has had in Congress ever since my admission to the House in 1873.

That State has had the good judgment to select her representatives from her best men and keep them in Congress where experience is invaluable. He was elected to the House in 1883 and reelected to each subsequent Congress and died in the service of his State. He was a partisan as we all are. He supported his party with unfaltering fidelity and defended its measures and policies with earnestness and ability. In party conflict he was sharp and incisive, yet courteous; and in social intercourse as kind and gentle as a child. It was impossible for anyone to be much in his society without feeling strongly the ties of attachment. There was nothing in his nature to repel, but everything to attract.

No higher tribute can be paid to him than that of his own constituents in electing him for sixteen successive years. Their confidence was never withdrawn. He held it to the last moment of his life, and when the summons came he yielded his life and his public trust at the same moment. The continuance of his commission through so many years was the judgment of the most competent tribunal that he was an honorable, faithful, and efficient public servant. Nothing that I can say can add to that tribute paid by his constituents, and nothing that mortal man can say or do can mar or disfigure his splendid character. His work is accomplished, his mission is ended, and he has gone to that rest which sooner or later awaits us all. There is nothing left to us who knew him, labored with him, and loved him but to say "Farewell."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the inhabitants of the shore land and the islands of the Penobscot Bay have been a seafaring, log-driving, shipbuilding, hard-working, and matter-of-fact people from the earliest colonial days. When wooden ships held supremacy on the sea, the mariners of Maine were known in all the ports of Christendom. Their widely acquired knowledge, in common with the issue of well-driven bargains, added to the resources of home, so that where nature had done little, industry and perseverance did much to build up a thrifty, if not a wealthy, community. When the wooden sailer gave way to the steel steamer and our majestic merchant marine yielded in the presence of cruel and unequal conditions, the people of Maine received a severe blow, and felt the shock more keenly than any other portion of the Union. Their industry and philosophy did not, however, depart with the shipping enterprises. They hewed down and sold the forest, giving to the lumbering interest for many years predominance over all others.

Fishing was never neglected, but the fisheries could not support the State. As the forests gradually became exhausted and the fisheries less profitable, the good people of the Penobscot country turned their attention more to agriculture and to diversified manufacturing industries. They knew the winters were long and the summers short, but it did not occur to the body of the people to emigrate to other or more favored fields. They loved their country and its historic associations. The competition with localities more favored in climate, soil, and relation to markets has been severe; but in the long run tireless industry, prudent management, and well-directed economy have brought contentment, comfort, and affluence to the people of Penobscot Bay, while many communities favored by nature's most prodigal bounty seem disposed to complain of their fortune rather than to confess their faults.

The best men seem to grow where nature shows to man the most grudging disposition. Centuries of severe contest with ill fortune and hard conditions brought forth the race of men from which SETH MILLIKEN sprang. They turned a wilderness into a park. They reduced rocky hills to fertile garden spots. Riot and disorder have been strangers to the region in which they live. Devotion to the Government and to those who faithfully endeavor to administer its affairs is and always has been a leading feature in the character of the people of Maine. SETH L. MILLIKEN was a faithful Representative, and as such his people trusted and supported him. Having witnessed the glory and the decay of the shipping interests of his country, and being possessed of an abiding faith in the capacity of his people to compete with the world on terms of approximate equality, his zeal in behalf of legislation looking to the restoration of the merchant marine ended only with his life. He was a careful student of all matters of concern to the fisheries of the country at large, and gave particular attention to the vexed questions which have so long perplexed and annoyed the fishermen on our northeastern coast.

The protective-tariff policy in which his constituents became more and more deeply interested, as their manufacturing enterprises extended, had no more bold, fearless, and persevering advocate than he. He became a noted champion of every measure which he believed would tend to add to the prosperity of the people of his district. At the same time his mind had continental range and his patriotism knew no limit. To the private affairs of his constituents he gave his time and attention without regard for his personal comfort or ease. The old soldiers of his district gathered at his funeral in Belfast and mourned as for a friend whose like they did not expect to meet again. On every hand his constituents on that sad occasion referred to him in terms of affectionate familiarity as "SETH." For more than fourteen years he had served them in Congress, where he finally died at his post of duty. His sorrowing neighbors by the side of his grave bore witness that those who knew him best loved him most.

Believing in his honesty of purpose, his constituents gave him unfaltering support throughout a long legislative career. Their fidelity and devotion to their homes and their home people found expression in unfailing constancy to their Representative through good and evil report. Their faith was justified. SETH MILLIKEN was a manly man, a true friend, a genial companion, and an able representative of the interests confided to his care. In his soul the fervent spirit of genuine oratory slumbered, and when occasion called forth his latent powers, his oratorical outbursts commanded high place in the classic utterances of our parliamentary history. His nature was at war with affectation. Subordinate to natural impulses himself, it was not possible for him to indulge the hypocrisy he condemned wherever found. He did not pretend to be what he was not. His constituents and his colleagues were taken into his confidence, and they knew him as he was, without concealment, and, knowing him, they respected, trusted, and supported him.

Entering the Fifty-first Congress as a new member from a new State, I soon became indebted to Mr. MILLIKEN for many encouraging words and helpful acts. He was a considerate friend to the new member. A veritable embodiment of human nature, he was generous, congenial, kind-hearted, confiding, and just. My poor tribute to his memory issues from grateful remembrance of his many acts of personal kindness and consideration. To his bereaved family words here spoken can offer little consolation. He has gone before them to the land where partings are unknown, and, in the language of a gifted poet, we indulge the hope that—

> When soon or late they reach that coast,
> O'er life's rough ocean driven,
> May they rejoice, no wanderer lost,
> A family in heaven.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, having had a short acquaintance with the deceased during my service as a Delegate from Utah in the Fifty-third Congress, though coming from a locality far removed from his home, it has not been deemed unfitting that I should also say a few words in tribute to his memory.

The narrative of his life has been given by those who were longer and more intimately associated with him and who are able to form a just estimate of his character. From them we learn that his was a typical career of our national life. Born of comparatively plain and humble parents, but of sturdy, honest character, he was early cast upon his own responsibility. As a boy he went away to school at a distance. He there learned one lesson and mastered another lesson, solved one problem and then another, encountered and overcame obstacles, and with each effort gained new experience and additional vigor of mind. He thus developed and strengthened to manhood.

His neighbors and friends came to be proud of him, and the people of his county sent him to the legislature. He there proved worthy of their trust and fit to exercise higher duties and responsibilities. The people of his district sent him to Congress. For sixteen years he served in the House of Representatives, and during that time performed a leading part in framing legislation and in molding the policies of the nation. He came to be widely known. It is safe to say that there was no one so far removed, so hidden away among the mountains, so secluded in the wilderness, so absorbed in business or lost in the throngs of the city as not to know much of the career and public service of Mr. MILLIKEN, of Maine.

By his warm heart, his good fellowship, his genial disposition and eloquence, his industry and devotion to duty he not only endeared himself to his associates, but he supplemented and rounded out into completeness of power and influence the delegation from his State, which has long been recognized as among the strongest and ablest of any of those sent by any of the States constituting the great sisterhood of the Republic.

Mr. President, the forces of civilization began operation upon the Atlantic coast, proceeded thence step by step across the continent, until to-day we stand as it were upon the brink of the Pacific gazing out wistfully across its swelling waters, sighing for new lands to conquer and reclaim to freedom. In this work of renovation and reclamation the sons and daughters of Maine have performed their fair share. They are scattered everywhere. Their homes are erected like milestones across the continent. In this way former neighbors and friends of Mr. MILLIKEN more recently became my neighbors and friends and often came to make friendly and interested inquiry concerning him. Thus our people are bound together so that no diversity of material interests, no sectional differences, can divide us or sunder the ties which bind us together in one homogeneous nation.

The views of the deceased were widely tolerant. His sympathies were as boundless as our whole people. He began humbly; he ended a conspicuous national character. His life was devoted to the public service. From the citadel of the nation's power our messengers with reverent guard bore him away to the city of the dead, bounded on the one side by time, on the other by eternity.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the senior Senator from the State of Maine has dwelt at length upon the character and achievements of the man who for so many years was his colleague in public life. In words of tenderness and eloquence he has paid tribute to his friend, and recounted the struggles and triumphs of him whose long life has come to an end. It is sufficient for me to add but a word—to bring a single flower of tender memory, and with loving hand place it on the grave of the dead statesman.

When SETH L. MILLIKEN died the State he represented lost one of her most illustrious sons and the Congress of the United States was deprived of the services of one of the ablest, most conscientious, and best-equipped men in public life. He was one of the famous quartet of statesmen who, by a long and devoted service in the House of Representatives, brought renown to the State of Maine and impressed upon the statutes of the country the result of wise deliberation, calm judgment, and mature conviction.

Mr. President, it was my privilege to serve with Mr. MILLIKEN four years in the House of Representatives. That was more than ten years ago, yet even then he had won recognition in that body and was regarded by the leaders of both of the great political parties as a man of thorough knowledge and unusual ability.

From that time to the day of his death he grew in influence and power, until it was universally conceded that he had fairly won a place in the front ranks of that great tribune of the people. As I remember him, he was industrious, painstaking, and accurate. In the committee room no less than in the House he brought to his work a well-stored mind and an honest purpose. He was courteous, approachable, obliging, and agreeable, while he was always firm in the right and conscientious in the work that he had in hand. In his view the public service rightfully claimed his best efforts, and as a result he achieved a well-deserved renown in a body that tests men in the crucible of an unerring and not over-indulgent judgment.

Such, Mr. President, was the man to whose memory this hour is devoted and in behalf of whom our feeble words of eulogy are spoken. He was a strong, self-reliant, manly man, knowing the right and having the courage to do it. A large share of his life work was in the public service, and the honorable record that he made will be as imperishable as truth, a proud inheritance to the loved ones whom he left behind.

Mr. President, on a chilly New England spring day the body of SETH L. MILLIKEN was consigned to the earth, in the beautiful cemetery of the town in which he had spent his life. As a member of the Congressional committee I recall the scene as though it had been but yesterday. The unostentatious home, the church crowded to the doors, the tender words of the preacher, the voice of music, and above all the evidences of a genuine sorrow depicted on the countenances of the assembled multitude, all united to demonstrate the affectionate regard and high esteem in which the dead man was held by those who knew him best.

As I turned from the grave the thought came to me that possibly those at home have a keener realization of the work done here than we are aware, and that the outpouring of the people was a tribute not only to a friend, but to a faithful and devoted public servant. On the grave of SETH L. MILLIKEN the early summer flowers are in bloom, and if his spirit hovers over the scenes of his labors and triumphs here, let us hope that it will serve as an inspiration to us all to act well the part that in the nation's progress and destiny we are called upon to perform.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, war with its excitements, distractions, and demands upon one's time has prevented me from the preparation of a fitting tribute to my personal friend and my late colleague in the House of Representatives, Mr. MILLIKEN. And yet I can not allow the occasion to pass in entire silence.

Maine's rugged and dangerous seacoast, her sterile and rocky farms, her cold climate and long winters, have somehow been productive of strong, vigorous, and successful men. The secret undoubtedly lies in the fact that life there from early boyhood onward is a struggle; that economy, patience, self-reliance, and habits of industry are its acquirements; but in a Republic like ours like experiences, conditions, and training produce anywhere, as a rule, like results, as the lives of the men of mark of this country well illustrate.

Sir, I believe that a large majority of the Senators who occupy seats in this Chamber owe that great success to a training and to acquirements like these. I saw but a moment ago sitting in one of these seats one who, as a poor boy, the son of a widowed mother, left England, crossed the ocean, crossed the plains, settled in a strange land, and struggled for life. To-day that dear old mother of his lives in a luxurious home erected by him, and he is a United States Senator.

Mr. MILLIKEN went to the same sort of a school and learned the same lessons, for he was born a poor boy, was dependent upon himself almost alone, but was not content to be a plowboy all his life. He was ambitious for an education. He secured it unaided, alone, graduating with honor at one of our New England colleges. He studied law, was admitted to the bar, and if he had been willing to give to that profession the devotion which that jealous mistress always insists upon having, he would have become eminent. But the political arena had wonderful attractions for him and its temptations were too great. He was a very earnest, ardent Republican, a partisan, as I think all honest men of strong convictions are.

Thoroughly equipped by a large experience with men, by extensive reading, by careful study, endowed by his Maker with a fine physique, an attractive voice, graceful manners, he became a very popular platform orator, and his services were in demand in every political campaign all over the country. With abounding resources and a marvelous capacity of drawing on them at sight, which few men possess, he very shortly in the House of Representatives won distinction as a debater and was recognized as a formidable adversary.

His devotion to the soldier and his dependents was most marked. He never seemed to consider any personal labor in their behalf as any personal sacrifice on his part, and his memory, so long as any of them survives, will be green indeed.

Mr. MILLIKEN was a man decidedly of a social nature. He had a warm and affectionate heart, and gained the friendship of all acquaintances. He was a very popular man in the State of Maine, and especially so at home. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], who was there but a few hours, recognized the fact and noticed this, that there the people, rich and poor alike, called him "SETH," not from any want of respect, but from warm and affectionate regard.

If he had faults—and who of us has not?—they were buried under the same sod that covered his body and are forgotten. His virtues alone are now remembered. God grant that we, departing, may leave behind us as many warm and grateful friends as did SETH MILLIKEN!

Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 18, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 17, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

CORRECTIONS.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the Journal as read will be approved.

Mr. TONGUE. I rise for the purpose of making a correction. In the course of the discussion yesterday, while the bill for the establishment of an assay office at the city of Seattle was pending, the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE], having charge of that bill, stated, as near as I can remember the language, that from the report of the Director of the Mint it appeared that the production of precious metals in the State of Washington, present and prospective, equaled that of the State of Oregon. I find in the revised version of his remarks, as printed in the RECORD, that statement is not included.

I had expected, Mr. Speaker, to produce the evidence to show its incorrectness. The gentleman declined to permit me the opportunity to challenge its correctness yesterday or to request the proof. Now, I should like to know whether that omission is with the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and, if so, whether he is now prepared to admit that his statement was incorrect. If that is stated, I have no objection to the confirmation of the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this is not a correction of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. This is not a matter connected with the Journal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It appears to be simply a controversy between two members as to a certain state of facts mentioned in the RECORD.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I desire to say, however, in this connection, that the RECORD shows my statement just as the stenographer took it down. There has been no change by me.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be considered as approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4566. An act to provide for the increased volume of work in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, due to the calling out of volunteers and increase of the Regular Army.

CONTESTED ELECTION—HUNTER VS. RHEA.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Elections No. 1, in the case of W. Godfrey Hunter against John S. Rhea. This, I will state, is the unanimous report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman report the resolutions of the committee?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes, Mr. Speaker; there are resolutions; and I ask their adoption.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That W. Godfrey Hunter was not elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Third Congressional district of Kentucky, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That John S. Rhea was elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Third Congressional district of Kentucky and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The resolutions were considered, and agreed to.

NAVY, MARINE CORPS, ETC.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the present consideration of the concurrent resolution of the Senate in reference to a compilation of the laws affecting the Navy, the Marine Corps, etc.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to the right of objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 3,000 copies of the Compilation of Laws Relating to the Navy, Marine Corps, etc., authorized by Senate resolution No. 143, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, have I the right to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The matter is not yet before the House. This is a question for unanimous consent.

Mr. CORLISS. If unanimous consent is given, would I have the right to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER. That would depend, of course, on the action of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the first thing in order is the question of unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. That is first in order.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Michigan, as I understand the amendment he proposes to offer, that I hope he will make his request at some other time and on some other resolution. This is a Senate resolution providing for the printing of this compilation of naval laws, only a small number being set apart for the House and Senate, while the greater part is to supply the demand for the Navy Department.

I understand the amendment the gentleman proposes is to change the mode of distribution—that is to say, the proportion between the House and the Senate—of the copies of this compilation. As I understand his amendment, it is to provide that the House shall have three-fourths of the total number and the Senate one-fourth. But I think it would be better if the amendment were applied to some other resolution. And I ask the gentleman to withhold it for the present for that reason.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, in view of the explanation of the gentleman from Iowa, I will not ask to submit the amendment at this time.

The concurrent resolution was considered, and agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WAR MAP OF CUBA.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I observe that a joint resolution introduced by myself, No. 268, in regard to printing maps of Cuba, was referred to the Committee on Printing. These maps, so far as they have been printed, have been printed at the War Office, and I submit that the resolution in question should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and not to the Committee on Printing.

It is immaterial to me, so far as the mere question of reference is concerned, but in order to expedite the work I think the reference to the Committee on Military Affairs would be desirable.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the map to which the resolution refers has been prepared by the Military Department of the Government. The Printing Office had nothing to do with it, and the proposition ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS. The Printing Office could only supply them by contracting with some other Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is correct.

Mr. PERKINS. I think there will be no objection, so far as the Printing Committee is concerned, to make the change proposed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, however, that this requires unanimous consent. It is not a question of the Military Affairs Committee or the Printing Committee, but a matter of reference by the House itself.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But, Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of printing, I will state.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that "all proposed legislation or orders touching printing shall be referred to the Committee on Printing."

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the point is, Mr. Speaker, that this is not printing at all, but the making of a map. It is a military matter. The Chair, I see, smiles at my suggestion——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is a little bit lost in the intricacies of the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the indulgence of the Chair for one moment. The House will remember that there is a very valuable map of the United States made by the Land Office. It is made, I believe, every year, or every two years. A few years ago the Committee on Printing reported a resolution to print that map, and very serious objection was made on the part of members here, the point of order being made that it did not belong to the Printing Committee. The Speaker then occupying the chair held that the resolution to print the map should not have gone to the Committee on Printing, but should have gone to some other committee. They call it "printing" a map, but it is making a map, and it is really not a part of the work of the Government Printing Office to make maps.

Mr. LOUD. How do you make them?

Mr. PERKINS. Permit me to say that the map is already made. It is printing a map the same as printing a book. The only difference is that the book is printed from type and the map is printed from a stone.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is right.

Mr. PERKINS. The Printing Office does not do the work.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Not at all.

Mr. PERKINS. Because it belongs to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing or some other department.

Mr. COX. I understand you have no objection to this.

Mr. PERKINS. I have no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON. None at all.

Mr. COX. Let it go on.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope it will be sent to the Committee on Military Affairs, because the War Department printed the map, and they own the stones from which the map is printed.

Mr. PERKINS. But we frequently have to print maps in connection with our work, and therefore it would hardly be well to establish the precedent that we had no authority to print a map.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be sent to the other committee. The chairman of the Committee on Printing has no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the resolution can be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair has doubts whether the Committee on Military Affairs would have the right to report. However, if there be no objection, it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There was no objection.

ARANSAS PASS, TEXAS.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution (Senate Con. Res. No. 37) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit plans, specifications, and estimates for the improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor, State of Texas, and especially to make plans and estimates for the removal of the sand bar at Aransas Pass and the deepening of the channel across said bar to a depth of at least 20 feet and a width of at least 150 feet at the bottom, so as to furnish an inlet for the passage of vessels from the Gulf of Mexico into Aransas Harbor; and in preparing said plans, specifications, and estimates the Secretary of War, or such Government engineers as he may designate to do the work, may consider the feasibility of utilizing such breakwaters now at said pass, constructed by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company, or the utilizing of any part of the same, and the value such use of such breakwater or material may be to the United States in deepening said channel; and in the estimate of such valuation any permanent damage which in the opinion of the Government engineers may have occurred by reason of the construction of said breakwater to said harbor or pass, or additional expense to the United States made necessary by reason of said attempted improvements in future improvements of said harbor or pass, shall also be considered by said engineers and reported by them. The engineers shall also report the approximate cost of construction of any breakwater of the said company which may be used by the Government, and also report the approximate cost of removing any part of said breakwater if it is deemed necessary to remove any portion of it.

That the Secretary of War is further directed to report to Congress at its next session.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not demand that yet.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think that is a rather complicated matter to be taken up by unanimous consent. It requires the estimation of damages for some private work that has been done. I think that had better be considered in the regular way.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine object?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine objects.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMSHIP CENTENNIAL.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4582) to provide an American register for the steamship Centennial.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamship Centennial, owned by Peter Larsen, a citizen of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the Senate report, which accompanies the House report, be read for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4582) to grant an American register to the steamship Centennial, having duly considered the same, submit the following report:

As will be seen by the accompanying letter from the Assistant Secretary of War, the War Department desires to charter this ship at once for military use. She is now under the Danish flag, but is entirely owned by citizens of the United States. She has been carefully examined by naval officers, who report that she is admirably adopted to transport troops to Manila, for which service she is desired, being a stanch vessel and in excellent condition. She has been recently employed in similar service, and will accommodate about 1,200 persons together with a large amount of freight. Her present location, at Seattle, is particularly advantageous at this juncture, as the voyage thence to Manila is shorter than from San Francisco by some 200 miles. It is absolutely necessary for the Government to employ ships now under other flags than our own, as there is not a sufficient number of American vessels on the Pacific Coast available. It is also necessary that these vessels shall be placed under the American flag.

In view of these facts and of the urgent need of the Government in this time of war, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1898.

DEAR SIR: It is the desire of the War Department to charter the steamship Centennial, owned by Mr. Peter Larsen, of Seattle, Wash., for military use during the war with Spain. I have the honor, therefore, to request that she may be put in commission at the earliest practicable date.

Very respectfully,

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Hon. W. P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. TERRY. I understood from the reading of that report that this vessel is owned by American citizens.

Mr. PAYNE. It is.

Mr. TERRY. I should like to understand fully why it is that she is not entitled to American registry.

Mr. PAYNE. Because under the registry laws of the United States a vessel can not receive American register unless built in an American shipyard.

Mr. TERRY. That is the state of our registration laws?

Mr. PAYNE. That is the state of our registration laws.

Mr. TERRY. Where was this ship built?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know where she was built. She is a Danish ship. She was built abroad. She is now under the Danish flag.

Mr. TERRY. It is now desirable to have her registered in order that she may be sold to the Government?

Mr. PAYNE. No; in order that she may be chartered by the Government to carry troops to Manila.

Mr. TERRY. Well, hiring and selling are somewhat akin.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, to speak accurately——

Mr. DOCKERY. Is the gentleman willing to accept an amendment to admit all ships free to American registry?

Mr. PAYNE. Most certainly the gentleman is not.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not regard it as rather dangerous to admit a vessel to register without any inspection whatever?

Mr. PAYNE. According to the statement made in the papers, she has been inspected.

Mr. LOUD. Does the gentleman think statements made in the papers should be presented to this House in that connection?

Mr. PAYNE. I mean the statement presented to the House and Senate. I do not mean the newspapers.

Mr. LOUD. The report that accompanies this bill gives it as the opinion of some naval officer that she is a stanch vessel. Now, does not the gentleman think that that is a very radical and dangerous departure?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, certainly it is. We are recommending this on account of a military necessity. The Government has chartered all the vessels that were suitable and available, and has only secured vessels capable of carrying 5,000 troops. The Government wishes to send more, and this seems to be the only available vessel in Seattle. It is found she can carry 1,200, and under the exigencies of the case the committee of the House has reported the bill for the consideration of which I ask unanimous consent. It is also urged by the Assistant Secretary of War, who has this matter in charge.

Mr. LOUD. You do not want to drown the soldiers who are going over there?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly not. For that reason we want to get a good vessel chartered instead of having to take one that might be picked up on the coast, not a seaworthy vessel and unsuitable for making such a long voyage. It is in the interest of the American soldiers that I ask this.

Mr. LOUD. We have had some experience with matters of that kind, and find it is a very dangerous thing. Two or three of the vessels which have thus been granted registers have gone to the bottom already.

Mr. McEWAN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New Jersey desires to ask me a question?

Mr. McEWAN. It is this: Why would it not have been more advisable instead of granting this privilege to any one man, to bring in a general law providing that under like circumstances any American citizen owning a proper vessel could have the same right as this bill gives to a particular and a specially favored man? For my part I am always against having special privileges accorded to one person or one corporation. It could just as well have been done in the way I suggest, and have tended to banish the feeling that is abroad that this House grants special privileges to individuals or to corporations.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman that if he will draw such a bill and submit it to the committee, they will consider it; but for one I do not feel capable of drawing a bill, properly guarded, to let in all these vessels.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall urge no objection whatever to this bill, because the gentleman has manifested so much confidence in me as to say that I could do what he can not do. [Laughter.] I would like that to go into the RECORD and to the country.

Mr. PAYNE. If it can not get into the RECORD in any other way I will repeat it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMERICAN REGISTER TO STEAMER CATANIA.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3953) to provide an American register for the steamer Catania.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Catania, owned by M. Stanley Tweedie, a citizen of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the reading of the report, especially the Senate report, which accompanies the House bill, and which states the facts fully.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3953) to provide an American register for the steamer Catania, having duly considered the same, recommend the passage of the bill.

The facts of the case are fully presented in the accompanying sworn statement of the owner and are substantiated by documentary evidence presented to the committee.

Speedy action on the bill is desirable, in view of the fact that the vessel is to be chartered by the Government of the United States for immediate use as a hospital ship, as will be seen by the letter of the Assistant Secretary of War which is annexed.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the bill (S. 3953) to provide an American register for the steamer Catania, I beg to submit the following statement of the case, with accompanying evidence:

I, Montague Stanley Tweedie, a citizen of the United States, born in the city of New York and doing business at No. 9 Stone street, New York City, am the owner of the Catania, having purchased her as a wreck, through the Tweedie Trading Company, for the sum of $8,500. The Tweedie Trading Company purchased the wreck from its foreign owners, Messrs. M. Sloman & Co., Mrs. L. Broderman, widow of C. A. Broderman, Mr. John A. Edye, and J. H. A. Stroberck, of Hamburg, for the sum of $8,500 (see Exhibit A), and have since conveyed the vessel to me (see Exhibit B).

The agents of the foreign owners aforesaid, Messrs. Funch, Edye & Co., have certified that the Catania was offered for sale to numerous parties, that only two offers were received for the vessel, and that the Tweedie Company's offer of $8,500 was the best offer received, and accordingly the vessel was sold to the Tweedie Company. (See certificate of Funch, Edye & Co., agents, Exhibit C.)

The Catania is an iron schooner-rigged vessel of 2,198 tons gross register. (See full particulars, Exhibit D.)

The Catania was wrecked November 4, 1896, by stranding on a coral reef off the coast of Brazil while on a passage from Rio de Janeiro to New York. (See protest E.) Her injuries are recited in the survey made upon the vessel when she reached the port of New York. The survey was made by Lloyds surveyors, Messrs. Congdon & Mancor, N. F. Lasnoe, surveyor to German Lloyds, and Frank S. Martin, ship engineer and surveyor. (See survey, Exhibit F.) While the vessel was able to reach New York under her own steam, it was found when she arrived that she was badly damaged and unseaworthy. These surveyors have sworn that upon the arrival of the Catania at New York, and when she was surveyed by them, she was in a badly damaged and unseaworthy condition, requiring extensive repairs to put her in a first-class seagoing condition, and that they are satisfied that the vessel's injuries were the result of her stranding on a coral reef off Brazil as aforesaid. (See affidavits of surveyors, Exhibit G.)

Bids for repairs to the Catania in accordance with the specifications attached to survey (Exhibit F) and prepared by surveyors were requested from the following leading shipbuilding companies on the Atlantic coast: Morgan Iron Works, New York; John N. Robbins Company, Brooklyn; Quintard Iron Works, New York; Morse Iron Works, Brooklyn; Donald and J. McNeil, Brooklyn (Columbia Engineering Works); Reed & Duff, New York; Jas. Reilly Repair and Supply Company, New York; Lewis Nixon, Elizabeth, N. J.; Cramp Shipbuilding Company, Philadelphia; Newport News Shipbuilding Company, Newport News, Va.; Harlan & Hollingsworth, Wilmington, Del.

A copy of the letter of my agents, Messrs. Bowring & Archibald, submitting the specifications to the various shipbuilding concerns, is submitted herewith. (Exhibit H.)

Only two bids were received; one being from the Columbia Engineering

Works, of Brooklyn, to do the work at $24,270 (Exhibit I), and the other from the Morse Iron Works, of Brooklyn, N. Y., to do the work for $18,975. (See Exhibit J.) The Morse Works bid, being the lower of the two, was accepted, and the work covered by their bid was performed. The receipt of the Morse Iron Works for $19,366.10, paid them by me for their work, is submitted herewith. (Exhibit K.)

After work had begun on the Catania it was found that further repairs beyond those estimated were required, consisting of building over an entire new shelter deck, and extensive further repairs to boilers and engines. (Exhibit K.)

This work was done at a cost of $34,038.61.

I have also paid for dry docking in connection with the surveys and repairing of the Catania the sum of $2,800. (See Exhibit K.)

To recapitulate—

Repairs according to specifications	$19,366.10
Repairs in addition to those covered by specifications	34,038.61
Dry docking	2,800.00
Total repairs	56,204.71

It will be seen that the repairs, amounting to $56,204.71, are in excess of the law's requirements, being more than three times the purchase price of $8,500. As this vessel could be registered under the general law but for the fact that her wreck occurred outside of the limits of the United States instead of within the same, I hope you and your committee will favorably report S. 3052.

I desire to state that as soon as the Catania is registered she will be used by the United States Government as a hospital ship.

Very truly,

M. STANLEY TWEEDIE.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, City of Washington:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 11th day of May, 1898.

[SEAL.] R. B. NIXON, Notary Public.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1898.

DEAR SIR: It is the desire of the War Department to charter the steamship Catania, owned by Mr. Montague Stanley Tweedie, of 640 Madison avenue, New York City, for military use during the war with Spain. I have the honor, therefore, to request that she may be put in commission at the earliest practicable date.

Very respectfully,

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Assistant Secretary of War.

Hon. W. P. FRYE,
Chairman Committee on Commerce, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the facts, briefly, are these: This vessel was wrecked by striking a coral reef on the coast of Brazil. She was brought to New York, where she was sold for $8,500. The papers show that that was all she was worth. She was repaired at an expense of $56,000 in American yards. She is owned by American owners, and her owners would be entitled under the rules to have her admitted under a special act. In addition to this, she has been chartered as a hospital ship, and afterwards chartered as a transport, and is intended to be used as a transport. In addition to that, there is a letter of the Secretary of War to the Senate Committee several days ago, and I received a telegram yesterday from the War Office asking for the register of this ship as an American vessel.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one other suggestion. The vessel evidently is an old hulk, and they propose to admit it to American register without any inspection whatever. The other vessel did not appear to be a hulk. I want to submit to the House and to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Speaker, that I introduced a bill in this House some time ago providing an American register for a vessel which never had been wrecked, but upon which there had been spent over $180,000 in American shipyards. It was a first-class vessel, and if the committee had favorably considered that bill it would have passed the House, and we would have had a first-class steamship under the American flag, and not perhaps have had to take this Danish ship at Seattle. I want to say, further, in connection with this matter, if I am allowed to proceed for a moment; otherwise I shall have to object, that this vessel to which I am referring was forced upon its American owners under peculiar conditions.

The committee are thoroughly familiar with the facts. A steamship company having a contract with the New Zealand and Australian Governments, in order to secure that contract and in order to encourage American shipbuilding—and they did build two American ships—in order to carry out this contract, when they had this contract, were compelled to take this British vessel which I made an humble effort to have admitted to American register. I think I am not betraying any of the confidence, Mr. Speaker, of the committee, of which I am not a member, when I say that that committee considered that bill with great deliberation, and laid it upon the table without a dissenting vote. Yet the very same committee have had admitted and do admit to American register vessels one of which within a short time caused the sacrifice of the lives of 130 or 140 of our citizens on the Pacific coast, having been wrecked the first trip after she was admitted, and another one which I believe it is impossible to keep right side up.

I offer these few suggestions to show the discretion the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries are using in disposing of cases of this kind. I never yet knew a case to come up before the House or a committee where there were some Eastern people interested in a steamship, no matter how old a hulk she might be, a vessel that should be rather condemned than admitted to American registry, but that it was perfectly easy to get a report and a bill through the House for admission; but when it comes to the admission of a vessel on the Western coast, first-class in every particular, a vessel worth $400,000 or $500,000, it is quite another thing. I am somewhat surprised at the unanimity of that committee in laying a measure of that kind on the table when they can advocate a measure like this. I shall not object to this bill, qut I wanted to offer these few suggestions.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from California is referring to ancient history——

Mr. LOUD. Not very ancient, either; it was only two or three months ago.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). With reference to the admission of some vessel to the registry. The committee have followed out the simple rule that where vessels have been wrecked in foreign waters and repairs are made in American shipyards they are admitted to registry if they are found to be stanch and strong. The gentleman speaks about this vessel as an "old hulk." I would like to know when a steel vessel ever becomes an old hulk. Experts say never; that they can always be repaired if they can be got into a dock, and that they always make as good a vessel if properly and thoroughly repaired as they were originally.

The vessel the gentleman alluded to came entirely outside any rule or any exception followed by the committee. This morning we admitted the Centennial to registry purely as a war measure, as it did not come under the rule. If the Zelandia ever comes into that condition, for one I shall be most happy to give her an American register, if she is needed and available to transport troops to Manila; but this vessel comes under all the exceptions the committee have ever adopted with reference to any vessel, and besides, it also has the urgent request of the Secretary of War.

Mr. LOUD. Does not the gentleman think she ought to be inspected? Why should not this vessel be subjected to the same inspection required of all other vessels which have been wrecked and nothing further is known about them except that they have been repaired? To-day this vessel is not worth over $60,000. Does not the gentleman think she ought to be inspected?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think she needs any other inspection than what she has had.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VILLAGE OF FLANDREAU, S. DAK.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9604) to grant a right of way to the village of Flandreau, S. Dak.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a right of way be, and hereby is, granted to the village of Flandreau, S. Dak., to extend a certain highway, known as Prospect street, through a certain tract of land owned by the Government of the United States and described as follows: One acre lot fronting the south line of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 107, range 48, in Moody County, S. Dak., said lot running 120 feet on the south line of said described land by 363 feet deep, and the southeast corner thereof being 1,016 feet east of the southwest corner of the above-named quarter section.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, let the report be read.

Mr. LACEY. The report is somewhat lengthy, and perhaps an explanation might take the place of the report.

Mr. DINGLEY. That will be quite as acceptable.

Mr. LACEY. The Government owns about an acre of ground there, and in locating a street the village takes a small strip off from one side of it. Under the law the State of South Dakota can not secure the right of way under the ordinary condemnation proceedings, as the land belongs to the Government.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has this the approval of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LACEY. It has.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KELLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JULIUS A. KAISER.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 1579, for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Julius A. Kaiser upon the retired list of the Navy in the grade of passed assistant engineer, as of the date he was entitled by law or Navy regulations to examination for promotion from assistant engineer to said grade.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear some explanation of this.

Mr. STEELE. I think we had better have the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The call of committees rests with the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 8) to amend sections 140 and 145 and repealing sections 143 and 144 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to Presidential elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 140 and 145 be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 140. The electors shall dispose of the certificates thus made by them in the following manner:

"First. They shall, by writing under their hands, or under the hands of a majority of them, appoint a person to forward forthwith by express to the Secretary of State, at the seat of Government, who is authorized and directed to deliver the same to the President of the Senate, one of the certificates.

"Second. Such person designated as above shall forthwith forward by the post-office, through its registry department, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, at the seat of Government, one other of the certificates.

"Third. Such person shall forthwith cause the other of the certificates to be delivered to the judge of that district in which the electors shall assemble."

"SEC. 145. Every person who, having been delegated pursuant to sections 140 and 141 to deliver and forward the certificates as therein provided, and having accepted such services, shall refuse or neglect to perform the same, shall forfeit the sum of $1,000."

SEC. 2. That sections 143 and 144 be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That the cost of the transmission of said certificates as heretofore provided shall be paid, upon proper vouchers, out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, this bill will accomplish a saving of about $20,000 every four years. It avoids the useless expense of the electors coming to the city of Washington and bringing the returns of the election of President and Vice-President. This system has cost our country about $300,000 unnecessarily already, the expense being now from $18,000 to $20,000 every four years. This seems to be an unnecessary and unwarranted expense.

Mr. Speaker, I will now yield the floor to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to propound a question to the gentleman. I wish to say a word or two upon the bill when the gentleman is through.

Mr. CORLISS. Very well. I yield the floor for the present, reserving my time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with every effort to economize the expenditure of public money; but it frequently happens that the public money can be well spent; and it ought never to be withheld in a case of that kind. For a hundred years the practice has been to send the electoral vote by messenger. That practice originated before there were any express companies, but while there were post-offices and post routes; and the only change which this bill makes in the present law is that it substitutes express companies for the messengers. Now, it might happen that the same railroad train which brings the mail containing the vote of a particular State might also bring the express car carrying the express package; and in the case of an accident which should burn up the mail and express car or which should carry the mail and express matter into some stream by the giving way of a bridge, we would have the vote of that State lost; and there is no provision in this bill for sending back to get new copies of it.

Although the bill provides that a copy of the electoral vote shall be lodged with the Federal judge of the district in which the electoral college holds its session, there is no provision in the bill authorizing the district judge to make a copy and transmit it. It seems to me that the saving of $20,000 every four years is trifling compared with the security that a messenger affords. I recall that within the last three or four months the President of the United States desired to have a particularly important document delivered into his hands, and he did not trust the mails or the express companies, but a special messenger was sent to bring to the capital the findings of the naval court of inquiry. That is simply an additional evidence that within the judgment of everybody a paper so important as the return of the electoral vote of a State ought not to be intrusted either to the mail or to express alone, but ought to be intrusted to a man who is ready to encounter any danger in the preservation and protection of it.

It seems to me that in this measure we are proposing to change a system that has prevailed for a hundred years and under which there has never been a single miscarriage of the electoral vote. It is proposed to change this system for the purpose of saving $20,000 every four years. The actual expense is less than that. It does not reach $20,000; it is somewhere between $18,000 and $20,000. And when all the present Territories are admitted as States into the Union, and they, like the present States, participate in the election of our President, and they, like the present States, send their electoral vote by messenger, the time will never come when the expenses of that proceeding can exceed $21,000 or $22,000—an average of less than $6,000 a year. Yet, for the purpose of saving that amount, it is proposed to commit the document certifying the voice of sovereign States to an express messenger who takes no oath of office.

It seems to me that when we send the vote by the mails, as we do to-day and as the bill proposes to continue, we at least give it into the keeping of an officer of the Government; we give it into the hands of a man who not only has imposed upon him a duty which every citizen must perform, but a special duty to the Government. When we dispense with the messenger and hand the electoral vote of a State to an expressman, we give it into the custody of one who is under no peculiar obligations to deliver it and who has taken no oath of office to the Government to perform the duty with fidelity.

I think it a very foolish economy which would lead us into the substitution of an express company in lieu of a messenger of the electoral college.

Mr. Speaker, reserving the balance of my time, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] as much time as he may desire.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, this bill was being considered the other day when I moved an adjournment of the House. I did not like it then, and I thought it better that it should be further considered. I do not like the idea of committing a great public document such as the returns of the electoral vote of a State in private hands entirely. As I understand, the law now is that a copy of the electoral vote is filed with the district judge; a copy is sent also by mail and by messenger. That messenger delivers it to the officers of the Senate, and in that way it comes before the joint convention which makes the final count. A receipt is given for it. The transaction is a public one, carried on by public officers. Why commit this vote to private individuals? Why relegate this matter to express companies and the mail, from which we may never hear?

Mr. Speaker, we have had some difficulty in the past, not with the delivery of the electoral vote, but with the electoral count itself. I remember one occasion when the relations between this House and the Senate were very much strained on this question, when the whole country was excited about it. At that time had the electoral vote been committed simply to the mails and to express messengers the situation would no doubt have been complicated. The system as now in vogue has been tried. No objection can be found to it, except the little expense attending it. But in connection with the great question of the electoral vote and the inauguration of the President of the United States we ought not to hesitate at any reasonable expense which will make the result certain and secure, which will inspire the public mind with the belief that there is honesty and fairness in the transaction.

A proceeding such as that suggested by the pending bill would necessarily create suspicion from the very beginning and involve the proceedings in uncertainty, which are far more dangerous and far more expensive than the insignificant expenditure which is now involved in the present method. I do not think the House should hastily act upon a matter of this kind. We ought not to undertake to make a change of this character without a great deal more consideration and deliberation than has been possible to give to this matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that it is necessary to add much, if anything, to what has been so well expressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and my colleague from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. I should be glad if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS] who reports this measure to the committee would present arguments, if any exist, in support of the proposition at this time, because from a cursory examination of the bill and the report it seems to me there are no sufficient reasons for the approval of the proposition, while there are many reasons against it.

I think I may say that I am as fairly committed to the doctrine of economy as any gentleman on the floor of the House; but an economy of this character, proposing a change of what seems to be a proper mode of sending the electoral votes of the States to the capital of the country, ought not to meet the approval of this body unless good reasons can be shown for the change. Since no reason of any kind has so far been assigned for the passage of the bill, other than the mere fact of the saving of $20,000 every four years, it occurs to me that it ought to be rejected by the House.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me one suggestion?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Under the present arrangement, after the electoral votes have been cast, the electors meet in their several States and send a messenger with the votes to the capital under the law. Now, when you undertake to change that law, are you not violating that system, and is it not a matter that should require a very great deal of care and consideration before we assume to do a thing of that kind?

Mr. DOCKERY. Undoubtedly this is an entire change in the law. The gentleman is entirely right. The old system, in vogue ever since the Government was inaugurated under the Constitution, will be changed if this proposition is adopted.

Mr. COX. This I understand to be an amendment to the statutes in that regard.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. Speaker, as well stated by the gentleman from Texas, the expense involved under the existing system is only about $20,000 each four years, or $5,000 a year. While we are endeavoring to legislate along various lines in the direction of economy, yet I think this is one of the old methods that had better be left untouched—a method that can not safely be changed.

I hope the House will vote down the proposition.

Mr. MERCER. Mr. Speaker, this measure was introduced for the purpose of accommodating the sending of the electoral returns from the various States to the existing conditions as they now prevail in this country.

The old law was passed in 1792, and from that time to this no modification or change has been made in it. This measure proposes to meet existing conditions.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] said that the official returns sent through the express company and those sent through the Post-Office Department might both come on the same train and might possibly share the same fate if there was an accident. He said that a wreck might destroy both of them. The gentleman might also have suggested that the messenger might come on the same train, and if there was a wreck caused by a collision, a washout, the destruction of a bridge, or from any other cause, he might be killed and his official communication destroyed. You have two chances of escaping just that danger when you send these returns by the express companies or through the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MERCER. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. If the messenger is lost on the train, that would be a matter which would be well known to everybody. It would be a matter of public notoriety. But you might send your returns by mail or express and no one would know where they are.

Mr. MERCER. You mean that everybody would know that he was a messenger?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. MERCER. How could that be?

Mr. BLAND. Simply because he acts in a public capacity; he is a public messenger and is recognized as such from the time he leaves the State until he returns to it. But that is not the point. The point is the publicity of it, the sending of it by a messenger, and the receipt of it by a public officer, and not committing it to private individuals, which will lay a suspicion upon it from the very beginning. Some day you will have your electoral vote questioned. Difficulties will arise, and you will find this provision complicating matters.

Mr. MERCER. Some people will stick to precedents whether they are right or wrong; but since this law was enacted we have remarkably changed conditions in this great country of ours. We now have the express company; we have an improved postal system; and I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], and also in reply to what was said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], that if these returns by the express company and by the Post-Office Department do not arrive in the city of Washington before the first Wednesday in January, it becomes the duty of the officials of the Government to send to the district judge who has the remaining copy and ask that a messenger bring that copy to Washington.

Mr. BLAND. But the difficulty between the gentleman and myself is that here is a question between the State and the Federal Government. Under your proposed plan you have no State representative. We want a State officer to deliver the returns to a Federal officer. Then you have the two governments cooperating in a public manner which is understood. You commit the whole thing to a Federal officer, and the question whether he receives the return or not, and whether he performs his duty, is left entirely to the Federal authorities. The present system commits it both to the State authorities and the Federal authorities.

Mr. DINGLEY. The governor will act for the State.

Mr. MERCER. Certainly.

Mr. TERRY. In addition to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has stated, I would suggest that under the system you propose you may have the returns from your State in the hands of your political adversaries. We may have the returns from our State in the hands of a political adversary, instead of in the hands of the party representing the people who cast the votes. Then, in a closely contested election for President, the express company or the railroad company or its agent, being the adversary of the political party of the State from which the returns are transmitted, may withhold the same at a critical moment. The whole scheme is full of danger. It may strike on that side of the House at one time and on this at another time. It ought to be opposed on all sides of the House. We are removing too many of the old landmarks of the Constitution and of the fathers. Do not let us make a change like this, involving perhaps the peace of the whole nation, upon a mere question of dollars and cents.

Mr. MERCER. I am afraid the gentleman from Arkansas is not harmonious in his position. He indicates that he might suspect a United States district judge, for instance, but he would not suspect a messenger under the present system.

Mr. TERRY. Under the present system duplicates of the returns may be transmitted from the United States judge. That is one way. In another way they are sent by the messenger of the electors of the political party that prevailed in that particular election, and those returns, under this proposed bill, might be placed in the hands of your political enemies.

Mr. MERCER. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that in the bill now pending it is provided that the State authorities shall exercise jurisdiction and authority, so far as the conveyance of the returns by way of the post-office system and the express company is concerned, until after their delivery to such means of transportation.

Mr. TERRY. I understand; but you propose to cut off the expense of the messenger, as you say.

Mr. MERCER. Why, certainly. I thought you were always in favor of economy. I thought I was pleasing you.

Mr. TERRY. No; but under your proposed bill the McKinley electors from the State of New York would send no messenger here, the returns would go into the hands of the express company.

Mr. MERCER. And of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. TERRY. So the messenger sent with the Bryan returns from Arkansas would not come here, but the returns would go into the hands of the express company or the railroad company to bring here. I understand that to be the scope of this bill.

Mr. MERCER. You have a chance to use the express company and also the Post-Office Department through its registry division, and in case there is a failure, then this Government can send a messenger to the State and obtain the returns.

Mr. TERRY. Who will determine about that?

Mr. MERCER. Why, the Government at Washington will determine.

Mr. TERRY. Then the State governments are cut out from their part of it.

Mr. MERCER. Not at all.

Mr. TERRY. Does not the gentleman remember that the electors are State officers, not Federal officers?

Mr. MERCER. And they are protected under this measure.

Mr. TERRY. Yes; in the way that you do protect them.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to ask the gentleman if these returns have not been brought to the capital under the present law since the organization of the Government under the Constitution?

Mr. MERCER. Since 1792.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has there ever been any trouble or confusion in getting them delivered under the existing system?

Mr. MERCER. I am not quite clear about that. If the gentleman from Oregon were here, he could tell what the trouble was in the Cronin case, so called.

Mr. BLAND. The trouble in that case was not from the messenger, but from the fact that the President of the Senate refused to put the papers before the House. The messenger brought them all right. They were in the hands of the Senate, and the Secretary of the Senate lost them between the house and the Capitol, got them mislaid, and hence there was trouble that arose over the count in the House.

Mr. MERCER. I do not claim that there have been any mistakes, but as a matter of economy, and as a matter representing the changed conditions of this country, I think the bill is necessary and will be perfectly safe.

Mr. BLAND. If my colleague will allow me, the trouble is this. You put all the authority and responsibility upon a Federal officer.

Mr. MERCER. I deny that.

Mr. BLAND. I know you do, because you will let the express company bring the returns here to be delivered to the Secretary of the Senate. Now the State officer is ignored. Under the present plan the State officer receives a receipt for these returns; the State knows through its officers the return has been deposited with the Vice-President by the receipt that has been given to its own officer. Now there is a check between the State and the Federal Government. Under your plan the State may never know whether its electoral vote has been delivered or not. It is well enough to have checks and balances in so important a matter as this of the electoral count, and this measure will not be received by the public in any other manner than with a suspicion that something may be wrong in this electoral count if you do away with the present mode of the State participating in making its return and receiving its receipt.

Mr. MERCER. Section 141 remains on the statute book and is an absolute check against any mistake or error.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me suggest this to the gentleman: This is the vote of a State that is to be delivered at the Federal capital.

Mr. MERCER. Certainly.

Mr. DOCKERY. And it has been delivered by a messenger for one hundred and twenty years, and there has been no trouble or confusion under the system. Then, I further suggest to the gentleman from Nebraska, why not let well enough alone? What is the necessity for a change? I am willing to follow the gentleman on all matters relating to the Omaha Exposition [laughter], but when he comes holding aloft the banner of economy and reform, I confess I am just a little suspicious. The bill may be all right, and possibly there may be sound reasons for it; but when the gentleman presents economic reasons, they have very little force and effect as relating to a question of this importance.

Mr. MERCER. I thought it would appeal especially to my friend. In fact I had him in mind when the bill was prepared.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman think there is any connection between the Omaha exhibition and reform? [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not know but that this bill was intended to save $20,000, that might be appropriated for the use of that exposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman state what is to be accomplished by the change?

Mr. MERCER. It saves from $12,000 to $20,000 in the forwarding of these returns; and it will prevent every four years the wrangling and row which occurs in the several States to decide who shall be the messenger to carry the returns; and it is to accommodate the existing conditions by a change of legislation.

Mr. GREENE. If the gentleman will permit me to ask him a question. Suppose it turns out that these certificates, one sent by mail and another sent by express, do not arrive. Is there anything in your bill to provide for receiving or getting the returns in any other way?

Mr. MERCER. In reply to my colleague, I will say that section 141 reads as follows:

SEC. 141. Whenever a certificate of votes from any State has not been received at the seat of Government on the first Wednesday of January, indicated by the preceding section, the Secretary of State shall send a special messenger to the district judge in whose custody one certificate of the votes from that State has been lodged, and such judge shall forthwith transmit that list to the seat of government.

That section remains upon the statute books. So that there is a check in case of loss or accident, and under the pending measure I say it is absolutely certain that we will obtain the returns.

Mr. GREENE. The State, however, let me say, is entirely eliminated from the transaction.

Mr. MERCER. Of course, in case of accident. I suppose it would also be the case in case of an accident to a messenger being killed on a railroad. In such a contingency a messenger might have to be sent to the State for the returns.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I want to suggest this to the gentleman. Under the existing law the messenger carrying the returns to the seat of government represents the prevailing party of the State?

Mr. MERCER. That is true.

Mr. CONNOLLY. That makes it absolutely certain, then, that the returns will reach the seat of government in the same condition they leave the electoral college at home, does it?

Mr. MERCER. Yes.

Mr. CONNOLLY. There can be no reason conceived why he should change the returns. It is easy to see that the corporations and the express companies might be interested to change the returns intrusted to them.

Mr. MERCER. Would it be natural to suppose that the employees of the express companies and employees of the Post-Office Department would all be dishonest?

Mr. CONNOLLY. If it should come to a question between the mass of the people and the corporations, the corporations might save themselves by changing the returns, changing the result, and there ought not to be this great inducement held out. It is one dangerous to put into the hands of anybody.

Mr. CORLISS. This is not limited to express companies. It also provides for transmission through the Post-Office Department.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Suppose the Post-Office Department belongs to one Administration, and the result in the election changes that and turns that Administration out. The temptation may be held out to the employees of the Post-Office Department to save themselves and save their Administration by a change of the returns.

Mr. CORLISS. Would it not be just as dangerous, just as apt to occur, if any such hostility existed between parties, if the votes were transmitted by messenger? Would there not be just as much danger of intercepting the messenger?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; there would be no danger of that.

Mr. CORLISS. Is there not more danger of intercepting a messenger with the returns than there would be of intercepting a registered package in the Post-Office Department or a package transmitted by express?

Mr. CONNOLLY. No; the man in whose custody the registered package is placed might have sufficient inducement himself to change the contents of the package.

Mr. CORLISS. What good would it do him to change it, when they can send back and get the original?

Mr. CONNOLLY. What good does it do to take any chances?

Mr. GREENE. How would they know it had been changed until the day they came to count the vote?

Mr. CONNOLLY. There are chances always taken, but for one hundred and twenty years the law has committed the custody of these returns to a messenger, who represents the prevailing party in the State and is the party interested; he is personally interested and he has every inducement to carry these returns and deposit them in safety.

Mr. McCULLOCH. And his honor is at stake in delivering them in safety.

Mr. CONNOLLY. And if there be any danger, if there is any trouble about the matter, the prevailing party can send a guard with the messenger who will see that he arrives in safety.

Mr. MERCER. This bill is so full of checks that I do not see how we can guard it any better.

Mr. CONNOLLY. The only purpose of the bill is to save $18,000 or $20,000, and it possibly might involve the country in a struggle from which it would never recover.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman how much he estimates the expense at the present time of sending the returns by the present method?

Mr. MERCER. Eighteen thousand dollars or $20,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And how much does the gentleman estimate the expense would be to transmit them in the way this bill provides?

Mr. MERCER. Merely nominal.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Well, I do not know about that. I beg to suggest that the Government pays quite a sum now for the transportation of Indian supplies, etc.

Mr. MERCER. This is not a bill to provide for the shipping of cattle.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is that the only purpose of the bill, to save the cost of transmission?

Mr. MERCER. That is the principal reason, the saving of money.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, these electors, selected by the different States, are officers of the State; they are not obliged to vote for anybody; they can vote for whom they please. Now, the electors meet in their State; they cast their vote, and appoint whom they please to transmit the vote to the seat of government. Have they not the right, when they meet and cast their vote, to choose their own method of transmission, and ought the right to say how they will transmit this vote to the seat of government to be taken away from them?

Mr. MERCER. What difference does it make to them, so long as their vote is actually and correctly sent to the seat of government?

Mr. COX. Now you are taking away the very point in this discussion. They should decide for themselves how they will send the vote, and they select their own man.

Mr. MERCER. I did not understand what the gentleman from Tennessee just said, as my attention was diverted.

Mr. COX. The electors decide that they will send their vote by a messenger, and they appoint their messenger.

Mr. MERCER. They do not decide it under the present system; the law says that they must so send it.

Mr. COX. That is what I say. Now, then, why should that be taken away from the electors?

Mr. MERCER. I do not think I am taking it away from them; I am giving them a chance to say how they will send the returns. They have two methods by which to send them, and in a case of mistake, they can send to the district judge and get another set of returns.

Mr. COX. That can be done now, in case of an accident to the messenger.

Mr. MERCER. If the messenger should drown, I suppose it could.

Mr. COX. Do you think it good policy to take away from the electors the right to send their own messenger with the vote?

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker I desire to say a few words, in conclusion, in reply to some of the objections which have been made to this bill by our esteemed friends on the other side.

It seems that in this case the habits of mind of certain gentlemen are so deeply seated that they can not see the good qualities that appeared to the committee in this measure. I realize that we are very apt to follow our habits, although they are wrong. For example, we go on from day to day appropriating the money of the people, because it is our habit. The gentleman from Missouri, who is on the Committee on Appropriations, brings in very large appropriations here for the maintenance of the Civil Service Commission—an absolutely worthless institution, a wart on the body politic of our country. [Laughter.] Through habit he comes in here regularly with a proposition to appropriate the public money for the benefit of that worthless institution.

In other measures here we see illustrations of the force of habit. Go down to any of our Departments in the city of Washington, and you will find old barnacles occupying positions there, men who have been there for half a century and whose services are now utterly worthless; yet the gentleman from Missouri, representing the Committee on Appropriations, goes on appropriating money to maintain these people in their respective Departments. It is a habit; and that habit has so grown that he can not see when a measure is presented to relieve the people from such burdens.

This measure, it seems to me, is wise. In the first place, in the rapid transit of human affairs existing to-day we do not send a messenger when we desire to convey information: we give the message to the telegraph or the telephone, or by some other means we communicate it much more rapidly than any personal messenger could do it. It seems to me this bill is a move in the right direction.

Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] or the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] appreciate the fact that long before the electoral vote under the present system is put into the hands of the messenger the people of the country know what the vote of a particular State has been, and they would not submit to any robbing of the messenger or the registry department of the post-office or the express company for the purpose of defeating their rights?

Mr. BAILEY. Would the gentleman insist that because the vote of a State is known before the meeting of the two Houses for the electoral count, therefore the House and the Senate in joint session could count that vote on such information, without the official return? They can only count what is before them.

Mr. CORLISS. I insist that because there is a record kept in the State, because the district judge of the district in which the board meet has a record—the original record—the duplicate may be lost and yet there will be ample time under this bill to secure another duplicate, as there would be now if the messenger should lose the return intrusted to him.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the gentleman understand that the loss might not be known in time to allow that to be done?

Mr. CORLISS. You can know now if a messenger starting from Texas and coming to Washington is murdered on the way. Perhaps some persons may think that nobody would know it; but I believe that "murder will out," even coming from the State of Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no doubt the gentleman thinks that a very bright and very wise reply. I do not think the House will agree with him. I give the gentleman to understand that a man's life is about as safe in Texas as a woman's life is in Michigan.

Mr. CORLISS. I presume that is so; and I am very glad that it is so.

Now, let me say to the gentleman that if these returns are certified by the proper officers chosen by the people, then under the provisions of this bill the people will be protected in three ways: First, the original or a duplicate is filed with the judge of the district court; secondly, the messenger selected, instead of coming personally to Washington, sends one copy to the Speaker of this House and another copy to the Vice-President of the United States. What is done under the present law? The messenger brings both those copies with him, so that both are in the hands of one person, while under this bill there would be a double protection, as the two copies would be sent different ways and by different means.

Mr. GREENE. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. CORLISS. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE. Suppose that these returns should be tampered with on the way here. Suppose they reach here in time, but have been changed in transit. Could we ever know that they had been changed until the day they were to be counted; and would not that be too late to get another return?

Mr. CORLISS. In reply to the gentleman's inquiry, I will say that long before the election board in any State has its meeting it is known to every citizen who can read what the vote of the people of that State is.

Mr. GREENE. That is not the question. Nothing could be counted by the joint convention of the two Houses except the vote actually before them. Now, if the returns should have been tampered with on the road, they might arrive here all right, and the fact that they had been tampered with would not be known until the returns were opened for the purpose of being counted; and then it would be too late to get a duplicate return from the judge. What would be done in that case?

Mr. CORLISS. That condition could occur to-day.

Mr. GREENE. How?

Mr. CORLISS. There is nothing to prevent tampering with these returns at present, if the officers intrusted with them prove untrustworthy. The returns are brought here in December and are left in charge of some one until March, when the returns are counted.

Mr. GREENE. But are not the returns when delivered here receipted for, so that we always know in exactly whose hands they are?

Mr. CORLISS. And you would know that just as fully under the system proposed in this bill.

Mr. GREENE. But duplicates are lodged in different hands.

Mr. CORLISS. The Postmaster-General and his subordinates are under bond for the safe-keeping of the mail matter intrusted to them. And let me say that the history of our postal service shows that the registry department is one of the safest means in the country for transmitting money or other valuables.

Mr. GREENE. But, under the present system, do not copies of these returns pass into numerous hands, so that if they were tampered with we could know just who did it, which could not be the case under this proposed system?

Mr. CORLISS. Let me add a word further in this connection.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. DOCKERY. Before the gentleman from Michigan takes his seat, I would like to say that I am somewhat at a loss to understand the ruthless assault which has been made upon me. The gentleman calls me personally to account for making or for assenting to certain appropriations reported by the Committee on Appropriations, of which I happen to be a member, especially the appropriation for the Civil Service Commission, which the gentleman charges is unnecessary and extravagant. Now, then, since the law requires an appropriation for the Civil Service Commission to be made, I would like to have the gentleman tell the House in what way I could have escaped my responsibility for the execution of the law?

Mr. CORLISS. I was simply calling attention by the suggestion to the habit of the gentleman from Missouri and members of the Appropriations Committee generally in making appropriations, many of which go through the House without question, and of course I had no personal reference to the gentleman himself.

Mr. DOCKERY. But does the gentleman from Michigan think it a fair occasion for criticism of me or upon the members of the Committee on Appropriations, when we report appropriations required by the law?

Mr. CORLISS. I would follow them up, as in this instance, by means that in my judgment would cure the evil.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does not the gentleman think that it is our duty and a correct "habit" to obey the law in making these appropriations?

Mr. CORLISS. Undoubtedly; I make no comment on that.

Mr. GAINES. Are you in favor of the civil-service law which you have been denouncing, as I understand it?

Mr. CORLISS. Certainly not.

Mr. GAINES. Are you opposed to the civil-service law which your party platform indorses?

Mr. CORLISS. I am.

Mr. GAINES. Then why do you not exhibit your faith by your works? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. GAINES (continuing). What has the gentleman done to show his faith? Has he any works which stand to his credit as an evidence of what he believes in that regard?

Mr. CORLISS (to Mr. BLAND). I have not been able to hear what the gentleman has been saying, there has been so much noise on this side of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. Yes; a question was put to the gentleman that he did not answer.

Mr. BLAND. I was going to suggest to the gentleman, in view of the change he suggests here, whether if, in his judgment, it would not also be a good plan to provide that all legal processes should be sent by mail, instead of delivered and served in person by an officer of the law, and have the returns also made by mail? According to the suggestion he makes here, we might save a great deal of money by that process and abolish the whole system which now exists.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. GAINES. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth." [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEPBURN). The question is on the third reading and engrossment of the bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to lay the bill on the table. No; I withdraw that motion. The bill is dead enough now.

Subsequently Mr. DOCKERY said:

Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to engross the bill relating to the electoral returns, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] moves to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the engrossment and third reading House bill No. 8, and he moves to lay that motion on the table. Without objection, that motion will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

NONPARTISAN LABOR COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee on Labor was passed over without prejudice, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] desires to call up a bill.

Mr. GARDNER. I call up, Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 4078) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that this bill is on the Union Calendar and not subject to call at this time.

Mr. BLAND. I want to make the point that it must be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAND. It does not come up in the morning hour under the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. BLAND. Then I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

EIGHT-HOUR LABOR BILL.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7389) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey, on behalf of the Committee on Labor, calls up the bill H. R. 7389. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time of service of all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon any public works of, or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, whether said work is done by contract or otherwise, is hereby limited and restricted to eight hours in any one calendar day; and it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States, or of any Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any person acting for or on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or said District, or any contractor or subcontractor for any part of any public works of, or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or said District, or any person whose duty it shall be to employ or to direct and control the services of such laborers, workmen, or mechanics, or who has in fact the direction or control of the services of such laborers, workmen, or mechanics, to require or permit them, or any of them, to labor more than eight hours in any one calendar day, except in cases of extraordinary emergency caused by fire, flood, or danger to life or property.

SEC. 2. That each and every contract to which the United States, any Territory, or the District of Columbia is a party, and every contract made for or on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or said District, which contract may involve the employment of laborers, workmen, or mechanics, shall contain a stipulation that no laborer, workman, or mechanic in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor doing or contracting to do any part of the work contemplated by the contract, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day; and each and every such contract shall stipulate a penalty for each violation of the stipulation directed by this act of $10 for each laborer, workman, or mechanic for each and every calendar day in which he shall labor more than eight hours; and the inspector or other officer or person whose duty it shall be to see that the provisions of any such contract are complied with shall report to the proper officer of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia all violations of the stipulation in this act provided for in each and every such contract, and the amount of the penalties stipulated in any such contract shall be withheld by the officer or person whose duty it shall be to pay the moneys due under such contract, whether the violations for which said penalties were imposed were by the contractor, his agents, or employees, or any subcontractor, his agents, or employees. No person on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia shall rebate or remit any penalty imposed under any stipulation herein provided for, unless upon a finding which he shall make up and certify that such penalty was imposed by reason of an error of fact.

SEC. 3. That any officer of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any person acting for or on behalf of the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, who shall violate the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, the fine not to exceed $500, nor the imprisonment one year.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act, in so far as they are inconsistent, be, and the same are hereby, repealed. But nothing in this act shall apply to any existing contract, or to soldiers and sailors enlisted, respectively, in the Army or Navy of the United States, or to seamen on seagoing vessels.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Labor were read:

In line 14 of section 2, after the word "mechanics," strike out the words "on any public work."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill limiting the hours of daily services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public works of or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether or not it applies to public buildings in a Territory which are purely Territorial buildings—for instance, a penitentiary?

Mr. GARDNER. I take it that it would.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does it apply to every public building erected in the city of Washington—for instance, District building?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; I take it that it would. It applies to all subjects over which Congress has jurisdiction. Whether it would apply to a particular building in a Territory or not would be a question of jurisdiction.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. If the chairman of the committee will permit me, I should like to ask him a question. He remembers that we have tried to reach a conclusion upon the legal effect of our respective bills on this subject and on the disturbing point. I ask my friend from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] if he thinks the provisions of the bill are comprehensive enough to include contracts for public works, buildings, etc., which are being constructed in the several States, and subsequently let out by subcontracts?

Mr. GARDNER. When erected by subcontractors?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will state to my friend that the question has arisen in several instances. Knowing his ability as a lawyer, I suppose he is aware of some of the adjudications. Under our former eight-hour law, which did apply to Government contracts, a contractor would obtain a contract from the Federal Government and then he would sublet, and the subcontractor would claim exemption from the law and escape liability.

Mr. GARDNER. The difficulty under that law is the reason for this bill being here.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The gentleman anticipates the information I was seeking. The contractor would subcontract, and the subcontractor would claim that the Federal statute did not apply to him—that he was controlled by the State laws alone. I am gratified to know that it is the opinion of the gentleman that this bill reaches that defect and remedies that evil.

Mr. GARDNER. That is the intention of the bill.

Mr. BRUCKER. Section 2 covers that.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will continue my remarks upon the necessity of this measure, and beg to embody my full argument made before the committee.

Mr. GARDNER. I have no desire to speak upon this bill, and I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BELKNAP].

[Mr. BELKNAP addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. LACEY. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask the gentleman to yield just a moment to me.

Mr. LACEY. I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not those "Territories" mentioned in the bill have or have not the eight-hour law?

Mr. GARDNER. I think not, so far as I am informed. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry, I will say to the gentleman now if he wants "Territory" stricken out of the bill that the committee will not object. Let me say, in a few sentences—which I think my throat will allow me—the committee was considering the localities over which Congress had jurisdiction—that is, Government works, work of the District of Columbia, and work in the Territories. It meant to cover the work where Congress had jurisdiction.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does it cover Federal work in the Territory?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the language of the bill covers territorial work in the Territories. What business or right has Congress to interfere in our internal affairs? We suffer from too much of this already.

Mr. GARDNER. I will answer again, there will be no objection to striking out of the language of the bill that would cover Territorial work or not cover Territorial work, according to the law under which they were being erected, and according to the provisions of the statutes. If a structure of a Territorial government was such that it was removed from the operation of a bill like this, this bill would repeal nothing, in other words.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We have a legislature that has full control on all these questions; but as I am in sympathy with the eight-hour law—in perfect sympathy with it—I only wish to present here my protest against Congress assuming jurisdiction in any case in the Territories where they are prohibited by the Constitution from acting in similar cases in a State. I ask and appeal to the House to leave all questions after this to our local legislature, which is eminently able to take care of them; but, as I said before, being in sympathy with the eight-hour law, I shall not present an amendment. The legislature of a Territory, whatever mistakes it makes, is entitled generally to as much respect as that of a State legislature.

If this measure touched any other question than the one it involves, I would never consent to its passage. But I am so sincerely in sympathy with any action which may possibly ameliorate the present condition of labor in Arizona or elsewhere that I can not move to strike "Territories" from the bill, though I at the same time recognize the injustice—not to say impudence—of members of a committee who, while their States are leaving employers free to treat the laborer as they please, exhibit their sympathy for the working man's cause by voting the eight-hour law—not on their States, but on the Territories.

The eight-hour law is right on public buildings wherever erected. Eight hours of honest work is enough to demand in these cases, and, I think, in any case. Eight hours of honest work, eight hours of sleep, and eight hours for study and recreation properly consume the time which makes the days of man's life. I do not wish to be misunderstood in my position here. I am determined that I will not be misunderstood. I am, first, intensely opposed to Congress invading the Territories within their rightful domain of local legislation; and, in the second place, I am much in favor of the legislation limiting the hours of labor on public buildings to eight hours a day.

Between these two my choice must be made, and I do not hesitate to record myself in favor of this bill, even while I protest against your interference with our local affairs. I trust this measure may not hereafter be invoked as a precedent for still further Congressional raids on the natural rights of the people who are building in the Territories foundations for great future States.

Mr. Chairman, labor will never probably receive its just reward in any state of modern society. It is our manifest duty, however, to do all that legislation can to make its burdens less and its condition more prosperous and happy.

If by any word of mine I could induce one man to vote for any bill which would give adequate return for labor or lessen the burden of toil, I would feel that I had not lived in vain. The prosperous think too seldom of the poor. They always have and always will. Dives and Lazarus are increasing in numbers as the world moves on.

The obligation rests on statesmanship to curb the aggression of Dives and assuage the pain of Lazarus as far as human law can do it consistent with the individual liberty of the citizen. The problem is perplexing, as all know who have given careful thought to it. God said, "There shall be hewers of wood and drawers of water," but He never said that a man should hew wood all day and hoist water half the night and go home to hungry children.

Yet these are the conditions which the signs of the times indicate as rapidly approaching. When these conditions shall actually be upon us, our boasted civilization will pass into history and the greatest of all Republics will add another to the sad wrecks which strew the ocean of time. I am no pessimist. I have hope in the perpetuity of our institutions. I have pride in the glory of my country's achievements, but I can not sit silently by and see those uneven and unjust conditions abound which must ultimately result in its injury if not its destruction.

The burdens of government must be borne equally. There must be under the law no favored classes. There must be equality or there will be discontent and friction. Unjust advantages obtained under law create disrespect for all law. Law must find its due observance in the good will and consent of the people for whom it is made. Labor asks no advantages. If it did, the demand should be refused. It asks only fair treatment by a fair distribution of the burdens of government, and to this it is fully entitled, and this it should have. When a fair day's work shall receive a fair day's wage, free from unjust exactions, then we will indeed have a happy and prosperous people.

I am in favor of the eight-hour law as prescribed in this bill, and I hope to see a similar provision on the statute books of every State in the Union. But this will not accomplish all that is expected or desired. The root of the evil strikes deeper into soil which we have not here and now the time or proper occasion to examine.

It is enough now to say that no law can ever be passed which will equalize the accumulation or distribution of wealth. The thrifty will thrive, the laggard will fall behind in the race, the sluggard will sleep, and no law can prevent it. But law can prevent and must prevent a handicap on the laggard in the race of life, and law can prevent and must prevent the thrifty from stealing from the sluggard while he sleeps.

In plainer phrase, the law can prevent discrimination in favor of classes, and if we fail to abolish these discriminations which so plainly exist we shall fall short of our obligation to our country and humanity and will deserve condemnation at the judgment seat of the power which gave us presence in this Hall.

Mr. LACEY. I wish to call the attention of the House and the chairman of the committee to the amendment which I offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 9, add at end of sentence the following words: "Nor to work upon public works or defenses in time of war."

Mr. LACEY. While the law now excepts the soldiers and sailors now enlisted and they may be called upon to work sixteen or twenty-four hours in time of battle, any one else is prevented from working more than eight hours in building forts or doing any work of that character, building an arsenal, or in any other emergency; and the only emergency excepted is one incurred by fire, flood, or danger to property. All that has been expressly forbidden. Now, it seems to me perfectly clear that this bill does not relieve the contractors who are building fortifications or erecting buildings for the manufacture of guns, powder, or any other necessity from the penalty of this act. If it is plain that it does, it ought to be made absolutely clear, and not in time of war tie the hands of the Government. It is not intended to cover any such thing.

Mr. GARDNER. There is no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa; but I do want to say that so far as the labor interests have spoken before the committee (showing how differently they construe the bill from the gentleman from Iowa) they are afraid that the provision as to the emergency caused by fire, flood, or danger to life or property will leave the War and Navy Department in a position to be eternally anticipating war, which in itself is always a threat and danger to life and property.

Mr. LACEY. Ought they not always to be preparing for it, night and day?

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, you are raising another question.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, this is the eight-hour bill. It limits and restricts, under a severe penalty for any violation, to eight hours in any one calendar day the time of service of all laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed on any public works of or work done for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, whether said work is done by contract, subcontract, or otherwise. I am heartily in favor of this bill, and I want to see it pass to-day. This bill, or one similar to it, has been before Congress a long time, and I am glad and congratulate the Committee on Labor that at last the bill is before the House for discussion and passage. There can be no valid objection to this bill, and I feel confident it will pass almost unanimously if it is not loaded down with amendments.

Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] regarding his proposed amendment that I deem it unnecessary and inexpedient. Let me say to him that in the Washington Navy-Yard, where they are working twenty-four hours, every hour day and night on account of the war, they only work the men eight hours a day—eight hours on and sixteen hours off. They work in squads or gangs, so that no man works more than eight hours out of the twenty-four. I think that ought to be so in regard to all work done by the Government, whether it is emergency work or not. In my judgment eight hours are long enough, and should constitute a day's work. I would like to see it less. In war or in peace no man should be compelled to work more than eight hours out of the twenty-four. Physical endurance can not stand much more, and more should not be required.

Mr. GARDNER. There is no objection to this amendment.

Mr. SULZER. Let me say I am not in favor of it.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has the unanimous indorsement of the labor organizations in the country, and they have no objection to it whatever.

Mr. SULZER. They demand the enactment of this bill just as it is. It ought not to be loaded down with amendments to kill it.

Mr. GARDNER. That is a fact. There is not a single dissenting voice in the country.

Mr. SULZER. And there should not be a dissenting vote here. I hope there will be none. Let me most earnestly and sincerely say, Mr. Speaker, that I am now, and always have been, an advocate of this bill, to make eight hours a legal day's work. It is a good bill, and ought to pass unanimously. I hope it will pass without an amendment. Let us pass it just as it comes from the Committee on Labor. That is the way the representatives of organized labor want it to pass. If you start in to amend it, you will defeat it, or, at all events, delay its passage. So far as the Territories are concerned, I can not understand why they should be excepted from the rest of the country. What is good for the States ought to be good for the Territories. A day's work should be a day's work all over the country.

In my judgment, no man in this country ought to be compelled to work more than eight hours a day. That is long enough. I believe if this bill becomes a law just as it was reported from the committee it will do more to relieve and benefit the workers and the toiling masses of the country than any other thing we can do at this time by way of legislation. There are in the country to-day, it is said on good authority, upward of 5,000,000 people out of employment. Labor organizations all over the country are asking this National Legislature to enact this and other laws to remedy this crying evil. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. The amendment is all right.

Mr. SULZER. I differ with my friend. That amendment will nullify a good part of the bill. In my judgment the Government will have no difficulty in getting all the men it needs for any kind of public work. We want fewer idle men and more work in this country. In case of emergency let the Government call for workmen, and I warrant there will be no difficulty in getting them. In the Washington Navy-Yard to-day, where they are working full time, as I said before, the whole twenty-four hours, they only work the men eight hours during the day. The navy-yard is only a little distance from here. Any one of you can go there and see for himself. And yet, sir, to-day in the city of Washington there are thousands and thousands of unemployed men and mechanics who have come here from all parts of the Union seeking employment at the navy-yard, but they can not get it. So it is all over the country—thousands and tens of thousands of men out of work, anxiously seeking work, but who can not find work.

I hope the amendment will be voted down and the bill passed just as it was reported from the committee.

I want to say that I am a friend of the wage earner. I want to see, and I hope the day is not far distant when we all shall see the eight-hour law the law all over the land and rigidly enforced in every State, every city, every town, and every village in the country. I believe it will be beneficial to the laborer, advantageous to the community in which he lives, and for the best interests of the Government. Too long hours make the wage earner a poor workman. Shorter hours, in my opinion, will produce better results all around and for all interests concerned. Every writer on political economy confirms this conclusion, and so great an authority as John Stuart Mill lays it down as a fundamental principle that any scheme for the amelioration of the social condition of the wage earner which does not proceed on this proposition as its foundation is for all permanent purposes a delusion and a snare.

For one I believe this bill when enacted into law is going to do a great deal of good. I am and always have been an advocate of shorter hours for a legal working day. The history of the past teaches us that every reduction in the hours constituting a day's work has resulted beneficially. We have gone on steadily, step by step, shortening the hours of labor and toil from sixteen hours to fourteen hours a day, from fourteen hours to twelve hours a day, from twelve to eleven hours, from eleven to ten hours, from ten to nine hours, and now we go from nine to eight hours a day, and in every instance it has been for the better. Statistics conclusively prove that every decrease in the number of hours constituting a legal workday has been for the advancement of the toilers and the progress of the masses.

These reductions in the hours of labor have decreased intemperance, increased knowledge, made better homes, happier and better clothed wives and children, brighter and more prosperous firesides, and in every way benefited the social relations, promoted happiness and contentment, and improved the moral, economical, and financial condition of the producing masses of our land.

In all the country I do not believe there is to-day a reasonable person who would advocate the proposition to again lengthen the hours making a legal workday. As the chairman of the committee has said, all authorities agree that the financial and social conditions of the laborer have improved with every reduction in the hours of daily service that up to this time has been made. We who believe in the short-hour theory contend, and defy successful contradiction, that to this system can be traced the decrease of poverty, pauperism, vice, and ignorance among our people, and their moral, social, and financial advancement and improvement.

Another point which I desire to briefly allude to is the admitted fact that decreasing the hours of toil increases the demand for labor, and the more demand for labor, as the price of labor is regulated by the law of supply and demand, the higher the wages that will be paid. It also increases the consumption of the products of labor, and hence increases the demand for production. Thus, sir, this policy in every way aiding, helping, elevating, and benefiting the workingmen, widening individual opportunity, making times better instead of worse, and at the same time building up on a sure and firm foundation the great business and industrial enterprises of our country. This system will also raise the social status of the laborer, and I stand with those who believe that the social status of the workman controls the law of wages, rather than the law of wages controls the status of the laborer.

There is another provision in the bill which I like, and that is the penalty. If this bill becomes a law, I doubt very much if any one will violate it. The penalty is very severe and all that could be asked for. The bill also provides for the enforcement of the eight-hour provision by the simple system of a clause in the contract instead of compelling the laborer to go to the courts. By this method all questions of personal and natural rights are avoided. This right of the employee is stipulated in the bond, and the penalty will prevent any violation.

Take it all in all, in my estimation this is the best bill for the workingman we have had before us in a long time.

It is a good bill, and there should be no objection to it. If this bill passes, and I have no doubt it will, I hope the chairman of the Committee on Labor, who is to be congratulated on the good work he is doing to-day for the people, will call up the labor-commission bill and pass that. Let us do that and then pass my bill to wipe out the sweating shops that infest the congested districts of our great cities, and then pass the bill regarding the transportation of prison-made goods. Let us do something for the toiling masses of this country who are out of employment, who vainly seek employment, and who can not get employment. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] refers to the labor-commission bill. I made the point that it ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole. I did not understand the bill, and I did not pay any attention to it, and I have now no objection to its consideration.

Mr. SULZER. I am glad to hear my good friend from Missouri say that. I know his heart is in the right place, and I know he is a friend of the toiling masses. I think the labor-commission bill a very important one. The commission will give the people of the country and the representatives of the people assembled in Congress very valuable information that every man here ought to have and that every man in the country ought to know.

Mr. DINGLEY. I trust my friend from New York will pardon me. I do not wish to mar his rhetoric, but when he speaks of 9,000,000 men out of employment, I trust he will modify it and get somewhere near the facts.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Maine will not mar my rhetoric. I spoke from information, and that is that upward of 5,000,000 people are out of employment, and the Dingley tariff law did not give employment to any perceivable extent to this vast army of the unemployed. If times are improving now, it is caused by short crops abroad and the present war, not the Dingley law.

Mr. GAINES. I should like to inquire of the gentleman how many men in Maine are out of employment?

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Maine will answer that. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment again, if there is no objection.

The amendment was again read.

[Mr. FITZGERALD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, this is an important measure, and I regret that I have but a few minutes of time, for its magnitude deserves the most elaborate discussion. But I wish to make one or two observations. For very many years, indeed for many ages, the question has agitated the public mind as to where the right of labor to contract should end, and where the Government should interpose to discourage unreasonable length of hours. We live in an age of the most remarkable development of mechanics and inventions ever known in the history of the world; and I believe that judiciously framed laws looking to the limitation of labor to reasonable hours are wise.

I believe that the surest way for labor to get the benefit that it ought to receive from the vast improvements of the age in machinery, in skill, and in inventions is by shortening the hours of labor and by the increase of the years of the youth that may be employed in our factories. Whatever legislation can do to protect the child from excessive labor until it reaches the age where it has strength enough to labor, and until it shall have obtained such education as ought to be obtained as its equipment for life, is wise legislation. Then, after reasonable toil, whatever can be given to mankind for recreation, for reading, for education, is wise.

This bill provides for an eight-hour law to be enforced in works carried on by the Government. To prevent ruin to those who have taken contracts under a different system it provides for its application to future contracts instead of making it retroactive. There are hundreds of thousands of laborers idle now. It is claimed and believed by the authors of the bill and those who have urged it that the example thus set will work beneficially and that the custom of eight hours as a day's labor will prevail, thereby ameliorating the condition of those who toil for their daily bread.

Mr. Speaker, it is by toil that farms are cleared, factories built, wealth accumulated, and strength added to governments. There are no people in the world who work harder or to greater advantage than the people of the United States. Our labor is the most efficient in the world, because the most intelligent. It is the most highly educated labor to be found. No other people on earth devote half as much money to education annually as we do. Hence the intelligence of our labor. That high standard of intelligence can be best maintained by keeping young children out of the factory till the rudiments of education can be obtained, till good physical vigor can be developed, and both intelligence and strength obtained.

Sir, even after this, if the toiler can have a little time each day from his farm or factory to devote to recreation and reading, his usefulness, both as a laborer and a citizen, will be increased.

Sir, in this great and free Republic all depends upon the strength, intelligence, and patriotism of the citizen. These qualities are the foundation of the Republic.

Mr. Speaker, believing that this bill will tend to improve the condition of the citizen and thereby enhance his value to his country, I shall give it my support.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, I desire just here the indulgence of the House for a moment while I read a single resolution, one of the planks of a Democratic platform, adopted by the Democrats of the United States at their national convention held in 1868, by which Horatio Seymour, the gifted son of New York, was nominated for the Presidency.

This resolution, unanimously adopted, reads as follows:

Resolved, That this convention sympathize cordially with the workingmen of the United States in their efforts to protect the rights and interests of the laboring classes of the country.

I am happy to say that this convention assembled on "the 4th of July," 1868.

The Republican convention which nominated General Grant assembled in Chicago May 20, 1868, and ignored the organized "workingmen" of this country, and later on succeeded in electing General Grant, who received 3,015,071 votes, over Seymour, who received 2,709,613 votes. Thus the Republican party ignored at this early day the appeals of organized "workingmen" and defeated that party at the polls that did recognize them—the Democrats. I will not detain the House further by commenting on this Democratic plank nor the history of the Democratic party in maintaining in State and national legislation the letter and spirit of this resolution. It needs no comment.

I will add that the eight-hour labor law is a Democratic measure. The very first bill ever offered in Congress was introduced by a Democrat January 19, 1866, by the Hon. Mr. Rogers, of New Jersey; but it received an untimely burial by a Republican Judiciary Committee, to which it was unfortunately referred.

I have said enough to rivet your eyes upon the early history of this salutary legislation, and to point to its first friend in this House and on the hustings—the Democratic party. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill, which was prepared by the chairman of the Committee on Labor, was, it will be observed, introduced on the 27th of January, 1898—before there was any war going on outside of the House of Representatives. It has been approved by the Federation of American Labor. We were fighting some battles here; but the war was not immediately urgent, and the contingency which has been provided for in this amendment was not at that time taken into consideration. I am satisfied that the Federation of American Labor would approve this amendment thoroughly and would incorporate such a provision in the bill if it were to be introduced now for the first time.

Mr. GARDNER. The committee, as I have said, are willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. BRUCKER. I should like to have the amendment reported again.

The amendment was again read, as follows:

On page 2, line 9, at the end of the sentence, add "nor to work upon public works or defenses in time of war."

Mr. BRUCKER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether that amendment as read would not operate with respect to all public buildings in course of construction during the period of actual warfare?

Mr. LACEY. Of course it might have that effect.

Mr. BRUCKER. That is just what I am afraid of.

Mr. LACEY. The object especially in view is to reach the arsenals. We have now an eight-hour law; but we are providing in this bill additional penalties for its violation. Eight hours under the law of the United States constitute now a day's work; but in this bill we propose to make it a criminal offense for a public officer to require a greater number of hours as a day's work. In time of war, however, necessities are likely to arise which may require laborers in the employ of the Government to work more than eight hours. This amendment is intended to recognize the fact that upon public works necessary for the defense of the country or the prosecution of the war it may be at times requisite for laborers to work more than eight hours a day. That, I presume, would be the fair construction put upon this legislation.

Mr. BRUCKER. This bill, as I understand, does not create any new offenses.

Mr. LACEY. Yes, it does. It provides that whoever violates its provisions shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to fine or imprisonment.

Mr. BRUCKER. That simply applies to Government officials and not to contractors or subcontractors who may employ labor; but let me say to the gentleman that the committee which reported this bill had under consideration the very proposition which he has submitted. We discussed section 2 and the exceptions that it makes in case of extraordinary emergency occasioned by fire or flood or danger to "life and property." The question of incorporating in the bill the very provision the gentleman has now offered was discussed in the committee, and they took the view that such a provision, if adopted, would apply to all public buildings in course of construction during the actual progress of a war; in other words, that such a provision would be entirely too broad, and we concluded that the provisions of section 2 would cover all emergencies.

Mr. LACEY. The law at present limits the work on those buildings to eight hours a day; but these additional penalties could very safely be remitted during time of war.

Mr. BRUCKER. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that the same advantage may be taken of this amendment, if adopted, that the representatives of the different labor organizations who appeared before our committee stated had been taken of the eight-hour law now upon our statute books. We have had an eight-hour law for years, but the trouble was we could not enforce it. Contractors and officials evaded it.

Mr. LACEY. But it is very much more important that Boston should be protected now than to enforce a strict requirement of any law, either in or out of war conditions.

I think the amendment I have offered relieves this proposition from the danger which surrounds it.

Mr. BRUCKER. But the trouble about the amendment of the gentleman is that it goes too far. It covers not only the construction of military defenses and fortifications, but everything else—public buildings and all.

Mr. BELKNAP. If the gentleman will permit me, it seems to me that the amendment would annul the bill and destroy its vitality.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no; it simply preserves the bill, if the gentleman will examine the amendment.

Mr. BELKNAP. But your amendment, as I understand the reading of it, would extend to all public works—not only to public defenses of every character, but to all public works and buildings.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I thought I had the floor. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAYNE). The Chair is a little uncertain as to who is entitled to the floor [laughter], there seem to be so many members engaged in the controversy.

Mr. BRUCKER. I understood the gentleman from New Jersey had yielded to me, as I am a member of the committee reporting this bill.

Mr. GARDNER. I will yield to my friend if he will keep the floor for himself, and not let a half dozen occupy it at the same time.

Mr. BRUCKER. I shall endeavor to do so.

The reason I am solicitous about opposing any amendment to any of the sections of this bill, Mr. Speaker, lies in the fact that we have already an eight-hour law on our statute books which has been there for many years, and I presume when Congress passed that law it was intended to accomplish a certain purpose, to limit the hours of labor. But the representatives of the different labor organizations in this country who appeared before the Committee on Labor have demonstrated the fact that contractors and subcontractors had and could evade the law and, in its present form, make it practically a dead letter.

Now, the first consideration ought to be to secure the passage of an eight-hour law that can be enforced. Now, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, unless it be modified, will, in my judgment, destroy or nullify to some extent at least the result which we seek to accomplish. This bill in effect is simply an amendment to the present eight-hour law, which, if passed, will prevent contractors and subcontractors and others engaged on Government contracts from taking advantage of the laboring men.

As to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], unless modified, it will, in my judgment, nullify to some extent the salutary provisions of the bill which the committee intended for the protection of organized labor throughout the country, and more especially with reference to men who are engaged on public buildings or public works of any character.

I am therefore opposed to the amendment in its present form, and hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. GARDNER. I think I can suggest a modification of the amendment which will remove the difficulty and the objection to it.

I move to insert in the amendment, before the word "work," the words "military or naval."

Mr. LACEY. I will accept that amendment.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question for my own information.

What will be the situation, under the bill, of a contractor who undertook, say twelve or six months ago, to execute a piece of public work that may extend over a period of four or five years? Of course, he put in his bid on the basis of ten or eleven hours' work per day. Now you are cutting down the hours to eight. What is to become of him?

Mr. McCLEARY. As we have already an eight-hour law upon our statute books he could not plead ignorance of the law, because he had due notice of it.

Mr. GARDNER. Section 4 of the bill, if the gentleman will examine it, meets precisely the point to which he refers. It is provided there that "nothing herein contained shall apply to any existing contract."

Mr. FLEMING. I am obliged to the gentleman. I wanted to obtain the information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, whether an amendment could be offered to grade the pay of laborers at so much per hour? I mean with reference to men who are working on Government contracts?

Mr. GARDNER. That could not be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would, if possible, propose an amendment paying them not less than 25 cents an hour, so that no man should receive less than $2 a day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments proposed by the committee.

The amendments were considered, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARDNER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The title of the bill was amended to conform to the amendments agreed to in committee.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARDNER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey kindly yields for me to make a request that I be allowed to print some observations on this measure which has just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to print some remarks in the RECORD upon the bill just passed. Is there objection?

Mr. DINGLEY. Let this be limited. Is this for the gentleman himself?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that those gentlemen who have spoken upon this bill to-day be given the privilege of extending their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that those who have spoken upon this bill to-day be given the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I do not object to any particular member having that permission, but I do not think we ought to make it general.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is for those gentlemen who have spoken upon the bill.

Mr. MAHON. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection?

There was no objection.

LABOR COMMISSION.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I asked a while ago to take up the bill H. R. 4073, and I asked unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] then objected, it being on the Union Calendar. That objection is now withdrawn. If there be no other objection, I again ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would not be in order under the present call of committees, the bill not being on the House Calendar.

Mr. GARDNER. Not by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order was demanded, and the House was proceeding with the call of committees, which is the regular order.

Mr. KING. That being so, I call for the regular order.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman who called for the regular order will withdraw it for the purpose of considering this labor-commission bill. The bill ought to pass to-day. It is a good bill, and there should be no objection to it. I trust there will be none. Let us pass it now and do something for organized labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The call rests with the Committee on Labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who called for the regular order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order was demanded by the gentleman from Utah. So the only business in order is the call of committees. The call rests with the Committee on Labor.

Mr. MAHON. How long has the call of committees been on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it has proceeded for an hour and a half.

Mr. MAHON. Then the gentleman from New Jersey, under the rule, can make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule XXIV:

After one hour shall have been devoted to the consideration of bills called up by committees, it shall be in order, pending consideration or discussion thereof, to entertain a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or, when authorized by a committee, to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider a particular bill.

Mr. GARDNER. If it is in order to make a motion, it is in order to consider the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAHON. I move we go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering that bill.

Mr. GARDNER. I move that the committee resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 4073.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 4073) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment to that motion, if it is in order. My amendment is—

And also to consider House bill 369.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair remembers the rule, the amendment extends only to the substitution of another bill, not to the addition of one.

Mr. MOODY. I call the attention of the Chair to the wording of section 5 of Rule XXIV.

To which motion one amendment only, designating another bill, may be made.

Mr. MAHON. But the gentleman ought to have made his amendment to the motion. He can not do it now.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman please indicate what is the nature of the bill he desires to have considered?

Mr. MOODY. It is a little bill reported by the Committee on Claims, a small matter. It would not take five minutes.

Mr. SULZER. I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman's motion is not too late. The motion has just been stated to the House.

Mr. SULZER. Then I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion. I fear if he insists on it, this bill will be defeated.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is the bill to which the gentleman refers on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union? It must be a bill on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the number of the bill designated by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MOODY. There is nothing in the rule which makes it necessary that that bill, offered by way of amendment, should be upon the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the bill which the gentleman proposes to call up a bill on the Union Calendar?

Mr. MOODY. It is on the Calendar of the Whole House; not on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would not be in order, then. The rule plainly refers to bills on the Union Calendar. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MOODY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 4073, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4073) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be called the "Industrial Commission," to be composed as follows: Five members of the Senate, to be appointed by the presiding officer thereof; five members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, and nine other persons, who shall fairly represent the different industries and employments, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of this commission to investigate questions pertaining to immigration, to labor, to agriculture, to manufacturing, and to business, and to report to Congress and to suggest such legislation as it may deem best upon these subjects.

SEC. 3. That it shall furnish such information and suggest such laws as may be made a basis for uniform legislation by the various States of the Union, in order to harmonize conflicting interests and to be equitable to the laborer, the employer, the producer, and the consumer.

SEC. 4. That the commission shall give reasonable time for hearings, if deemed necessary, and if necessary it may appoint a subcommission or subcommissions of its own members to make investigation in any part of the United States, and it shall be allowed actual necessary expenses for the same. It shall have the authority to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and affirmations. All necessary expenses, including clerks, stenographers, messengers, rent for place of meeting, and printing and stationery, shall be paid from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; however, not to exceed $50,000 per annum for expenditures under this section.

SEC. 5. That it may report from time to time to the Congress of the United States, and shall at the conclusion of its labors submit a final report.

SEC. 6. That the term of the commission shall be two years. The salary of each member of this commission appointed by the President shall be $3,600 per annum and actual traveling expenses.

SEC. 7. That any vacancies occurring in the commission by reason of death, disability, or from any other cause shall be filled by appointment of the President of the United States.

SEC. 8. That a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GARDNER. I have only to say at this time, Mr. Chairman, that this bill is in the same form in so far as it can be, owing to the changed circumstances, this being the middle of the Congressional term, as the Phillips bill of the last Congress. It is in the same form which was agreed to in both Houses, or as nearly so as it can be in the same form at this time. I do not know that there is occasion to say another word. I take occasion at this time, Mr. Chairman, to send up an amendment to the Clerk's desk to meet the point raised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LIVINGSTON] the other morning. It is probable that owing to the fact that some members of this commission, if appointed now or in a month or two, may serve after their terms as Members of Congress or as Senators have expired, where the question of transportation would arise and where it would not have arisen at the end of a Congress; so I offer this amendment to meet the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that there is an amendment proposed by the committee to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GARDNER. That is not an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment which was offered the other day. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, section 7, after the word "pay," insert the words "unless he shall be reelected."

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. I beg to withdraw that amendment and offer the following, which makes this a better bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the amendment proposed and proposes the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 4, section 6, strike out the word "and" and insert a period(.), and then insert the words "Each member of the commission shall be allowed;" so that it will read: "The salary of each member of this commission appointed by the President shall be $3,600 per annum. Each member of the commission shall be allowed actual traveling expenses."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In section 7, line 3, strike out the words "of the President of the United States" and insert "by the officer and in the same manner as was the member whose retirement from the commission creates the vacancy. That in case the term of a Senator or Representative expires while a member of this commission, said Senator or Representative shall not thereby cease to be a member of said commission, but shall serve until the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, drawing pay from the time his term as Senator or Representative expires, at the same salary as those members of the commission appointed by the President of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GARDNER. I move that the committee rise, Mr. Chairman, and report the bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MOODY, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4073 and had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments and with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARDNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Labor have reported and directed me to bring up on the first call of the committee but one other bill, the bill H. R. 9334.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees is finished.

Mr. GARDNER. I want to make a statement, Mr. Speaker, and I ask indulgence for one moment. As I was going to say about this bill, it is a bill to prevent the transportation of prison-made goods from becoming a subject of interstate commerce. The committee have investigated that subject. For myself, I am satisfied that bill ought to pass; but I have not here, tabulated and ready, the information which I think this House would have a right to ask for. Now, if the members of the House are satisfied that they are ready to vote on a measure of this kind, I have no desire to delay.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Why do you not ask unanimous consent to bring it up?

Mr. GARDNER. Well, I do not want to do injustice to a measure by bringing it up here at a time when I do not think the committee are prepared to take that care of the bill that they ought.

Mr. MAGUIRE. That is another matter.

Mr. GARDNER. In other words, I would like to develop some method of finding out whether there is any opposition.

Mr. McEWAN. There is none developed.

Mr. SULZER. I hardly think there will be any opposition to this bill. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now considered. I know all about this bill, and I have no hesitancy in saying it ought to receive the approval of this House. Let us take it up and pass it.

Mr. CANNON. Let us hear the bill read. We do not know what the bill is.

Mr. GARDNER. I am not prepared to offer further measures at all. If there is any opposition to this bill, I would not want to risk it to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9334) to protect the free labor from prison competition.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 18, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, without objection.

CONSULAR REPORTS ON FOREIGN INDUSTRIES AND COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanying the annual reports of the consuls of the United States upon foreign industries and commerce. In view of the value of these reports to the business interests of the country, I indorse the recommendation of the Secretary of State that Congress authorize the printing of a special edition of 10,000 copies of the general summary entitled Review of the World's Commerce, and of 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations (including the summary), to enable the Department of State to meet the demands for such information.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 16, 1898.

LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service touching the facts in the case and the propriety of Congressional action in the matter of acknowledging the claims of W. A. Newell as the originator of the system of Life-Saving Service of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SECOND ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill to provide for the appointment, during time of war, of a Second Assistant Secretary of War, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4569) for the relief of E. P. Atwood, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1189) for the relief of Charles Gallagher, and to refer his claims to the Court of Claims, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9815) appointing commissioners to revise the statutes relating to patents, trade and other marks, and trade and commercial names, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 671) appointing commissioners to revise the statutes relating to patents, trade and other marks, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6512) granting an extension of letters patent No. 20694 to Mary J. Day, inventor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3703) for the relief of George W. Graham, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3576) for the relief of James Grace, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

WILLIAM G. FORD.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4405) for the relief of William G. Ford, administrator de bonis non of John G. Robinson, deceased, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4405) entitled "A bill for the relief of William G. Ford, administrator de bonis non of John G. Robinson, deceased," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

SAMUEL M'KEE.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of Samuel McKee, to report it without amendment. This is a case where the House has passed a bill to pay for expenses incurred in a contested-election case, and it has been the custom to allow the House to control those matters. I ask that the bill may be now considered. It is a very short bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Samuel McKee the sum of $1,718, for expenses incurred by him in a contest for his seat in the Fortieth Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report a bill, and I ask to have it read and put upon its passage.

The bill (S. 4621) to amend sections 10 and 13 of an act entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," approved April 22, 1898, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 10 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for temporarily increasing the military establishment of the United States in time of war, and for other purposes," approved April 22, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding at the end thereof the following, to wit: "And provided, That officers of the Regular Army shall be eligible for such staff appointments, and shall not be held to vacate their offices in the Regular Army by accepting the same, but shall be entitled to receive only the pay and allowances of their staff rank."

SEC. 2. That section 13 of said act is amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That the governor of any State or Territory may, with the consent of the President, appoint officers of the Regular Army in the grades of field officers in organizations of the Volunteer Army, and the President may appoint officers of the Regular Army in the grade of field officers in organizations of the Volunteer Army raised in the District of Columbia and the Indian Territory, and in the regiments possessing special qualifications provided for in section 6 of an act of Congress approved April 22, 1898, and in section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 11, 1898; and officers thus appointed shall be entitled to retain their rank in the Regular Army: Provided, That not more than one officer of the Regular Army shall hold a commission in any one regiment of the Volunteer Army at the same time: And provided further, That officers so appointed shall be entitled to receive only the pay and allowances of their rank in the volunteer organization."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 237) appointing four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a matter of form, I think, but immediate action is usual in this case, and I ask that the joint resolution be now considered.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appoint WILLIAM J. SEWELL, of New Jersey; Martin T. McMahon, of New York; JOHN L. MITCHELL, of Wisconsin, and William H. Bonsall, of California, members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers of the United States for the term of six years commencing April 21, 1898, and until their successors are elected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 4622) granting a pension to John S. Beaty; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 4623) to ratify agreements with the Indians of the Lower Brule and Rosebud reservations in South Dakota, and making an appropriation to carry the same into effect; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4624) for the allotment of unallotted lands belonging to the Seneca and Quapaw Indians in Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 4625) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4626) to change the proceedings for admission to the Government Hospital for the Insane in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4627) to amend section 5 of an act approved July 22, 1892, entitled "An act to provide for the opening of alleys in the District of Columbia;" which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 169) to prevent discrimination against graduates of legally chartered medical colleges in appointments in the Army, Navy, and Marine-Hospital Service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

A bill (H. R. 4073) authorizing the appointment of a nonpartisan commission to collate information and to consider and recommend legislation to meet the problems presented by labor, agriculture, and capital; and

A bill (H. R. 7389) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers, workmen, and mechanics employed upon the public work of or work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia.

The bill (H. R. 9604) to grant a right of way to the village of Flandreau, S. Dak., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10378) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions, and for other objects, for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

QUARTERMASTER SUPPLIES, ETC.

Mr. HAWLEY. I submit a conference report upon House bill 10121.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The Senator from Connecticut presents a conference report, which will be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. The report was first presented about ten days ago. It has been considered two or three times. Let the report be read. It is short.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 9, 10, and 11.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 14; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 1 of said amendment strike out the word "Sixth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Third;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add to the end of said amendment as a new paragraph the following:

"And be it further enacted, That during the existing war the Bureau of Ordnance of the War Department is authorized to purchase without advertisement such ordnance and ordnance stores as are needed for immediate use, and when such ordnance and ordnance stores are to be manufactured, then to make contracts without advertisement for such stores to be delivered as rapidly as manufactured."

J. R. HAWLEY,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

B. F. MARSH,
M. GRIFFIN,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SPOONER. It is difficult for me—I do not know how it may be with other Senators—to understand what modifications have been made by the conference report, as it refers to amendments only by numbers. I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs explain to the Senate fully, if he pleases, just what modifications have been made by the conference committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. The controversy arose over the proposal to repeal section 3709 of the Revised Statutes. I can easily have it read; but I suppose most Senators are very familiar with it. In order to satisfy, if it were possible, the critics, the Senate conferees receded and abandoned the repeal of section 3709, and knowing well the necessities of the Quartermaster's Department and the Ordnance Department more particularly, they substituted, in order to avoid the difficulties complained of and to give relief to the Ordnance Department, the following provision:

That during the existing war the Bureau of Ordnance of the War Department is authorized to purchase without advertisement such ordnance and ordnance stores as are needed for immediate use, and when such ordnance and ordnance stores are to be manufactured, then to make contracts without advertisement for such stores, to be delivered as rapidly as manufactured.

Those five lines form the essence of the conference report as it stands now.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand the Senator from Connecticut in charge of the measure to say that the provision contained in the bill on page 2, lines 8 to 23, has been eliminated?

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator please indicate it?

Mr. GORMAN. It is the provision to which attention was called in the Senate and which was controverted. It is in the original text of the bill, on page 2, lines 8 to 23. It has been passed upon by both Houses, and I did not catch from the reading of the report that that proviso had been stricken out. It provides:

That hereafter no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department shall be expended on printing, etc.

And then repeals practically the former provision. Is that stricken out of the bill by the conference report?

Mr. HAWLEY. That section is not, I take it. This is what is stricken out: The repealing of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes "so far as the same relates to the bureaus of the War Department, and all branches of the Army." The Senate conferees recede from that amendment striking out so much of section 3709, and leave it upon the statute book, substituting a moderate measure of relief in a new paragraph, which I have just read.

Mr. GORMAN. So the Senate conferees recede from that clause.

Mr. HAWLEY. Repealing section 3709 distinctly.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the committee of conference have in addition authorized the Ordnance Bureau of the War Department to make contracts without advertisement for ordnance of any class or description, whether for immediate delivery or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. It does what I have read, and I will read it again:

That during the existing war the Bureau of Ordnance of the War Department is authorized to purchase without advertisement such ordnance and ordnance stores as are needed for immediate use—

If the articles be on hand manufactured, there is no difficulty about it at all—and when such ordnance and ordnance stores are to be manufactured, then to make contracts without advertisement for such stores to be delivered as rapidly as manufactured.

The statutes limit the extent to which a man can contract. He is bound by the sum appropriated, and the law says he shall not go beyond it. The Government is entirely protected, in my opinion.

Mr. GORMAN. Does the Senator mean to say that the door is open for the Ordnance Department to make a contract for the delivery of cannon to be delivered one year or two years hence without advertisement?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know what the limitation in the statute is, but certainly the Bureau is not authorized to go two years. But when it must have a certain number of projectiles for cannon, they are not kept in toy shops and there are none on hand. The Bureau knows exactly who will make them, and exactly what it has got to pay, and can not go peddling around in the country for them.

Not more than three or four establishments can make them. The Bureau wants them for the best naval vessels or shore-defense vessels, for 10-inch or 8-inch guns, and must make a contract that they shall work twenty-four hours a day until they furnish enough. We do not want a red-tape tying up of the Bureau under those circumstances. If we have not an honest Chief of Ordnance, let us have him cashiered and turned out. But I tell you in the present circumstances you can not do the business we are trying to do without giving some such power of immediate purchase and immediate contract, day and night work, and the subdivision of some kinds of work, one part to this manufacturer, and another part to that manufacturer, and so forth. I can give the gentleman some information about that, but I will not do it in open session. If he desires, I will ask for a brief secret legislative session and the reading of something interesting.

Mr. GORMAN. I do no tthink that is at all necessary, for my information at all events. I will state all that I am trying to accomplish. I wish to give the Department complete authority to purchase where shell or shot and small arms or large arms are necessary to be acquired immediately—and "immedintely" under the construction of the statute given by the Attorney-General is sixty days—give the Department full authority to purchase anything that they deem necessary to get the Army and Navy in a condition to move. But what I do object to is this provision which, as I understand it, authorizes the Department to contract to the extent authorized by law for the delivery of material one or two years hence without advertisement. There is nothing——

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I call for a secret legislative session, a short one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a second to the motion?

Mr. SPOONER. I second the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is seconded. The Sergeant-at-Arms will close the doors and clear the galleries.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to deliberate with closed doors; and after further debate the conference report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10378) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions, and for other objects, for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the revenue bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senate had reached page 28 of the bill and agreed to the amendment numbered 57, inserting the proviso from line 5 to line 13, in section 17, on that page. I ask unanimous consent that in line 7 there be inserted after the word "telegraph" the words "or telephone."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 17, on page 28, line 7, after the word "telegraph," it is proposed to insert "or telephone;" so as to read:

Provided, That the messages or dispatches of the officers and employees of any telegraph or telephone company concerning the affairs and service of the company, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, the war now flagrant imposes upon us the duty of providing an extraordinary revenue to defray the expenses incident to its prosecution. The members of this body have but one purpose, which is to give to our country in its armed conflict with the Kingdom of Spain all the pecuniary and other aid necessary to the successful and auspicious issue of the contest, even to the last man and the last dollar. The differences here between us are only differences of method, differences as to the way in which the common purpose may be effected. Such differences resemble those which occur at the front and in the field with reference to the plan of campaign, with reference to whether a regiment shall be armed with Mauser or with Winchester rifles, with reference to the character of shot and shell or munitions to be furnished to a battle ship.

It is of advantage to the Republic that such differences should obtain. They are the only methods by which you may sift and search the overtures which are made to us. The free discussion here and elsewhere in respect to these differences will be the useful handmaid and companion of all legislation.

It is a very easy thing to say, "The country is at war and we must have money to conduct it, and it is immaterial how we procure the money." It is very easy to say this, but such is not the language of statesmanship; such is not the language even of intelligent and honest politics. It is rather the language of supine indifference and of careless or insolent presumption. An easy and indolent acquiescence in the scheme first proposed, because it is proposed by a particular party or favored by a particular department of the Government, is not evidence of a wholesome condition of public legislative sentiment.

It is very unfortunate, Mr. President, much to be regretted, that in the task now imposed upon us of raising an extraordinary revenue for war purposes we are to have no assistance from the law now in force in respect of the raising of revenue. It must be recollected, however, that the Dingley bill, as that law is commonly called, did not purport to be a measure for revenue. Its friends and promoters claimed that it was a measure for protection; that it would afford protection full and plenary to its beneficiaries. The claim is true. They predicted also that it would bring sufficient revenue for the Government upon a peace establishment. That prediction has not been verified. Indeed, sir, the revenue law commonly called the Dingley bill was not intended to produce revenue, at least for the public Treasury. It was laid out upon different lines; it has already become useless, and, in a sort, unserviceable. It is an excrescence, and has always been an anomaly in our fiscal system. It is one of those offensive tumors which the great dramatist has called "cankers"—"the cankers of a calm world and a long peace."

It is very timely at this juncture to ask the large majority of this Congress to recur once more to the text of the Constitution, that "Congress has power to levy and collect taxes," to ask a consideration of the fact that levy and collection go together; they are undivided and indivisible, that when a tax is levied which is not to be collected, which is so high as to be uncollectible, when it is levied with the purpose of preventing importation and collection, it is not only an abuse of the power, but a nullification of it, and brings always the result of an inadequate and insufficient revenue. So I think after we have completed the present duties devolved upon us one of the first offices of the American Congress should be to revise the existing law upon the subject of revenue upon such lines, such divisions, such subdivisions, and such brackets as at least to afford money sufficient for the public expenditures in the ordinary peace establishment.

This failed experiment of the Dingley bill has brought to us an aftermath very unpleasant, very disagreeable. This aftermath follows us long; it is not to be gotten rid of; it is found even in this bill to provide revenue for war expenditures. The twenty-eighth section of the bill provides for the issue of a hundred million dollars of Treasury certificates, which shall be paid out for the purpose of defraying public expenditures—public expenditures, not war expenditures—a phrase carefully prepared, inserted, and deliberately retained for covering miscellaneous expenditures, both civil and military. Thus the twenty-eighth section of the pending bill provides a basketful of Treasury certificates, out of which may be supplied the deficiencies which may occur in the present revenue under what is called the Dingley Act.

I have heard the Democratic party charged in this Hall very severely with gross dereliction of duty in the fact that there was during a single month under the Wilson law a deficit in the revenue. We did not deny that deficit: but we had faith in the future of the law, that it would recover its efficiency and prove its power to render revenue sufficient for all purposes in ordinary times. We never resorted, at least, to the expedient presented in the pending bill. We never resorted to the expedient of concealing the deficiencies under the tariff act, and in the guise of public expenditures paying those deficiencies out of the Treasury in the shape of certificates. We have never done that. This bill, however, providing for war expenditures does it in express terms, and it is proposed now in this manner to close the incident of the Dingley deficit.

The first thing which the committee did in beginning the consideration of the pending bill was to call in attendance before it the three Secretaries most conversant with the needs of the Government for money, and asked of them their estimates for war expenditures for the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of July next, for we propose, without determining anything about the duration of the war, to levy taxes, to collect and derive revenue from other sources enough to satisfy any estimates that were made for the conduct of the war for one fiscal year at least; and in the statements of these officers there was very great unanimity. The Secretary of the Treasury said that it would require $25,000,000 a month for the prosecution of the war upon the present armament by sea and land, which made $300,000,000 for the calendar year.

The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, taking their joint accounts together, concluded as a safe estimate that it would cost $270,000,000 under the same circumstances to prosecute the war and pay its expenses in their Departments, and the $30,000,000 added are added as a provision for probable contingencies. This estimate embraced all the expenses of every kind necessary for prosecuting the present campaign, and embraced the expense of transportation to the Philippines, which was especially mentioned and provided for in these contingencies, and which is the largest item of expense possible to the proportion of the number of men in the campaign. It provided also for the recruitment of the Regular Army up to its full war limit, filling all the skeleton regiments. All of these were embraced in the estimate of $300,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, we are not traveling over any incalculable contingencies or on new ground. We have made the principal campaign once before, the campaign against Cuba. We have taken Havana and Morro Castle and the whole island. I say "we." The British Government did that in 1762. The colonies, our forefathers, contributed a very large quota of the troops employed there. They contributed all the supplies and munitions, both for the fleet and army, of that expedition. Indeed, the seaports of the colonies were used as bases of supplies both for the operation of the fleet and army against Cuba. Florida was not then with us. What is very singular, that campaign occurred in May and June. It was a land attack for the same reasons that this will be a land attack. The harbor of Havana was closed; it was not mined. It was closed by sunken hulks chained together in the channel. The active campaign lasted six weeks after landing, and there was a full possession of the island with all its cities. It was held for a year, when it was re-ceded to Spain.

All the lines of transportation and all the lines of expeditionary armed movement are well known, and the officers of the Army and Navy in charge now of the present expedition. These estimates are closely made as to actual expense, though they are liberally provided for by Congress.

The next question that occurred to the committee was how should the $300,000,000 be raised, and upon that our action was unanimous—$150,000,000 by taxation and $150,000,000 by other means—nor do I recollect now any disagreement with respect to the details of taxation. It is true we made very many amendments, and I think very profitable amendments, to the schedule of stamps and the schedule of excises, but the amendments which we made to the House bill were rather in the way of equality of distribution than of any increase of the amount. The stamps and excises provided up to Schedule B will undoubtedly yield $100,000,000. That is a safe estimate.

The other $50,000,000 the majority of the committee propose to raise by a tax upon corporations generally so called and by a tax upon succession. I was very glad to hear the approval of the honorable and learned Senator from Iowa who now sits next to me of the tax upon succession. It is a new feature in this legislation; the only new feature in it. It is a tax upon accumulation, accumulated capital, accumulated wealth. All the other taxes provided for are taxes upon consumption or upon industrial activity. They are taxes upon money which is being made, the wealth which is being created. Not a dollar is levied by any of these provisions upon money that has been made or wealth that has been accumulated and laid by.

Why should accumulations be exempt? Why ought not they to bear some portion of the burden, some pittance of the load which is put upon the active industries of the country and upon the wages that are being earned and the money which is now being made? I hope, sir, that this provision will receive the almost unanimous assent of the members of this body.

We impose also a tax upon corporations measured by the amount of gross receipts. The honorable and learned Senator from Iowa does not give his approval to that tax, and he makes a variety of objections to it. He says, in the first place, it is a duplication of taxation. Well, I have heard of the objection of multiple taxation, but I never knew that it rested upon lawful grounds. It has been made over and over again and defeated.

The dealers in tobacco and spirits and malt liquors living in incorporated cities pay seven taxes upon the same goods and the same business. Those taxes are paid by the same persons. The cases put by the honorable Senator from Iowa are not multiple taxes at all; they are not duplicate taxes of that description. The case put by the honorable Senator is where goods are sold by one corporation to another corporation and by those to patrons or customers, and each of the holders pays a certain tax. But they are not paid twice by the same person. They are only levied upon the same goods.

That can not be considered duplicate taxation. If it is, we will have to reenact the whole revenue measure upon the commodities of interstate and foreign commerce. When commodities of foreign commerce come into this country, they are once taxed. When they pass into the hands of buyers, they are liable to be taxed again against the buyers, and when they pass into the hands of customers they are liable to be taxed again against the customer. The same goods or goods of either of these varieties are liable to innumerable taxation and systems of taxation upon the same article and commodities, but not upon the same person. Therefore, they are not specimens of multiple taxation. Neither is the taxation provided for in this bill against corporations a real specimen of multiple taxation.

The honorable Senator, however, thinks that this tax will be very burdensome, and he instances 500 corporations in the State of Iowa engaged in various kinds of business. The little corporations would pay a little tax and the greater corporations would pay a greater one. But let us take the instance put by the Senator. Here is a corporation engaged in making butter and cheese. It sells to another corporation of middlemen who supply customers with the same. The Senator from Iowa has forgotten the great practice of apportionment prevailing under all these laws, the apportionment of taxation. For instance, in a stamp tax even upon a conveyance the cost of the stamp is frequently divided. It is apportioned.

In respect to this case, suppose $100 worth of goods are sold by the corporation in the first hand to another corporation engaged in the business, this is what would occur: Half of the tax would be divided between those two corporations. The first would pay 6¼ cents and the second would pay 6¼ cents on a hundred dollars. Both would carry the other 12½ cents over to the customer. Neither would impose any additional burden upon the customer. I speak from actual observation. The retail dealer would make and save the tax by cheapening a little the twine and paper with which he wrapped up his packages. The wholesale dealer would save and make his tax, or most of it, in the same method by an arrangement with respect to his packages.

Twenty-five cents on the hundred dollars is a tax too light, too much attenuated, too thin, to be burdensome to any corporation or to any person. It was the object of the majority of the committee, out of the immense number of aggregates in detail, to derive a serviceable amount of revenue without excessive burdens imposed upon any corporation or any person.

There is another principle also which the honorable Senator overlooked, unintentionally overlooked, in his estimate of the excessive taxes upon corporations. It is that of the evasion of taxation, the avoidance of taxation. This was the subject of an address made by ex-President Harrison at Chicago last winter, and I suppose it may be lawful to mention it here.

The evasion and avoidance of taxation have called into action in this country a great deal of skill and ingenuity, and they have had very remarkable success, always in the direction of lessening taxation. I have heard it charged in courts of justice before now that corporations were especially expert in this practice of evasion. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I know not only in this country but in others that profession has become almost an expert profession, and that their skill and experience have largely detracted from estimated supplies of the revenue.

Many Senators here have undoubtedly attended a prize show at a State fair or a county fair. They have seen ticketed the prices of prize animals and of prize articles. There is a very remarkable contrast between the ticketed prices and the records of the assessor. The latter are always very much less. You may take the race horse, the favorite of the turf for the moment. One that is ticketed at $10,000 becomes in the presence of the assessor a very ordinary scrub. The moment the taxgatherer comes to the owner, he says: "It is true I have this horse, and I think he is worth to me $10,000. I do not know what he is worth to other people. It is extremely perishable property. He may get a leg broken to-morrow; he may die next day. I have a heavy insurance to carry; and if I must return his cash value on oath, my conscience obliges me to make these deductions." The assessor's rolls do not correspond with the ticketed prices. They never have done so.

In the same manner the large corporations of which the honorable and distinguished Senator has spoken engage in the business of railroad transportation, from which he has taken $9,000,000,000 of gross receipts and from which he has presumed and imagined millions of net revenue. These large corporations, sir, have furnished these figures for census purposes. They were not made for the purposes of taxation. They put them into their compilations with intention not to be for the purposes of taxation; and when it is required of them to furnish gross receipts for the purposes of taxation, it will be found that this dream of overabundance of revenue is a vision.

There is nothing in the bill which excessively taxes either a great or a little corporation in any sense. The only purpose is by this means to derive, as we think, together with the succession tax, $50,000,000, making the $150,000,000 based upon taxation. This is not an excessive estimate; this is a reasonable, safe estimate. We do not believe that from these sources the Government will derive less than $150,000,000 based upon taxes.

Now, sir, the committee, the majority of the committee at least, in the bill report provisions for increasing the revenue otherwise. They have proposed a partially limited coinage of silver, with the usual adjunct of silver certificates as a means of furnishing money for war expenditures.

Forty-two million dollars of silver is in the Treasury belonging to the people of the United States. It is idle—unemployed. It is in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury, who is so scrupulously careful of this treasure committed to his charge that he has hitherto declined to touch, coin, or handle it. Questioned this morning as to why he does not use it, he would answer that he has no authority to do so without law. Let us, then, give him the authority to do so. Even then he would be loath, very loath, to part with it. He treats the silver reserve even more delicately than the reserve of gold. He is much attached to gold, but he cleaves to silver. Even with the authority to do so, the honorable Secretary would long hesitate, even prefer to issue bonds—$500,000,000 of bonds—according to the provisions of the House bill, bond upon bond, coupon upon coupon, here a million and there a million. He would prefer to tax all flesh from generation to generation rather than to coin money from the silver reserve.

Nevertheless the majority of the committee have thought it wise and necessary to report this measure in behalf of the coinage of silver in deference to the 15,000,000 voters in the United States who at the last Presidential election, in one form or another, in this method or that, expressed their wish for the restoration of silver to the mints.

We have thought it also better to report this provision in deference to that law of the land which engages the Government to coin and use, to use and coin both metals as standard money without discrimination; equality of use being necessary to equality of value; equality of use being essential to that of value and both being alike obligatory.

Many have been the sayings of the wise among our opposition brethren as to the necessity for unity at this time. Here is a place and point of unity. We shall see how far they will come if they will come a single step toward unity at this juncture.

Now, this section has little or no relation to the free and unrestricted coinage of silver. That beneficent doctrine we remit for the present to the broader arena of the hustings and the ballot in all confidence, being well assured that this great measure of relief and reform will become, sooner or later, the permanent policy of our country, and not only of our country, but of the majority of the commercial countries of the world.

The section proposing the issue of $150 000.000 of legal-tender notes is offered as a substitute, strong, pur'e, and steadfast, for the issue of bonds provided for in the House bill. All amendments are not betterments, but this substitute is a distinct, decided improvement and betterment. It will save to the taxpayers of the country millions of dollars in the way of interest. It prevents any addition to the funded or bonded debt of the nation. It prevents the sudden withdrawal of large sums of money from active circulation for the use of the Treasury. It furnishes an increase of the currency in safe, solvent, and honest money, now so much needed. It drives from the field the band of sutlers and camp followers who always follow in the rear of a great campaign, seeking to coin the blood and valor of the country into debentures that will put money in their purse.

Not only shall we, in this method, save a very large amount of annual interest, but we shall also prevent the growth of the influence of the syndicate of national debt upon the legislation and policy of this Republic, an influence wholly selfish, commercial, and ignoble to the last degree, an influence which, as Dunning said in a former generation concerning the influence of the Crown, has increased, is increasing, and which ought to be diminished. It is to the work of the syndicate of the national funded-debt holders that we owe the act strengthening the public creditor, that we owe the law for the demonetization of silver, that we owe the recent unnecessary enlargement of the bonded debt—all the evil consequences everywhere visible of a contracted and diminished supply of currency and an increasing amount of Federal taxation. More tax and less money is a very inferior policy upon which to prosecute a war.

The syndicate of the national debt has not only thus controlled, and always for evil, our domestic legislation, but it has, up to a very recent date, up to the 21st day of April last, controlled our policy in relation to foreign affairs. It resisted to the uttermost, to the last extremity, the recognition of the existence of the Cuban revolution. It preferred prompt payment and good security for the block of Spanish bonds held in its vaults. It preferred this to freedom, to independence, to any form of right or justice. No true friend of the country or of mankind ought to prefer such course of action as will aggrandize this infidel syndicate of national funded debt. It may perhaps be said, but it will be unjustly said, that the provision for the coinage of the silver reserved savors somewhat of partisanship, but the proposed issue of legal-tender notes is entirely devoid of that charge.

During the last war, from 1861 to 1865, these notes were the currency of the country. They even supplanted the subsidiary coin. We had 5, 10, 25, and 50 cent notes redeemable in stamps. The times were excellent—no failures; no assignments; no bankruptcy; intense activity in all industrial pursuits; a large domestic trade; a very large foreign commerce; no difficulty or disturbance of national exchange, and the war brought to a successful and honorable close. It is true, sir, that these notes were for some time at a discount of two or three hundred per cent, a discount entirely brought about by the influence and the action of the gold exchange abiding in the rear, sapping the public credit, and disparaging the national money.

Notwithstanding this, these currency notes rapidly appreciated, they approached par; but after the surrender at Appomattox they became par, because the victory and power of the Union imparted strength to the money of the Union, and because, further, there was a large business area in the Southern States which made an immediate demand for the United States legal currency notes, as large an amount as was then in circulation. These notes were at par and remained at par long before the pretended legislation for contraction and resumption which has falsely claimed the merit of bringing them to par, long before the recent system of selling bonds for gold, and thus strenthening the public credit by an increase of the public debt.

In 1878, just twenty years ago, a very large majority of both Houses of Congress, nearly two-thirds of the Senators and Representatives then in office, voted against the retirement of the United States legal-tender notes and against the further funding or strengthening of the public credit by the sale of bonds. I trust that twenty years afterwards, in 1898, the American Congress will be governed by the same regard as our brethren were a score of years ago to the rights and interests of the people; but, as I said before, the question of this issue is nonpartisan. The record shows that the first act for the issue of greenbacks passed this body with only 7 dissenting votes. The second and succeeding acts (for $150,000,000 and other still larger sums) for the issue of legal-tender notes passed, many of them, without an objection, and always by a very large majority.

Democrats, Republicans, Independents, men of all parties, united in support of these measures for the issue of United States legal-tender notes. The Secretary of the Treasury, afterwards Chief-Justice Chase, was hailed as a deliverer—as one who, like Moses in the wilderness, had smitten the rock of national resources and had brought forth an abundant flow of supply. I do not know that any man of any party has ever questioned or will ever question the fact that the legal-tender notes so provided for was an ideal war credit, a currency which could be safely relied upon for immediate, constant, instant use in a juncture of emergency like this.

Who shall say, then, that we are forbidden now to use this means of defraying the expenses of the war? What forbids the use of this means to-day? Is it patriotism? No. Is it love of country? No. Is it a desire for a vigorous and successful prosecution of the war and the expulsion of the Spanish dominion from the American Hemisphere? No. None of these forbid a resort to the legal-tender note. It is the intense craving of the syndicate of national debt for coin bonds, which, I fear, are already prepared, pledged, and promised for delivery. That alone forbids it. This subterranean, devious cabal of the bond syndicate wish to guard against anticipated losses upon their Spanish fours by a new investment in this fresh issue of United States bonds.

The proposed issue of legal-tender notes is itself alone of all means of borrowing the most patriotic and the least expensive to the taxpayer. It is a loan, a voluntary loan, without interest, by the people to the Government of $150,000,000 during the next fiscal year for an indefinite period, determinable by the incident of redemption or retirement.

Why should anyone object to this voluntary loan? The five-dollar note and the five-thousand-dollar bond are payable in the same metals, and have exactly the same security and identical guaranties—that is, the ability of the people of the United States to pay taxes. That is what creates the credit of the United States. The credit of the United States, so much spoken of, is an effect, not a cause. That credit does not depend upon the action of banks or bankers; it depends solely upon the people, their capacity and willingness to pay the sums levied by taxation. When the people who pay these taxes are themselves willing to lend their credit to the Government, thus getting rid of the middlemen, so useless and so costly, what is the necessity for bonds at this time or any other?

Something is said in this bill, mention is made in this bill, of a popular loan—a popular loan, not a voluntary loan. No popular loan has ever succeeded unless by the method of a voluntary loan preceding it. The real popular loan is the small bond, and has followed directly the voluntary loan, and has been used as a method of redemption and retirement of the representative money—that portion of it deemed wisest to retire. In this manner the French national debt is owned by France; but that is saying very little. The English national debt is owned in England.

I heard a Senator say the other day, though I doubt the statement, that the United States bonds were owned in the United States. I think there is a great deal of doubt about that. But even if it were true, that is saying very little. This is what has been brought about in France. The French national debt is owned by the people of France. The majority of the people, the 6,000,000 voters of that country—more than half of that number—are holders of French bonds, evidences of the national debt. Of course they are small holders, but they are holders.

One of the most curious publications of this day is a little brochure, entitled Hearings before the Finance Committee, in which we examined the Secretary of the Treasury, or he examined us, with respect to the monetary strength of this country, in which he expressed the opinion that a popular loan—his popular loan—will not be a success—his popular loan with a notice of sixty or ninety days—without the previous increase of the volume of the currency. The Secretary of the Treasury goes on to say that in France the people owned the national debt; but he says our people did not own our national debt—the masses he meant; that "our people have larger opportunities;" that they would not subscribe to a popular loan; that they had savings banks; and he said there were no savings banks in France. I will quote his expressions:

Senator WOLCOTT. Please explain to the committee why you think individuals will not take the bonds.

Secretary GAGE. There are several reasons. In the first place, our people are very different from the French people, if you please, in whose country there are no savings banks. In our country there are 5,000,000 people who have money in savings banks at a general average rate of interest of 4 per cent. The money is available to them at any moment. The temptation and self-interest to invest in 3 per cent bonds and disturb their little balances in the savings banks is not very great.

In France the individual has his money, his little savings, stowed away in a stocking or a sack or a private hoard. It is in cash. It is drawing no interest, generally, and when the Government puts out a loan it is his opportunity. Our people have larger opportunities.

Nobody had said anything about France in this colloquy until the Secretary of the Treasury spoke of it; nobody had mentioned France or the French people. Why did he mention them? Our chancellor of the exchequer had in some manner discovered what I have just stated—that the French people, the French masses, owned the French national bonds; he had discovered that, and he must necessarily find some reason why the people of the United States should not own the bonded debt of the United States. That is the reason of his uninvited and wholly unexpected reference to France and the French people.

What reasons does he give, then, why the people of the United States should not own the debt of the United States? He says "our people have larger opportunities." They have very much larger opportunities. We have more than ten times the amount of territory, of arable tillage; we have twice the population; we have an annual increase of wealth and resources, especially in numbers, not matched by France, not matched by any power in Europe, and there are in this country many fields of new enterprise thoroughly unthought of and, indeed, inconceivable in such an old, settled country as France. Yes, our people have larger opportunities—much larger. But that is only an additional reason why the people of the United States should own the debt of the United States.

The Secretary of the Treasury says another reason why popular loans do not succeed in this country is that we have savings banks here; that 5,000,000 of our people are interested in savings banks. Well, what are the other 70,000,000 people interested in that they would not take a popular loan or propose a voluntary loan? The Secretary says there are no savings banks in France. That is very true. The Secretary does not assert that there never have been any savings banks in France. He could not do that. I have no doubt his knowledge of fiscal history has advised him that the tontine and all other systems of insurance and savings banks originated in Italy, passed rapidly to France, crossed the channel to England, Scotland, and Ireland, and later visited our shores; but now there are no savings banks in France. Why? Because about thirty years ago the Republic of France, that Government recognized by President Grant—the French Government—provided that the people of France should have their savings banks in the national treasury in bonds from $25 upward, not exceeding, I think, $500; and by a later enactment, I understand, up to $1,000.

There are no savings banks in France, because the people prefer to invest in French bonds issued for the national debt; and if the same trouble and the same method had been taken to provide that the people of the United States should purchase the bonds of the United States in like numbers and in like denominations, there would be no savings banks in the United States—not one—for the people will prefer legitimate security to a high rate of interest, and especially small holders will do so.

There are always two important effects of war, no matter when it comes or where. One is suspension of payment; the other is a war credit. The suspension of payment is noticeable here and provided for in this bill as it came from the other House. In the twenty-eighth section of the bill there is a suspension of payment, not only of specie payment, but an absolute suspension of payment to the amount of $100,000,000 for the year or two years therein mentioned. This is an instance of the suspension of payment that has not reached very far yet, and it is not alarming. That is the one usual ordinary incident when war occurs. The next is the war credit.

The question is how to formulate the national resources into monetary issues immediately available for the payment of military expenses. That has always been the question. The most usual method is to issue bonds in large blocks and to sell them; but that is not very old. The oldest national debt is not perhaps over one hundred and fifty years old; and as for the bonds themselves, there are none of them over thirty or forty years old, on account of the constant system of renewal and refunding in vogue. But this system of issuing bonds, for borrowing money, is the most usual system of making a war credit—it is the most usual and the most costly to the taxpayer.

In its effect it is the most undemocratic; it is the most anti-republican; it is the most thoroughly hostile to free institutions; it is the most adverse to liberal or popular government, because the tax imposed by it falls upon the not rich, upon the poor, the very poor. There never has been any other method in this country for the payment of the national debt than taxes upon consumption, taxes upon the family, taxes upon existence and generation, so that as men live or breathe or eat or drink they must pay taxes necessary for the liquidation of the national debt and the interest thereon.

I have served several sessions here, and I have never yet noticed an appropriation bill that did not have a provision in it, running into the millions, for the payment of the interest on the national debt; it occurs regularly every season. There was one Congress which made no such appropriation. Some one has felicitously called it "the happy Congress." No one in public life now had the honor of a seat in that body. That was in 1836, during the Administration of General Jackson. There was no national debt, and consequently there was no appropriation for its payment. I do not know—I think it is improbable—that any member now in public life will ever be a constituent of an assembly as happy as that one, but I do see in the far future the adoption of a policy which, in the middle of the next century, may allow our citizens to see another session of "the happy Congress."

It is this solution made in France of furnishing a war debt, and at the same time suspending payment by a single instrumentality, a perfect solution made in the Republic of France, when, at the close of the Franco-Prussian war, the war indemnity amounted to a milliard, a thousand millions, and a most terrible and bloody war was waging at the same time in France itself, in its very vitals, the French Legislature provided for an issue of paper, full legal tender, nearly equal in amount to the war indemnity, which, with the gold and silver of the former kingdom and empire, constituted the currency of that time; and having circulated for three years without interest, they did in three years—one, two, three years—make provision, as this was a voluntary loan, for its retirement and redemption by a popular loan, a loan of which I have spoken, giving every taxpayer a chance to get a national bond. Every Frenchman when he pays his taxes knows he is going to get a rebate, a refund, to the amount of the interest on the national bond which he holds. They did that. It was a very remarkable and a very magnificent financial exploit, and entirely successful, both in peace and in war.

Of course, such a measure had great opposition, very great. The metropolitan press were against it; the titled and untitled aristocracy of France were against it; the capitalists of the Republic were against it; the venal and purchasable members of the National Assembly were against it. The Bank of France, the great fiscal organ of the Republic, stood neutral, willing to do, willing to obey whatever legislation was had. That was a great attitude for the Bank of France. The Bank of England never took such an attitude. It is not subject to external control; it is never touched by the popular pulse or will; but the Bank of France stood neutral. All these other forces were against it.

Who were for it? The people of France were for it; the 6,000,000 voters of France were almost unanimously for this system, as were the financiers—three of those were in the cabinet—men who had made a life study of finance, not in respect of their own gains and profits, for they were poor, but with respect to how the war credit could be established without injury to the people, to the masses of voters, and at the same time give abundant resources for military and naval operations. They had made that study, and it was in deference to their opinions that the people of the nation passed the legislation of which I have spoken. I believe, sir, that now would be a most excellent time in this Republic to follow the example of the Republic of France. They rejected altogether the modern system of funded indebtedness, of selling bonds in block to get money; and here I have a definition, taken from a French author, of what interest upon the national debt is. He says:

> It is the price which the people of a government pay for the use of their own money and credit to a syndicate who control legislation for the issue of bonds in behalf of such syndicate.

That is a perfect and faultless definition.

I trust, therefore, as the provision reported by the majority of the committee for the issue of $150,000,000 of legal-tender notes is thoroughly nonpartisan, it having heretofore obtained the support—the earnest, unanimous support—of men of all parties, it having been tried, and successfully tried, by the greatest and sternest of all experience, that we shall now return to that policy.

Mr. President, it may be well enough at present to glance at the parliamentary construction of this bill. The Constitution of the United States empowers Congress to levy and collect taxes. That is one section. In another section it is provided that bills for revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. In another section Congress is empowered to borrow money on the credit of the United States. All these are separate sections.

In this bill we find two distinct provisions, one ending with the taxation levied, stamps and excises, corporation taxes, and taxes on succession; the other being a provision for the issue of Treasury certificates and for the issue of $300,000,000 of bonds—$500,000,000 in the language of the bill as it came from the House.

Here, then, it will be seen that the revenue portion of this bill could have originated only in the House of Representatives; but the loan portion of this bill, to borrow money, could have originated either in this House or in the other. It is clear enough, then, that the power to borrow money is not an exclusive power of the House of Representatives. It belongs to both branches of Congress, and is separate, distinct, and independent from a bill to raise revenue. Why, then, are the two united in the construction of this bill? Since the other House may make a separate loan bill as their own work and send it here, or we may do the same, vice versa, yet neither can constitutionally put a loan bill as a rider upon a revenue bill—a mere rider. That would be a gross violation of parliamentary and of constitutional law.

It may be well suspected—I dislike to entertain the suspicion very much, but I do entertain it—that this loan rider was put upon the revenue bill granting supplies for the purpose of compelling those who would not vote against the supplies to vote for the bond issue—I suspect that. I may be doing injustice to the framers and authors of this bill; but however that may be—granting that it is somewhat uncharitable—there is one thing sure beyond all suspicion, and that is that the makers and promoters of this House bill were well convinced that the bond issue could not stand upon its own merits; that there was no war necessity for an issue of bonds; that there was no emergency for an issue of bonds; and therefore they attached it as a rider to the revenue bill, to put Congress in duress as to the passage of the provision for the bonds, the revenue bill, providing supplies to the Army and Navy, being used as a force to compel those in this body who are opposed to the issue of bonds, and to compel a bond issue in the absence of any necessity or any emergency. That is very clear. Nothing is clearer, considering the parliamentary construction of the bill.

No man shall excel me, Mr. President, in the desire or effort, here or elsewhere, to bring the existing war with Spain to an honorable and auspicious issue. Every means of aid and comfort should be given to the gallant men who, at the front, by land or sea, are fighting the battles of our country against a public enemy. Yet, oh, how I wish that the glorious flag which they carry to victory should bless those whom it visits as well as those who bear it!

The policy of this Administration with respect to the war remains yet in the mystery of abeyance. The independence of the Cuban Republic, the belligerency of its army and navy, and its million of citizens in their great and successful struggle for freedom are yet unnoticed and unrecognized. We have communication, it is said, with the insurgents. It is an illicit intercourse; in the eyes of international law it is an irregular commerce.

I wish to direct attention at this time to what I regarded as very significant at the time of its utterance—I mean the remarks of the honorable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] respecting the recognition of the independence of the Cuban Republic. It is well to recall the occasion when these remarks were made. They were made on the very edge, the very eve, of action, just on the passage of the first resolution for armed intervention, while we were considering reports of conference committees. It was at such a time that the Senator from Minnesota used this language:

> In regard to the question of the recognition of the independence of Cuba, I think no man doubts. I think no man has any right to doubt, that, as the result of the intervention of this Government, the independence of that republic will follow immediately and that (for its existence must be conceded to be a historical and also a present fact) such recognition will be of the present government, inasmuch as it is well known that 80 per cent of the inhabitants of the Island of Cuba are in its favor.

That language was uttered on the 18th of April last, three days before the declaration of war. Three weeks have now elapsed since the time of this utterance, three weeks since the act of intervention here spoken of by the honorable Senator, who said that the act of intervention would result in the immediate recognition of the independence of the Island of Cuba, yet recognition still lingers, loiters in inaction. There is yet no expression upon that subject.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TURPIE. Not at present, I thank you.

I take this language, sir, to be more than a prediction, uttered as it was during the time we were engaged in voting on the reports of the committee of conference; I take it to be a promise of recognition of the independence of the Island of Cuba. If intervention occurred, it has occurred. The promise of the recognition of independence was made. That promise must be kept.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TURPIE. No; I am much obliged to you.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. TURPIE. Mr. President, that promise must be kept. It must be kept to the hope, not only to the ear. It must be kept in deed, in verity, in truth, in fact. Intervention has come. It is now flagrant. Where is the promise? Where is the recognition of independence? Where is the sign of its coming?

Mr. HALE. Where is the Cuban Government, Mr. President?

Mr. TURPIE. Let me call your attention to a scene of the great dramatist, where Othello amuses the leisure of Brabantio with recounting his wonderful adventures by sea and land, to hear which the fair Desdemona did most studiously incline and among those perils there was one specially mentioned, that of being taken captive and sold in slavery to the insolent foe. The ruler who attempts to sell the Republic of Cuba or the people of that republic into slavery for the Spanish debt will commit a sin unpardonable, not to be forgiven either in this world or the next.

Now we know what the situation is. The eloquent Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] fully explained that law; not only law, but the American construction of it. If we go down there and take possession of Cuba and hold it for future disposition, we take it as conquerors subject to the debt charged upon the island—subject to the Spanish fours chargeable upon Cuban receipts. If we afterwards transfer it by establishing or recognizing a government in that island, we transfer it only subject to the same debt and the same bondage. How, then, shall we, for our own safety, deal with this international question? There is but one way. It is to recognize the independence of Cuba before the sovereignty of the island rests in us by conquest. That disposes of the question of Spanish bonds, and they will not be disposed of in any other manner.

Mr. President, we shall put our trust in the God of battles, that out of this feebleness, this delay and infirmity, out of this darkness and mystery His omnipotent hand will work great gain to the cause of liberty, a larger room for the feet of freemen, a manifest and final delivery from the system of monarchical oppression and despotism wherever it obtains, and especially in the heretofore Spanish islands of the Mediterranean of the West.

Mr. President, whatever may be his high position in military or civil life, he must be a laggard in perception who looks upon the scope and purview of such an appeal to arms as we have made as a mere occasion for the recital of battles, marches, sieges, or escapes in the imminent deadly breach.

We of the United States have for the last quarter of a century stood by in unmoved silence, hardly even as observers, while one grand division of the earth's surface just south of the Mediterranean has been, from the Isthmus of Suez to the Cape of Good Hope, partitioned, subdivided among the great powers as the first triumvirate divided among themselves the Roman world. We have during the same period beheld aggressions, annexations, and allotment by the same nationalities of the country of the far East. Out of the flame and flash of that heroic, victorious sea fight at Manila we may become more interested lookers-on in the distant Orient.

These present treaty acquisitions of territory will, before the close of the next century, ripen into partitions like those of Africa, which shall include every arable acre from the Caucasus to the Chinese seas. We shall at that time be flanked east and west by great populations adverse and inimical to free and popular government, by the diplomacy of the balance of power as between the European nations, extended and thoroughly applied to Asia and to Africa, by the subtle approach of foreign force and influence, backed by vast armies and navies, who will assure us of their distinguished consideration, but who will entertain the unappeasable hunger for further territorial extension, and will conceive the notion that the doctrine of the balance of power extended upon the European schedule shall at least apply to the little countries of Central America and to certain portions of the east and west coast of South America.

It is, then, for the highest interest of our future peace and safety that these European international aspirations in respect to territorial increment in this hemisphere should now, at this time, be forever barred, foreclosed, and forbidden. Who is to do this? The United States in its history, growth, and development of more than a hundred and twenty years has obtained a conceded supremacy among American governments. We have not assumed this. It has come to us with the time and tide of events. We can not evade, defer, or deny the responsibility of this headship. Over against this world-grasping policy of the balance of power we place and for many years have maintained the doctrine of Monroe, and especially in respect to the Island of Cuba, announced with distinct emphasis in the manifesto of Ostend forty years ago. Let me read this document in the words of its great author:

> In the wars of the European powers, in matters relating to themselves, we have never taken any part, nor does it comport with our policy so to do. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power in this hemisphere we have not interfered, and shall not interfere, but with the government who have declared their own independence and maintained it we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in any other manner their destiny by any European power in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.

Who believes that Cuba is now an existing colony of Spain, or that it has been such since February, 1895, the commencement of the second period of the war of the revolution? We are thus pledged to consider as an enemy, and we have declared Spain to be an enemy, of the United States, as we would have declared any other power that intervened to oppress the Cuban Republic or to control its destiny in any other manner. I would just as soon recede to Great Britain Staten Island or Long Island as to agree to recede to Spain any portion of the territory of the Island of Cuba.

This was indeed a great declaration. Our action should comport with our words. In so doing we show to the world that we are worthy of that primacy, that ascendency in American polity wherewith we are clothed. All our history in every stage leads up to this high prerogative. All our wars have been fought and won to this end and purpose, reserved to us not by fate or fortune, but by an overruling Providence, guiding our steps and the footsteps of our forefathers, leading kindly on even up to this hour. Every shot fired from the days of Concord and Lexington to those of Gettysburg and Appomattox promoted and foreshadowed this—our ascendency. Every bayonet gleamed with this meaning. That is what the war with Spain means; that is its interpretation and significance. It means the primacy of the United States in the affairs of the American Hemisphere—a disposing and controlling primacy, not to be denied or questioned.

I do not say unto you, "Tell it not." I say tell it, publish it in Gath, in Askelon, in London, Paris, Berlin; in the Winter Palace on the banks of the Neva. Proclaim we have a primacy among the nationalities of the New World. There is but one power in Europe who really apprehends and understands this primacy, who knows what it will cost to deny or to defy it; who knows also how much it would cost us to falter or to fail in its maintenance. There is only one Government in Europe which has challenged this primacy and has resorted to the arbitrament of the sword to annul and abrogate it. Spain is the first, and it will be the last European Government to take this course. It is a nation not only at war against us, but against liberty, against humanity, against the civilization of the age.

There can be but one issue of such a quarrel. Liberty intrenched in this continent will here prevail. In this faith we have already subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, more than once closed the mouth of the lion, and we may curb and conquer more powerful enemies than Spain. The victory that shall crown our arms will not be our success alone. It will be the triumph of even-handed justice over those ancient Bourbons of the Escurial, who have in the waste and lapse of centuries learned nothing of good and forgotten nothing of evil. These malign offenders have attempted to crush human freedom. They themselves will be subjected to a great and exceeding overthrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with section 18.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 18, page 28, line 15, after the word "stamp," to strike out "duties" and insert "taxes;" and in line 18, after the word "stamp," to strike out "duties" and insert "taxes;" so as to make the section read:

> SEC. 18. That all the provisions of this act relating to dies, stamps, adhesive stamps, and stamp taxes shall extend to and include (except where manifestly inapplicable) all the articles or objects enumerated in Schedule B, subject to stamp taxes, and apply to the provisions in relation thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 19, page 28, line 21, after the word "ninety-eight," to strike out "no" and insert "any;" in line 21, after the word "person," to strike out "or persons, firms, companies, or corporations" and insert "firm, company, or corporation that;" on page 29, line 2, after the word "as," to strike out "enumerated and mentioned" and insert "provided for;" and in line 4, before the word "before," to strike out "duty" and insert "tax;" so as to read:

> SEC. 19. That on and after the 1st day of June, 1898, any person, firm, company, or corporation that shall make, prepare, and sell, or remove for consumption or sale, drugs, medicines, preparations, compositions, articles, or things, including perfumery and cosmetics, upon which a tax is imposed by this act, as provided for in Schedule B, without affixing thereto an adhesive stamp or label denoting the tax before mentioned, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 19, page 29, line 4, after the word "mentioned," to strike out "and in default thereof shall incur a penalty of $100" and insert "shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to call the attention of the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill to the provision on page 29. I notice that among the provisions passed yesterday there is a similar amendment reported by the Committee on Finance, making the penalty for failure to place on the stamp, in payment of the internal-revenue tax, fine and imprisonment.

Mr. CHILTON. Fine or imprisonment.

Mr. GORMAN. Fine or imprisonment; very good. It provides that it shall not exceed six months, at the discretion of the court. That runs through practically all of the provisions where stamps are required to be put on instruments of writing; and I suggest to the Senator that that is a very extreme penalty to be inflicted for the mere failure to put on a stamp in any one of these cases.

In the matter of proprietary medicines and manufactures, it is possible that it might be enforced without any great hardship; but when you come to notes, deeds, instruments of writing of any sort, it is different. Heretofore it was found that the only proper penalty was a fine, not making the instrument void, but imposing a penalty that could be corrected at any time by going to a collector of internal revenue and paying the additional tax. There was no difficulty at any time in enforcing it. There was no fraud ever claimed in that respect. Take the case of a note. Every note, draft, duebill, or order of every description is required to have on it a stamp. A great many people in the country will not be aware of this provision, and they will be brought up.

All of them probably will not be prosecuted and brought before a court, but let me call attention to the provision found in the act of 1866, when we had had some experience in this matter. I think it modified the previous act. It provided in all of these cases simply a fine and the ability to correct the mistake at any time; and I suggest to the Senator that that ought to be the provision here. I think the only exception, so far as I have been able to ascertain, is in the matter of corporations. You there impose a fine only and no imprisonment, but in every individual case the provision as it stands with this clause will work a great hardship. I have myself had some experience in the administration of a law of this character. I have known hundreds of cases, yes, thousands of cases, with country people, where they were not aware of it, did not have facilities to get the stamps, and failed to put them on.

No record could be made of a paper of that sort, and all they had to do was to go before the collector of internal revenue or any other officer in charge and pay the additional amount, and in that case, where we were in distress for money, authority was even given to remit the penalty where no intention to evade the law was shown. It does seem to me you are taking a very long step backward when you provide for imprisonment in any such case.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing to consent that the words inserted on page 15, section 5, shall be inserted here—"with intent to evade the provisions of this act."

Mr. GORMAN. I think the provision of the House is the provision of the old law of 1866, and I think it runs back further than that; it certainly was the law from 1866 to the repeal of that act, and I think it was in the beginning. This penalty is too severe. There is no necessity for it. In these times there is no use to threaten our people, on account of a mere failure to put on a stamp, with imprisonment. The fine as provided in the House bill is precisely the same as in the act of 1866, and it was always found to be sufficient.

Mr. GRAY. What is the penalty in the bill as it comes from the House?

Mr. GORMAN. The words the committee propose to strike out on page 29.

Mr. GRAY. I see.

Mr. GORMAN. "And in default thereof shall incur a penalty of $100."

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. WHITE. I think in line 7 the words "not less than one hundred" ought to be stricken out. I think it was intended to strike those out.

Mr. ALLISON. I have already marked those words to be stricken out.

Mr. WHITE. The object in view, I think, was not to provide an excessive penalty, but to insure the enforcement of the law. Under the old provision the person in default must pay a penalty of $100. Under the new provision, with the amendment just referred to by the Senator from Iowa, it would be discretionary with the court whether he should pay $1 or $5 or $500. There may be cases—there are in almost all other classes of legislation—where the person in default would be in such a position as to resist the collection of the fine; and wherever a penalty of any sort is imposed in any law, there is usually a corresponding provision requiring imprisonment, which is really intended to enforce the fine. Under the House provision the party would pay necessarily a hundred dollars. Under the Senate amendment he might pay $1 or $500.

Mr. GORMAN. That is a criticism which I am glad to hear the Senator make, but I want to say to him that the experience of the Department and the Government has not shown it necessary to threaten our people with imprisonment in any case. As I have said, at the time when we taxed everything, and when we had collectors and assessors of internal revenue in every Congressional district north of the Potomac, when there were from one to five in every county constantly going around and assessing all sorts of things and the people had perfect notice of it, even then you had only this provision:

SEC. 158. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons who shall make, sign, or issue, or who shall cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever, or shall accept, negotiate, or pay, or cause to be accepted, negotiated, or paid, any bill of exchange, draft, or order, or promissory note for the payment of money, without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax chargeable thereon, and canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, shall, for every such offense, forfeit the sum of $50, and such instrument, document, or paper, bill, draft, order, or note, not being stamped according to law, shall be deemed invalid and of no effect: Provided, That the title of a purchaser of land by deed duly stamped shall not be defeated or affected by the want of a proper stamp on any deed conveying said land by and person from, through, or under whom his grantor claims or holds title: And provided further, That hereafter, in all cases where the party has not affixed to any instrument the stamp required by law thereon at the time of making or issuing the said instrument, and he or they, or any party having an interest therein, shall be subsequently desirous of affixing such stamp to said instrument, or if said instrument be lost, to a copy thereof, he or they shall appear before the collector of the revenue of the proper district, who shall, upon the payment of the price of the proper stamp required by law, and of a penalty of $50, and where the whole amount of the tax denoted by the stamp required shall exceed the sum of $50, on payment also of interest, at the rate of 6 per cent, on said tax from the day on which such stamp ought to have been affixed, affix the proper stamp to such instrument or copy, and note upon the margin thereof the date of his so doing, and the fact that such penalty has been paid; and the same shall thereupon be deemed and held to be as valid, to all intents and purposes, as if stamped when made or issued: And provided further, That where it shall appear to said collector, upon oath or otherwise, to his satisfaction, that any such instrument has not been duly stamped at the time of making or issuing the same by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp, or to evade or delay the payment thereof; then and in such case, if such instrument, or if the original be lost, a copy thereof, duly certified by the officer having charge of any records in which said original is required to be recorded, or otherwise duly proven to the satisfaction of the collector, shall, within twelve calendar months after the 1st day of August, 1866, or within twelve calendar months after the making or issuing thereof, be brought to the said collector of revenue to be stamped and the stamp tax chargeable thereon shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said collector to remit the penalty aforesaid, and to cause such instrument to be duly stamped. And when the original instrument, or a certified or duly proved copy thereof, as aforesaid, duly stamped so as to entitle the same to be recorded, shall be presented to the clerk, register, recorder, or other officer having charge of the original record, it shall be lawful for such officer, upon the payment of the fee legally chargeable for the recording thereof, to make a new record thereof, or to note upon the original record the fact that the error or omission in the stamping of said original instrument has been corrected pursuant to law; and the original instrument or such certified copy or the record thereof may be used in all courts and places in the same manner and with like effect as if the instrument had been originally stamped: And provided further, That in all cases where the party has not affixed the stamp required by law upon any instrument made, signed, or issued, at a time when and at a place where no collection district was established, it shall be lawful for him or them or any party having an interest therein to affix the proper stamp thereto, or, if the original be lost, to a copy thereof; and the instrument or copy to which the proper stamp has been thus affixed prior to the 1st day of January, 1867, and the record thereof, shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if stamped by the collector in the manner hereinbefore provided. But no right acquired in good faith before the stamping of such instrument or copy thereof and the recording thereof, as herein provided, if such record be required by law, shall in any manner be affected by such stamping as aforesaid.

But there never was found in the law any provision for imprisonment or for going before a court and dragging in the people in all these cases; and in every county of every State men will be found looking up these cases and harassing our people, bringing them before the courts, and no man can tell what the Federal judges will do now.

I submit, if we passed through the great rebellion without such a provision, it ought not to be inserted here, particularly as in the matter of great corporations you have left them free from any threat of imprisonment. It ought to be eliminated from every provision in reference to individuals.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to attract the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that there is a clause in this very measure which provides for placing upon the instrument the stamp and the payment of a penalty. For instance, on page 23, it says:

Or, if said instrument be lost, to a copy thereof, he or they shall appear before the collector of internal revenue of the proper district, who shall, upon the payment of the price of the proper stamp required by law and of a penalty of $10, etc.

Mr. GORMAN. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. WHITE. Page 23. That is the very provision in this bill, and it has not been eliminated.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator will follow up the penalty, he will find that in each one of these cases you have made this the penalty:

Shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

Mr. WHITE. I understand. That does not cover the case alluded to by the Senator from Maryland. The general proposition which the committee was endeavoring to get at, as I understand, was to provide not an oppressive system. In the special instance referred to by the Senator from Maryland, on page 29, the bill as reported by the House, as in the former law, provided absolutely for the payment of $100. I think where there is an inadvertence there should be practically no fine at all; and for that reason I would not go so far as to say that it should be absolutely a hundred dollars. In that respect the amendment of the committee was faulty. But I would leave it to the discretion of some one to ascertain whether there was a willful desire to evade the law.

Again, there are cases, too, where you can not collect any money, for the person may defeat you upon execution; and in that case there ought to be reserved some sort of penalty, whatever it may be deemed proper to reserve, to bring about the enforcement of the statute. I do not think a hundred dollars absolutely would be a good thing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the committee amendment make it absolutely not less than a hundred dollars?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Missouri probably did not hear what was said a moment ago. I called the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that the words "less than one hundred nor," which were ordered to be stricken out in committee, have got in here, by inadvertence, and that they were withdrawn by the committee on the floor a few minutes ago, so that now the maximum is fixed and not the minimum, as is usual in misdemeanor sections.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the language the Senator from Iowa proposes to strike out? It has not yet been stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose, in line 7, page 29, to strike out the words "less than one hundred nor." They are in the bill by inadvertence.

Mr. MILLS. Let the provision be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, page 29, it is proposed to strike out "less than one hundred nor;" so as to read:

Shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500 or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose to insert what was inserted on page 15 yesterday, "with intent to evade the provisions of this act." I would suggest one word to the Senator from Maryland as I am up. This penalty in the House bill and in the act of 1866 is a positive penalty, requiring the Government to initiate the proceedings. As was just now stated by the Senator from California, in case it turns out that there can be no recovery, it is a proceeding that is valueless, whereas if it is in the form of a misdemeanor it is very easy to punish, in the discretion of the court, in a limited way the person who is guilty. So my judgment is that the provision as it stands here now is a wiser and better one for the Government, and certainly it will not be oppressive upon anyone who does not intend to evade the provisions of the law.

Mr. WHITE. I might call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to a fact also in this connection. As far as these penalties affect the nonplacing of stamps upon instruments such as deeds, mortgages, notes, and so on in some of the States of the Union—in nine, for instance—the supreme courts have held that Congress has no power to limit or affect in any way the rules of evidence in State courts, and instruments which are unstamped, where the Federal statute even declared them invalid and declared them to be not evidence, they have permitted to be introduced and received in evidence, and they did in those cases have all the effect of stamped instruments, though the law with reference to them had not been complied with. Hence it seemed as if it were necessary, especially in jurisdictions where that view was entertained, that there should be some method, mild, but certainly adequate, to enforce the statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has suggested another amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "mentioned" I move to insert "with intent to evade the provisions of this act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to strike out, in lines 8 and 9, the words "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 8, page 29, strike out the words "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

Mr. GORMAN. Let the whole clause be read as it will read if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland is wise. The section to which the amendment is proposed refers entirely to the subject of perfumeries, cosmetics, medicines, and preparations of that kind. A man in the country, unused to stamping notes, receipts, and other papers referred to in the document schedule, might make or receive an instrument without thinking of the stamp, and it would be improper to subject him to the penalties which might by possibility be imposed under this law. But these reasons can hardly apply to the case of a man who manufactures or sells perfumeries, medicines, and things of that sort.

It seems to me that it would be injudicious to weaken the sanctions of this particular clause, because the very men who will be subject to it are men who must necessarily be more or less familiar with the revenue laws and accustomed to the business of stamping the manufactures which they produce or sell. I think it would be shortsighted to strike out entirely the imprisonment alternative in this particular section.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that in the case of manufacturers there is a stronger reason for this provision if you want to introduce into the law a provision that has never heretofore been found necessary. If we have reached a point where you want to take all these cases into court and make business for the lawyers and the judges and what not, well and good, if you apply it alone to the manufacturers. The Finance Committee of the Senate have in every provision of the bill inserted it except one, and that is where we are to deal with railroads and require them to put stamps upon bills of lading. There you have provided for nothing but a fine. You have provided for no imprisonment. No such provision has been inserted as you have applied to the rest.

If it is thought that you can not enforce this law by the ordinary machinery of the Department if it is applied to the great manufacturers, well and good; but I do insist that in the matter of stamps required to be put on notes, bonds, checks, and what not, dealt in by all the people of this country, it would be a great outrage to retain such a provision. I think it is an outrage in any case.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I will state that the same rule applies to bills of lading that applies to everything in Schedule A. There is no attempt here in favor of any class of people. The railroad companies are required to put stamps upon bills of lading, and they are not only required to do that, but to make those bills of lading in every instance; and if they fail to put a stamp on a bill of lading, they are subject to the same penalties as other people.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, I ask him why it would not be fair to provide, as suggested by the Senator from Maryland, that on conviction of the first offense the person shall pay a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, and that on conviction of a second offense he shall pay that fine with the additional penalty of imprisonment?

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator propose to move that amendment?

Mr. SPOONER. No; but I ask why it would not be a good amendment?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is all in the discretion of the court.

Mr. SPOONER. But the point made is that it ought not to be in the discretion of the court to fine or imprison on the first offense. It has been thirty years or more since our people had to put stamps on papers.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not believe that the imprisonment feature of this penalty is necessary. I do not think you will find any State law seeking to enforce provisions of a like kind where they deal in penalties of imprisonment. In fact, I believe that all our Federal laws are unnecessarily severe as compared with our State laws in every section and chapter of crime. The Federal laws are infinitely more severe. They are, I think, in all cases unnecessarily severe, and in some cases they are cruelly severe. I think we can get along and enforce this law reasonably without the imprisonment feature at all. The court will, of course, when it imposes the fine, commit it to the custody of the marshal, and the fine and costs will have to be paid.

Mr. GORMAN. I think if the Senator from Iowa will look on page 41, he will find that I am correct. On page 40, beginning at line 22, is the provision, under the subhead "Express and freight," which makes it the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, express company, etc., to put a stamp upon any bill of lading, etc. I read, beginning at line 10, on page 41:

Any failure to issue such bill of lading, manifest, receipt, or other memorandum shall subject such railroad company, carrier, express company, or corporation or person to a penalty of $50 for each offense.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Maryland certainly misapprehends the language there or he has not read it carefully. That is a penalty for not issuing a bill of lading.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. The penalty for not putting a stamp upon one when issued is a penalty which is applied in another way.

Mr. GORMAN. But it is the same thing precisely.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. That is simply a provision that every railroad company must issue a bill of lading, and failing to do that, it must pay a fine of $50. As to what the penalty shall be for failing to stamp it after issued is another question entirely.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not know that there is any great force in that. A constituent of mine in a country district is required to put a stamp on a note for the purchase of a horse. If he fails to do so, he is liable to be taken 100 miles or 300 miles from his home, brought up before a United States court, and fined in the discretion of the court or imprisoned. I suggest to the Senator that at no time in the history of the country, no matter how great the stress, has any such provision ever been made, and there is no necessity for it now.

I want to say that we passed over yesterday, while I happened to be absent, one or two sections that are to apply to this vast country of seventy millions of people; and when we get the bill into the Senate I shall certainly move to strike them out. If the Senators in charge of the bill think that persons ought to be threatened with imprisonment and fine and brought up in the courts, you will have a hundred thousand cases, probably. This tax will be made as odious as possible. While I am in favor of penalties as a means of paying a fair proportion of this war tax, I do not believe that in this day and at this time and under these conditions such extreme penalties ought to be imposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Let the Secretary state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, page 29, amend the amendment by striking out the words "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

Mr. CULLOM. I wish simply to say that in my judgment those words are not necessary in the bill.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I wish to call attention again to a distinction between the case of stamps on instruments and stamps on medicines. The handlers of patent medicines are people who do a great deal of business, and naturally they will be conversant with the stamp law and the amount of the stamp tax. On the other hand, the parties who give receipts and small notes may have few business transactions and are largely unaccustomed to judicial proceedings.

There is undoubted force in what the Senator from Maryland suggests with respect to the punishment for failure to affix stamps under Schedule A, but as applied to the section of the proposed law which punishes the failure to affix stamps to proprietary medicines, I do not think it would be wise to go to the length which he proposes. There has been already stricken out the fixed pecuniary penalty of $100. We have adopted a more liberal pecuniary limit than the old law permitted. We fix no minimum, while the old law fixed a certain fine of $100.

Now, to go beyond this and withdraw from the judge the discretionary power of imprisonment, as for a misdemeanor, might encourage evasions of the statute. It must be remembered also that in the case of stamp duties on documents there is an additional penalty which does not apply to the stamp duty on proprietary medicines, and that is that the document itself is put under the ban if the stamp is not upon it. The effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be to leave a heavier penalty upon the man who fails to affix a stamp to a little promissory note than upon the man who fails to affix a stamp to a proprietary medicine.

Mr. GORMAN. I propose to strike it out.

Mr. CHILTON. But you still leave the document subject to objection as evidence.

Mr. GORMAN. No; I do not.

Mr. CHILTON. But the old law, which is reproduced in this bill, refused to admit in evidence an instrument that had no stamp upon it.

Mr. GORMAN. If the Senator will examine the old law, he will find that any man could correct it by going to the collector of internal revenue and paying for the stamps with a reasonable penalty.

Mr. CHILTON. That is in this bill also.

Mr. GORMAN. But he was not threatened with imprisonment.

Mr. CHILTON. In a case of inadvertent omission to affix the stamp the old law and this bill alike afforded a remedy, but in case of a willful evasion your amendment will result in more lenient treatment of the man who fails to put the stamp upon a proprietary medicine than of the man who fails to stamp a note. It is provided that the note shall be rejected from record and as evidence in court. No such penalty as that can be applied to proprietary medicines.

The effect of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland will be, as I said, to put the proprietor of medicines on a better ground than the man who willfully fails to stamp a note or receipt.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no such intention. I was rather unfortunate in my statement, if the Senator from Texas misunderstands the situation. That is not my contention at all.

Mr. CHILTON. I did not say that the Senator contended for that result. I was merely pointing it out.

Mr. GORMAN. No; I have no idea of doing it. The section which the Senator refers to was passed upon in my absence, as I stated, as reported by the committee, and for the first time the committee of which the distinguished Senator from Texas is a member provides that a man who simply fails to put a proper stamp on his note can be brought up before a United States court and fined and imprisoned. I want to go back and correct that. I want to make the same rule apply to everybody, because I do not believe it is necessary. I want to relieve this proposed law of what I think is an outrageous provision.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland if he thinks it is an outrage for a manufacturer convicted before a court of an intention to evade a law of this kind to be imprisoned not exceeding six months, at the discretion of a court of the United States, if the manufacturer does so deliberately and with intent to defraud the Government of the United States? It seems to me that is hypercriticism. That is the way it strikes me.

Mr. GORMAN. I may be all wrong about it. As I said a moment ago, there may be some reason why you should take a manufacturer and in an extreme case, such as the Senator suggests, impose a heavy fine on him. I have never known of a case where imprisonment was necessary to enforce the law and to have good government. I have seen in my time, in the administration of the law, 5,000 people brought up from their homes hundreds of miles and dragged before United States commissioners, United States collectors, and the courts, but never, however, with such a stringent provision as the one under consideration.

In administering, myself, in a large part of the State of Maryland the law of 1866, I have seen honest, earnest farmers who were not observant of all of the provisions of the law give notes and instruments of writing and fail to get a stamp, although at that time, as I have said, they only had to ride to their county seat or write a letter to one of the internal-revenue officers, of whom there were from one to five in every county, practically, in the old States of the Union; and yet 5,000 cases of that sort came up and the expense and annoyance to them was greater than anything I have ever known in the way of interference with business interests.

There was not a single man on this floor in 1880 who would have advocated such a tax or any tax like it. It was by common consent agreed both by Republicans and Democrats that so great was the annoyance and so expensive to the people that the first thing to do was to wipe out this stamp tax as soon as the revenues of the Government were sufficient to do it. We all agreed to its repeal. The Democratic text from the very beginning up to the close of the war was that we should dispose of this class of tax, which is annoying and destructive to our people.

Now, I say to the Senator from Rhode Island if the corporations have become so bad since 1866 that the same penalties which were then in force are not sufficient, place what you please upon the corporations that have business control, so that there is no excuse for their failure to put on stamps. If you think it is necessary, if you think it is wise, put on your imprisonment clause. But what I desire I have called to the attention of the Senate now, because this is the first opportunity I have had. I want to go back and relieve the people of the country from such a burden. I do not want to see such officers as we have throughout the Union, all partisans, making cases and bringing our people into the United States courts, for that will be the effect of it. They will not be brought to a collector of internal revenue any longer, but will be dragged into court.

Mr. MILLS. And make costs.

Mr. GORMAN. And make costs, making the officers rich with their fees and impoverishing our people. No war with Spain, no amount of expense that the existing war will cost, will compensate for such a provision as this, in my judgment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I agree very fully with the suggestion made by the Senator from Maryland as to all the cases mentioned by him. But the section under consideration does not apply to that class of people. The section under consideration applies to manufacturers who fail to put the stamps on their goods. Under the law referred to by him there was an imperative fine of $100 imposed in every such case. There was absolutely no discretion allowed. A fine of $100 had to be imposed and to be paid when there was a failure to place the stamps on the goods.

The pending bill, as proposed by the committee, allows a wider discretion. It permits a man, where a charge is made that there is a failure to put a stamp on the goods, to be fined in any sum not exceeding $500 or imprisonment at the discretion of the court, where there has been a willful violation of the law, where the judge presiding says that the intention has been to swindle the Government, where it has been done for the purpose of making money to evade the payment of a tax that is justly due the Government. The judge may, if he sees fit, impose a penalty of imprisonment or he may impose a fine. It may be a penalty of 1 cent, or $1, or $5, or $100, or $500. It simply leaves a wider discretion to the court in the cases of these corporations where they fail to put the stamps on the articles that are required by the law.

Mr. MILLS. What is the limit to the penalty of imprisonment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not more than six months. It may be one minute or one day. It simply provides a wider discretion to the court than existed under the old law.

Mr. President, I do think it was an unpardonable outrage that a man who by accident failed to put a stamp on a package of goods should be compelled by an infernal informer to pay a hundred dollars to the Government whether there was any intention to do wrong or not. I do not believe the old law was wise in that respect; I think it ought not to be repeated here on the statute books; but I do believe there should be a difference between men who erroneously, by accident or oversight, make a mistake and men who deliberately go about swindling the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I shall vote against striking out that imprisonment clause as applied to this particular class of cases. I shall vote with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] in regard to the other provision, where a penalty is inflicted upon persons who may not have the opportunity of knowing the law and understanding its effect. There is, however, no excuse in this particular case; but I think the class of persons mentioned here, if they deliberately and willfully, with the intent to swindle the Government, fail or refuse to affix the stamp provided, ought to suffer the penalty; and I think the penalties here imposed are mild compared with what ought to be imposed for maliciously and intentionally violating the law.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I think the penalties imposed in this bill are extremely excessive, and especially in this instance. There is great force in the remark made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] a while ago, that there is a very great difference in trying a citizen before a Federal court and trying him before a State court. In the first place, the State courts are held in the vicinity where the defendant resides, where his character is known; he is tried before his own people; he is tried where it is easy to procure evidence. That is not the case in the Federal courts, for then the defendant is carried away from his home, is kept away from his home, is tried before strangers, and is tried where it is difficult to get evidence in support of his contention.

This is a question which turns upon a man's intention. Who is to try that? Is it to be tried by the court alone, or is it to be tried by a jury? This offense is incomplete unless the defendant willfully and intentionally did this thing. Who is to try that intention? Upon whom is the burden of proof? What sort of testimony is to be admitted that is to fix the status of the offense?

Mr. ALDRICH. The burden of proof is plainly upon the Government. The act must be done with the intention of evading the law.

Mr. MILLS. What sort of testimony would you admit? Here comes up a case where a bottle of paregoric is sold without a stamp, and for that offense a penalty is proposed of six months' imprisonment and $500 fine.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not unless the man manufactured the article.

Mr. MILLS. I do not care whether he is a manufacturer or a user.

Mr. FAULKNER. This section covers not only the manufacturer, but the wholesale and retail dealer.

Mr. MILLS. I do not care who the man is. I simply want to put on record before the Senate my statement that the penalty is far in excess of the culpability of the offense. Besides that, I believe it is provided that the Federal judge can impose this penalty; and I want to call the attention of the Senate to some facts which, perhaps, some of our Southern people have not forgotten.

I remember seeing vast numbers of men dragged to a Federal court in my State—my colleague will remember it—for neglecting to cancel the stamps on old whisky barrels or on other articles, the stamps on which were required by law to be canceled. What was the result?

Informers came down there amongst our merchants seeking to find old whisky barrels having upon them stamps not canceled. They took one street in my town and went from one end of it to the other, and they took my people and carried them off to court, and they were indicted with these penalties hanging over them. That was not the end of it. The district attorney, who had them indicted, said he could not try them then, though they said, "We have our witnesses here and we want a speedy trial." They were kept there, and he would not try them until it was convenient for him to do so; and they were held there for weeks until they were obliged to compromise at the dictation of the district attorney and consent to be blackmailed before they could get out of the clutches of the Federal law.

This is the distinction between a trial before a Federal court and a trial before the district court of the State in which the offense is charged to have been committed; and I think this penalty ought to be stricken out.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, of course very many abuses creep into the administration of all departments of jurisprudence. So far as I am personally concerned, my contact with judges of the Federal courts has happily been of a different nature from that described by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. Indeed, I have found that defendants in my part of the country can get a speedier trial in a Federal court than they can anywhere else. Still, that has nothing to do with the queston now before us.

There are differences, as has been said by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], of a very marked character with reference to the various sections under which penalties have been annexed or affixed; but here is section 19, which provides:

> That on and after the 1st day of June, 1898, any person, firm, company, or corporation that shall make, prepare, and sell, or remove for consumption or sale, drugs, medicines, preparations, compositions, etc.

So it refers to those who shall make, prepare, and sell.

Mr. COCKRELL. And only to those.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly. That is, it is a conjunctive, and not a disjunctive.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will ask the Senator from California, as the Senator from Missouri seems to doubt my statement, whether or not that does not include not only manufacturers, but wholesalers and retailers as well?

Mr. WHITE. In my judgment it does not, unless you say that a retailer is a man who makes, prepares, and sells. Of course he may manufacture something and sell it.

Mr. FAULKNER. The section also says:

> Or remove for consumption or sale, drugs, medicines, preparations, etc.

So that it includes the retailer and wholesaler.

Mr. CULLOM. Every class.

Mr. GORMAN. It includes everybody.

Mr. CHILTON. I am inclined to think the Senator from West Virginia is right about that.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me, if the Senator from California will allow me, that the disjunctive conjunction "or" connects the words "sell," or "remove for consumption or sale." If the article is manufactured and sold, or manufactured and removed for sale, then the offense occurs, for this disjunctive conjunction connects the word "sell" and the word "remove." The language is "sell, or remove for consumption or sale." It does not make a man liable for the simple act of selling.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator from Arkansas will look at the bill on page 58, amendment No. 175, which carries out the very provision here, he will see that it expressly includes wholesale and retail dealers.

Mr. WHITE. That is readily explained. Of course a retailer may be a manufacturer; but the proposition to which I arose is not connected at all with the point made by the Senator from West Virginia. We are confronted, I think, by a situation of this kind: If we are going to pass a statute which is to be enforced regarding those who are honest and is not to be enforced regarding those who are dishonest, very well; I can understand the force of this contention. But here is a case not where any injured innocent is to appear, but where the law requires that the act shall be deliberately done; and if it is difficult to prove that it is deliberately done, so much the better for the accused; and if he deliberately violated this law, and the party violating it is not to be subjected to a punishment which will amount to anything, it is well to say so, and we can trust to that honesty, which I believe will cover a multitude of drugs, as it is said to cover a multitude of sins in some directions, and let the law be enforced as to those who are willing to pay. In this event, I presume that several Senators who have spoken upon the subject will wish to revise their calculations as to the amount of revenue to be collected under this bill when it becomes a law.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to make one further suggestion. Possibly the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] is correct in the idea that this statute applies to the man who sells, though this construction is not clear; but suppose it does so apply? Senators in discussing this particular section point out abuses which they claim will grow up under a totally different section. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] talks about this being an unprecedented sort of punishment. He is entirely mistaken. Take the case of a package of smoking tobacco under existing law. If a man should not put a stamp upon it, he is liable to fine or imprisonment or both.

Let the little storekeeper sell a package of tobacco worth only 15 or 25 cents, and he is now liable to fine or imprisonment. Yet the Senator from Maryland argues the case as if this was a new departure in our Federal jurisprudence, as if nobody had ever been punished by imprisonment before for similar misdemeanors. Why should a man who makes or sells an unstamped package of smoking tobacco be subjected to a heavier penalty than a man who makes and sells a bottle containing some patent nostrum?

I can not see any reason for that distinction. I think there is a reason in the case which the Senator from Maryland describes, and I will cheerfully vote with him when we go back to that section of the bill to ameliorate the amendment so far as it applies to stamps to be affixed to instruments.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator will allow me, section 19 merely applies to manufacturers of these articles. Section 21 applies to other persons who may sell the articles after they are manufactured. The provision beginning in line 3, page 31, is:

> Or any other person who shall sell, send out, remove, or deliver any article or commodity, manufactured as aforesaid.

This section applies solely to manufacturers of these various articles.

Mr. CHILTON. Be that as it may, the point I make is that it is no more a hardship to the man who makes or sells patent medicines than to the man who makes or sells a package of tobacco.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Smith]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is absent from the Chamber, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TURPIE. I am informed that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] with whom I am paired would, if present, vote "nay" on this question. As I vote in the same way, I will take the liberty of recording my vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. MANTLE. I inquire whether the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator has not voted.

Mr. MANTLE. Then I withhold my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. GEAR. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that we transfer our pairs, so that we may both vote.

Mr. THURSTON. With the understanding just had with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], I will record my vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEAR. I vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] who is not present, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg to inquire if the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. DANIEL. I am informed that I am at liberty to vote on this question notwithstanding my pair, and I vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON. My colleague [Mr. TURNER] has been called away from the Senate Chamber. He stands paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I do not know how my colleague would vote if present.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 27; as follows:

So Mr. GORMAN's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, under the arrangement made yesterday, so as to save time in the discussion of this matter hereafter, I ask now, while it is fresh in our minds, that we go back to page 15, section 5, which is the beginning of the provisions in regard to adhesive stamps. There the Senate by a vote struck out the House provision for a fine of $50 and imposed a fine of $500. The section as it came from the House read as follows:

> SEC. 5. That if any person or persons shall make, sign, or issue, or cause to be made, signed, or issued, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped for denoting the tax hereby imposed thereon, or without having thereupon an adhesive stamp to denote said tax, such person or persons shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $50, and such instrument, document, or paper, as aforesaid, shall be deemed invalid and of no effect.

The Senate struck out the words "upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $50" and inserted a provision that they should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and subjected to fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, or rather, as is suggested to me, I ask that the vote may be taken on the imprisonment clause.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask that there shall be order in the Senate and that the Secretary shall read the section proposed to be amended, so that the Senate can understand the question.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment, in section 5, line 3, on page 16, after the word "dollars," by striking out "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

Mr. GORMAN. No; I want to strike out the entire provision inserted by the Senate, so as to restore the House provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will inform the Senator from Maryland that that was amended as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary will state the amendment which was made as in Committee of the Whole.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, in section 5, page 15, line 25, after the word "shall," struck out the words "upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $50," and in lieu thereof the following was inserted:

> Be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months or both, at the discretion of the court.

A further amendment was made after the word "tax," in line 24, on page 15, by the Senate inserting the words "with intent to evade the provisions of this act;" and a further committee amendment was adopted after the word "shall," in line 5, on page 16, by striking out "be deemed invalid and of no effect" and inserting "not be competent evidence in any court."

Mr. GORMAN. I understand I have a right under the agreement made to have another vote on the amendment, and I desire to have that, so as to endeavor to have the amendment voted down which provides for a fine not exceeding $500 and imprisonment for not more than six months, which will permit the language of the bill to stand as it came to us from the House of Representatives, that any person who fails to affix the stamp required by law shall, upon conviction, be fined not exceeding $50.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator believe that is sufficient?

Mr. GORMAN. I do; and that was the old law, which was enforced, and there was never any trouble about enforcing it. Besides that, the fine ought to be remitted if the act was not done intentionally.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator does not mean to offer an amendment to amendment No. 36, in section 5, does he?

Mr. GORMAN. I do not.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the fine ought to be greater than $50, I should be willing, so far as I am concerned, to strike out the imprisonment clause from the provision adopted as in Committee of the Whole, but not to reduce the amount of the fine.

Mr. ALDRICH. An amendment has already been adopted by the Senate to this section which makes these penalties apply only in cases where the intent to evade the law is shown. As the bill came to us from the House of Representatives there was no such provision, and I ask the Senator from Maryland whether he desires to go back and use that language all the way through the sections, and have a penalty of but $50 apply in all cases, whether intent to defraud was shown or not?

Mr. GORMAN. I think the House provision is ample in all these cases. At all events, it is in this case, in my judgment. I do not propose by my amendment to affect amendment No. 36, covering the last two or three lines of section 5; but I desire a vote on the imprisonment clause of the section.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Secretary to state where the words "with intent to evade the provisions of this act" were inserted.

The SECRETARY. After the word "tax," in line 24, on page 15, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the words "with intent to evade the provisions of this act."

Mr. BACON. I beg to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he will accomplish the same purpose by simply striking out the words "five hundred dollars" in the Senate amendment and inserting "fifty dollars." He will then preserve the phraseology suggested by the Senate committee and accomplish the same purpose; and then he can move to strike out the clause in regard to imprisonment.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to that, and I will modify the amendment to that extent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that he make that modification.

Mr. GORMAN. I have agreed to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Maryland as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend, on page 16, section 5, after the word "than," at the end of line 2, by striking out "five hundred" and inserting "fifty."

Mr. GORMAN. Then strike out the words "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed, in line 3, after the word "dollars," to strike out "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court;" so as to read:

Such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall pay a fine of not more than $50.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Maryland, on further consideration, will not propose that amendment. This section applies to stamps to be affixed to all kinds of instruments. For instance, a railroad company might be required to affix stamps amounting to $5.000 on a mortgage for $500,000, and would be subjected to a penalty of but $50 if they did not do it. It seems to me that that is going to a greater extreme than the Senator from Maryland intends to go. If he wants to restrict this to a fine alone and to reduce it below $500, I hope he will suggest a penalty somewhere near commensurate with the character of the offense.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no objection to the Senator, if he desires—he seems to dwell very largely upon corporations to-day—afterwards offering an amendment to this section providing that in cases of corporations they may be fined or imprisoned just as he sees proper.

Mr. ALDRICH. I only made a suggestion.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the Senator's suggestion, and it was very shrewdly made, with a view to catch the popular idea that everything must be against corporations; but there are 70,000,000 people in this country who will be affected by this provision as it stands, and they are not corporations, but are the people who will suffer; they are the people who will, ignorantly and without knowledge, violate the provisions of this law and be dragged by Federal officials to the courts. We shall then have Government officials whose fees will be immensely swollen by this provision; and the power they will be able to exercise can not be measured in words. Now, if the Senator desires to make a special provision to cover corporations—which I know he is most anxious to do—he can very easily draft such a provision. What I am after now is to save the great masses of our fellow-citizens, who would be annoyed beyond measure by the enactment of this proposed legislation.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator if he believes under this provision that 5 per cent of these transactions would be by corporations?

Mr. GORMAN. No; I do not.

Mr. HALE. Would not almost all of them be individuals and not corporations, as the Senator says, who might be caught without a knowledge of the law? And really the question of corporations does not practically come in.

Mr. GORMAN. It does not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps I was unfortunate in using the words "railroad companies" in connection with this section. I suggested railroad companies because the railroad companies are about the only people who would give a mortgage on which $500 or more would be required in stamps. I take it for granted that neither the Senator from Maryland nor myself nor any other Senator in this body would be likely to give a mortgage which would require on it $500 worth of stamps.

Mr. HALE. I suppose it will be the rarest case in the world that an intentional violation of this law will be found. There will be some cases, not many, where by inattention, inadvertence, possibly ignorance, there may be infractions of the law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose the Senator must have read the bill carefully. Is he aware that those cases are all provided for in other sections of the bill and are not covered by this section at all? This section only applies to intentional evasions of the law.

Mr. HALE. I know; but that is all technical. Everybody who has been a prosecuting officer knows that in many cases there is what would technically be called deliberation, knowledge of the law, when in truth and in fact there is ignorance and inattention. My experience is that almost all these penalties are made too large. They do not tend to enforce the law so well as moderate penalties would do.

Mr. BACON. While, as stated by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] some moments ago, the burden of proof is on the Government, I desire to suggest that still in the trial of the question of intention the burden of proof would really be upon the defendant, because the presumption is that he knows the law, and the burden of proof would undoubtedly be upon him to show that he did not know it.

Mr. WHITE. I think it is evident that it is the sense of the Senate that as to matters of this kind and several others referred to by the Senator from Maryland the imprisonment section should go out; but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to the fact that when this amendment is made just as he wishes it and if the House provision shall stand as it now stands, still the defendant will be dragged to court and witnesses will be brought there, and all those evils will take place, the only difference being in the extent of the punishment that may be inflicted. All the remainder of the annoyance will be present. I have stated my view as to this matter, but I do not think it worth while to go into any considerable insistence upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the committee amendment on page 16, line 3, by striking out the words "five hundred" and inserting "fifty," and after the word "dollars," in the same line, by striking out "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, to strike out "five hundred" and insert "fifty."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "five hundred" and inserting "one hundred," and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland desire the vote taken on that amendment before the vote on the other part of the amendment is taken?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, page 16, it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "one;" so as to read "$100."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment which has been stated.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. BACON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if the other part of the amendment to the amendment is also included in this motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been acted upon yet.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I make the same transfer of my pair that I made before, and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HANNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MANTLE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I should vote "yea," if he were present.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). The transfer of pairs which was made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] during the last roll call continues, and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McLAURIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. I observe that he is out of the Chamber, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the affirmative). I beg leave to withdraw my vote. I thought the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] was here. I observe that he is not in the Chamber, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Money,	Spooner,
Bacon,	Frye,	Murphy,	Thurston,
Bate,	Gorman,	Nelson,	Turley,
Berry,	Hale,	Pasco,	Vest,

NOT VOTING—42.

Baker,	Hanna,	Martin,	Quay,
Burrows,	Hansbrough,	Mason,	Rawlins,
Butler,	Harris,	Mills,	Sewell,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Smith,

Gray,	Mantle,	Proctor,

So Mr. GORMAN'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to strike out the words indicated in line 3.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 3, page 16, it is proposed to strike out "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment which has been stated.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. On page 21, line 4, after the word "dollars," I move to strike out the words "or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. On the same page, line 18, after the word "dollars," I move to strike out "or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. On page 23, line 13, after the word "dollars," I move to strike out "or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both."

The VICE-PRESIDENT The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. ALLEN. The vote was taken on the last amendment before I had an opportunity to obtain the floor. In each of these cases, as I recall it, the penalty is incurred for a willful failure to affix a stamp. I do not believe it is wise to take off all penalties for an intentional violation of the law. I contended yesterday, and I think rightly, as I would contend at any time, that a mere inadvertent or ignorant failure to affix a stamp ought not to be punished if the party is required to make the Government whole; but I do not believe the bill, if it is to become a law, should be robbed of all its penal features, especially those features which impose a penalty for a known, open, willful, flagrant violation of its provisions. There is a great deal of difference between an innocent, inadvertent failure to observe the law and a known, open defiance of its provisions.

While I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to take out all the penal features of the proposed act so far as it can be done with safety, I do not think it should be robbed to the extent of making it inoperative.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is very evident that the Senate intends to make these amendments, but I should like to enter a protest, a feeble one, against taking out of the bill all the penalties where fraud is obliged to be proved before a person can be punished. In this particular case, it is the transfer of stock, and where there is a willful intent to violate the law, the penalty is to be stricken down. We had better not pass the bill at all than to pass an act which has no penalties to punish a violation of its provisions, especially a violation where the intent must be proved as in a case like this.

Mr. ALLEN. Or where intent is conceded.

Mr. ALDRICH. Where it is conceded.

Mr. TELLER. Where there can be no mistake about it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Where there can be no mistake about it.

Mr. FAULKNER. Where is the clause in relation to intent?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In line 10, page 23, and the clause beginning in line 17 provides that if a mistake is made, the paper can be taken to the proper officer and stamped.

Mr. FAULKNER. As I understand this section, it covers any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A.

Mr. ALDRICH. Registrations or transfers.

Mr. FAULKNER. Any at all. Therefore it is as broad as Schedule A, and every argument that applies to that schedule applies to this, it strikes me.

Mr. ALDRICH. It only applies to transfers of these articles and not the articles themselves, simply transfers on the stock exchanges or anywhere else, and the violation must be willful, and the intent must be proved.

Mr. WHITE. In addition to that, as I had occasion to remark some time ago, the proviso that the documents shall be deemed invalid and of no effect in many jurisdictions will not amount to any penalty at all. So that the $50 will be the maximum that will be inflicted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning in line 9, page 29. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to strike out all after the word "chemical," in line 11, page 29, down to and including the word "aforesaid," in line 19, as follows:

Nor upon any medicine compounded according to the United States or other national pharmacopœia, or national formulary, or of which the full or proper formula is published in any of the dispensatories now or hitherto in common use among physicians or apothecaries, when not sold or offered for sale, or advertised under any other name, form, or guise than that under which they may be severally denominated and laid down in the pharmacopœias, formularies, or dispensatories, as aforesaid.

So as to read:

Provided, That no stamp tax shall be imposed upon any uncompounded medicinal drug or chemical, nor upon any medicine sold to or for the use of any person which may be mixed or compounded for said person according to the written receipt or prescription of any physician.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire what became of the amendments on page 27. Have they been acted upon?

Mr. BURROWS. They have all been acted upon and agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I was not present at the time.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 22, page 29, after the word "any," I move to insert "practicing," and, after the word "physician," the words "or surgeon;" so as to read "any practicing physician or surgeon."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 29, line 23, before the word "shall," to strike out "section" and insert "act;" so as to read:

But nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 19, on page 30.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to have the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill. There is an amendment which I desire to move to the text in section 19, and also in section 21, but as I understand the agreement of the Senate, the amendment can not be offered until after the amendments of the committee have been considered.

Mr. ALLISON. That was the understanding, and I hope that course will be pursued.

Mr. BACON. And I understand further that any motion to strike out entirely will not be made until all questions of amendment to the several sections have been acted upon.

Mr. CULLOM. That is the rule generally.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 30, section 20, line 18, after the word "committed," to strike out "be subject to a penalty of $50, to be recovered, together with the costs thereupon accruing," and insert:

shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months or both, at the discretion of the court.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 20. That any manufacturer or maker of any of the articles for sale mentioned in Schedule B, after the same shall have been so made, and the particulars hereinbefore required as to stamps have been complied with, or any other person who shall take off, remove, or detach, or cause, or permit, or suffer to be taken off, or removed or detached, any stamp, or who shall use any stamp, or any wrapper or cover to which any stamp is affixed, to cover any other article or commodity than that originally contained in such wrapper or cover, with such stamp when first used, with the intent to evade the stamp duties, shall for every such article, respectively, in respect of which any such offense shall be committed, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than fifty nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court, and every such article or commodity as aforesaid shall also be forfeited.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 22, after the word "not," I move to strike out "less than fifty nor."

The SECRETARY. After the word "not," in line 22, page 30, it is proposed to strike out the words "less than fifty nor;" so as to read, "shall pay a fine of not more than $500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask if the word "shall," in line 20, before the word "be," should not come out, for it says:

Shall for every such article, respectively, in respect of which any such offense shall be committed, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. That is better phraseology.

Mr. SPOONER. Let it be read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Shall for every such article, respectively, in respect of which any such offense shall be committed, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the word "shall," in line 20, will be stricken out. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. I shall not make a motion to strike out the imprisonment clause here or the one preceding it, because the Senate has just voted, by a very small majority, it is true, that they desire to keep in the penalty of imprisonment on agents of corporations. I desire to have it noted, however, that I dissent entirely from a penalty of that sort.

Mr. BACON. I shall feel constrained to offer the amendment, if the Senator from Maryland does not, and I wish to state my reasons therefor. If the section were limited to manufacturers, or even large dealers, or if it were of a character where the offense might not be very diminutive, then there might be some possible defense to such a penalty as this, but if I read this section aright, if a stamp is removed off a box of pills or off a vial of the smallest value in a drug store, not only the person who has removed it is liable to indictment on that account, but the owner of the store for having permitted it.

Of course either party might not be convicted, but it lays them liable to very great prosecution for a very small offense. It relates to every article that can be found in a drug store. The enumeration, if Senators will look at Schedule B, refers to boxes of pills and almost every other small article known in a drug store; it relates to any single act with reference to any one of those articles in a drug store, and it relates to defrauding the Government to the amount of 1 cent or one-quarter of a cent.

Mr. President, to have upon the statute books a criminal statute to the effect that if a man intentionally defrauds the Government out of one-quarter of a cent he shall be liable to a fine of $500 and imprisonment for the term of six months I do think is utterly without any reason, nor is it within the bounds of any defense. And the property is forfeited, as the Senator from Maryland suggests to me. While under the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, which has been agreed to, I understand, by the Senate striking out the minimum, the penalty could be very small, still it puts it within the power of a judge to impose a penalty absolutely disproportionate to the character of the offense.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to a fact.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the stamp is removed from a package to which a stamp has once been duly affixed, it can only be removed for the deliberate purpose of defrauding the Government. There is nothing else. The proposed statute only covers the offense of removing a stamp for the purpose of defrauding the Government by putting it on some other package which has not been stamped, or else by taking a cover from a bottle or package which has been duly stamped and putting it upon some other package.

Therefore it must be with the deliberate intention of defrauding the Government, and a man may do it five thousand times and never be caught, and the five thousand and first time he may be caught, and does the Senator say that because in each individual instance the amount involved is small, therefore a man, who must intend to swindle the Government, ought to be permitted to swindle it as long as he likes, but if he gets caught shall only pay a fine and not be imprisoned, because the particular stamp which he cuts off is a small one, as the Government tax is small?

Mr. BACON. In the limited experience which I have had at the bar I have never before heard it suggested because a man may have violated the law five thousand times and be caught the five thousand and first time, that when he was punished for the commission of the five thousand and first offense the perpetration of the crime in the other five thousand instances would also be included in the penalty; and yet that is the proposition of the Senator from Colorado.

That is not the way the law gauges the punishment which may be administered for the violation of law. The punishment is gauged as to the violation of the particular law and the particular infraction of that law under which and for which the party is indicted; and I stand to the proposition, notwithstanding the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, that to put upon the statute book a law that a man who intentionally defrauds the Government out of one-quarter of 1 cent shall be liable to a fine of $500 and imprisonment for six months is utterly disproportioned to the character of the offense.

Mr. President, the fact, as stated by the Senator from Colorado, that it is an intentional violation is no answer to the suggestion I make, because that is a fundamental element in all crime—intention. I do not say that the party should be released from all punishment by reason of the smallness of the crime. I simply contend that the magnitude of the penalty should be in some degree proportioned to the magnitude of the offense.

This is a matter which relates to a very large number of a very respectable class in our community. There are drug stores everywhere. I repeat, it is not simply the criminal who is interested in this provision, it is the man who is liable to be charged with being a criminal when he may be innocent, and who may find it very difficult to prove that he is innocent, or rather to rebut whatever proof of guilt may be brought against him.

I do not think, in view of the suggestions which I have made, that the feature of imprisonment should be left upon this provision any more than in the other cases of stamps. If we have said that the penalty for imprisonment is disproportioned in the case of the other stamps upon which we have acted, why should we say that the disproportion does not apply in this case?

Mr. SPOONER. That applies to a case where a man might, in ignorance of the law, or by inadvertence, not put a stamp on.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But the words in this provision are that it shall be done "with the intent to evade the stamp duties."

Mr. SPOONER. As where he removes the stamp and puts it on something else, which, as the Senator from Colorado says, can not be anything but a deliberate fraud.

Mr. BACON. Granting all the Senator says, it simply comes back to the proposition which I originally suggested, that the penalty is disproportioned to the character of the offense.

Mr. SPOONER. The principle of law, de minimis non curat lex, does not apply to criminal statutes.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin does not for a moment believe that I had reference to the application of any such principle. I shall not undertake to enter into a defense on that subject.

Mr. SPOONER. A man who would remove a 1-cent stamp from one article and put it on another would not be a little bit of a rascal because it was only a 1-cent stamp.

Mr. BACON. That may be true, but the offense is nevertheless a very small one.

Mr. SPOONER. The offense is in the fraud, not in the amount of the stamp.

Mr. BACON. Every criminal statute is based upon the fact that a crime is committed, and intentionally committed; but in the imposition of penalties we have those penalties graded according to the magnitude as well as the intention.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the Senator from Georgia pardon me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. It is a very trifling offense to take a postage stamp off a letter after it has been used and put it on another letter, and yet it is a felony by statute to remove one for that purpose, and the offender is liable to imprisonment for three years in State prison.

Mr. COCKRELL. And that applies to 1-cent as well as to 3-cent stamps.

Mr. BACON. Everything relating to the postal service is very much more carefully guarded than almost anything else. I will not trespass upon the time of the Senate. I offer my amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Of course the illustration made by the Senator from Georgia is an extreme one. He supposes what he would call, I presume, the minimum offender a man who, while having a fraudulent intention, does as little harm as he can and still commits a crime. The gentleman who is engaged in the business of deliberately committing crime and whose views on that subject are somewhat circumscribed is to the extent of his offense——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from California will allow me to say that it may be supposed every fellow who counterfeits a 50-cent piece ought to be punished 50 cents' worth as against the man who counterfeits a fifty-dollar bill.

Mr. WHITE. That would be the new system which it seems is to be injected into this measure. For instance, in the State of California the penalty for manslaughter is not to exceed ten years imprisonment, and yet the court in certain cases, where mitigating circumstances might be of the most remarkable character, would perhaps send the person convicted to jail for only a few days, whereas in an extreme case he would be sent to jail perhaps for ten years. Some reliance, some regard, some respect must be paid to the court. Of course if we are to proceed upon the theory that the court is a bigger rascal than the defendant, it would be very hard to legislate. Then we must elaborate our system and fix the penalties here notwithstanding the extent of our present labors.

Section 3374 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides the following penalty:

Every person who removes from any manufactory, or from any place where tobacco or snuff is made, any manufactured tobacco or snuff without the same being put up in proper packages, or without the proper stamp for the amount of tax thereon being affixed and canceled, as required by law; or, if the same be intended for export, without the proper export stamp being affixed; or who uses, sells, or offers for sale, or has in possession, except in the manufactory, or while in transfer under bond or a collector's permit, from any manufactory, store, or warehouse, to a vessel for exportation to a foreign country, any manufactured tobacco or snuff, without proper stamps for the amount of tax thereon being affixed and canceled; or who sells, or offers for sale, for consumption in the United States, or uses, or has in possession, except in the manufactory, or while in transfer under bond or a collector's permit, from any manufactory, store, or warehouse, to a vessel for exportation to a foreign country, any manufactured tobacco or snuff on which only the stamp marking the same for export has been affixed, shall for each such offense, respectively, be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

If for a pinch of snuff thus improperly abstracted and illicitly taken this penalty is to be inflicted, can it be expected that my friend from Georgia will allow any other business to be transacted until purloiners of snuff have been duly protected?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I simply desire to call attention to the fact that in each of the instances where the Senate has voted to strike out the penalty of imprisonment it has been in a case where the law was carefully guarded to those instances where there was an intentional violation of it, so that, so far as the intention to commit the fraud upon the Government is concerned, there is no distinction between the amendment which I propose and the half a dozen amendments for which Senators have already voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 22, after the word "dollars," strike out the words "or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 31, section 21, line 5, before the word "thereon," to strike out the word "duty" and insert "tax;" so as to read:

That any maker or manufacturer of any of the articles or commodities mentioned in Schedule B, as aforesaid, or any other person who shall sell, send out, remove, or deliver any article or commodity, manufactured as aforesaid, before the tax thereon shall have been fully paid by affixing thereon the proper stamp, as in this act provided, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, section 21, line 11, before the word "chargeable," to strike out the word "duty" and insert "tax;" so as to read:

Or who shall hide or conceal, or cause to be hidden or concealed, or who shall remove or convey away, or deposit, or cause to be removed or conveyed away from or deposited in any place, any such article or commodity, to evade the tax chargeable thereon, or any part thereof, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, section 21, line 12, after the word "be," to strike out "subject to a penalty of $100" and insert "deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Iowa to let that amendment be passed over, because it is to this section that I desire to move to strike out all that will include wholesale or retail dealers.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator will not object to striking out the words "less than one hundred nor."

Mr. ALLISON. I propose, in line 14, to strike out "less than one hundred nor."

Mr. FAULKNER. I have no objection to making that amendment to the amendment if the Senator desires, but then let the amendment as amended be passed over, because if the Senate agrees to the amendment that I will offer to the text of the bill, I shall be in favor of striking out the clause fixing the penalty of imprisonment. If the Senate does not agree to that amendment, it would be a question in the minds of some Senators whether the imprisonment penalty should be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. There will be no trouble about that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 14, page 31, section 21, after the word "not," strike out the words "less than one hundred nor;" so as to read:

Shall pay a fine of not more than $500, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as amended will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 32, section 23, line 4, after the word "commodities," to strike out "as aforesaid" and insert "provided for in Schedule B;" and in line 9, after the word "commodity," to strike out "as aforesaid;" so as to read:

That every manufacturer or maker of any of the articles or commodities provided for in Schedule B, or his foreman, agent, or superintendent, shall at the end of each and every month make, sign, and file with the collector of internal revenue for the district in which he resides a declaration in writing that no such article or commodity has, during such preceding month or time when the last declaration was made, been removed, or carried, or sent, or caused or suffered or known to have been removed, carried, or sent from the premises of such manufacturer or maker other than such as have been duly taken account of and charged with the stamp tax, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 22, line 20, after the word "shall," to strike out "forfeit $500" and insert:

Be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall pay a fine of not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 22 I move to strike out the words "less than one hundred nor."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would it not be well to put in there the words "with intent to evade under this act," as applicable to such manufacturer or maker, or foreman, agent, or superintendent; so as to read:

And if any such manufacturer, maker, or his foreman, agent, or superintendent shall make any false or untrue declaration with intent to evade under this act such manufacturer or maker, etc.

It might be accidental. I do not know whether such a case is provided for.

Mr. ALLISON. Insert "with intent to evade the provisions of this act."

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; after the word "declaration," in line 19, insert "with intent to evade the provisions of this act."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "declaration," in line 19, insert the words "with intent to evade the provisions of this act."

Mr. ALLISON. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 33, section 23, line 1, after the word "articles," to strike out "enumerated" and insert "provided for;" in line 4, after the word "person," to insert "except as otherwise provided in this act;" and in line 6, after the word "thing," to strike out "enumerated" and insert "provided for;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 23. That the stamp taxes prescribed in this act on the articles provided for in Schedule B shall attach to all such articles and things sold or removed for sale on and after the said 1st day of June, 1898. Every person, except as otherwise provided in this act, who offers or exposes for sale any article or thing provided for in said Schedule B, whether the article so offered or exposed is of foreign manufacture and imported or of domestic manufacture, shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof, and shall be subject to all the taxes, liabilities, and penalties imposed by law for the sale of articles without the use of the proper stamp denoting the tax paid thereon; and all such articles of foreign manufacture shall, in addition to the import duty imposed on the same, be subject to the stamp tax prescribed in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Is it the intention of the Senator from Iowa to retain the words "1st day of June" in line 3, page 33?

Mr. ALLISON. What is the Senator's suggestion?

Mr. GORMAN. Does the Senator propose to have the bill go into effect on the 1st day of June?

Mr. ALLISON. It is the intention of the committee, of course, to fix a later date. It is better to strike out "1st day of June" and leave a blank.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 3, strike out the words "1st day of June."

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to insert "July."

Mr. ALLISON. I will insert "the 15th day of June." I hope by that time we shall get the bill through. I move that amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 3 strike out "first" and insert "fifteenth;" so as to read "15th day of June, 1898."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 24, line 23, page 33, after the word "expedient," to insert:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is directed to procure any of the stamps provided for in this act by private contract whenever such stamps can not be speedily prepared by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and a sum sufficient to so procure said stamps is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That this authority shall expire on the 1st day of January, 1899.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 24. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared for the payment of the taxes prescribed in this act suitable stamps denoting the tax on the document, article, or thing to which the same may be affixed, and he is authorized to prescribe such method for the cancellation of said stamps, as substitute for or in addition to the method provided in this act, as he may deem expedient. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is directed to procure any of the stamps provided for in this act by private contract whenever such stamps can not be speedily prepared by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; and a sum sufficient to so procure said stamps is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That this authority shall expire on the 1st day of January, 1899. And he may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, make all needful rules and regulations for the proper enforcement of this act.

Mr. GORMAN. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to line 2, on page 34, of the committee amendment:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is directed to procure any of the stamps provided for in this act by private contract.

I suggest to the Senator that the word "private" ought to be stricken out. There is no such emergency here as would prevent a reasonable contract in this matter.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not think that was ever intended.

Mr. GORMAN. It would probably be so construed.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the amendment to the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland is to strike out the word "private," in line 2, page 34.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree to the amendment suggested by the Senator. The word was used only in contradistinction with the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. GORMAN. It is not necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the committee? The Chair hears none, and the word "private" is stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 4 I move to amend the amendment by inserting:

And a sum sufficient to procure the stamps authorized in this act is hereby appropriated.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I am not certain that is quite right, but I want to provide a sufficient sum to immediately secure the stamps provided for in this act, making it a temporary appropriation which shall expire on the 1st day of January. I think provision should be made for it.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that it is a difficult matter to estimate what amount will be required, but with the right to make contracts, of course, it gives a very wide latitude, and it is a class of appropriations that ought not to be made, as a rule. I ask the Senator whether it is not possible to fix some sum that will cover the expenditure, not to exceed so many hundred thousand dollars? As the Senator knows, this would allow a contract for any amount and for any length of time that the contract may run.

Mr. ALLISON. I am perfectly willing to say "not exceeding $75,000."

Mr. GORMAN. I think that is better.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that, in my judgment, it will not be necessary to make these contracts except for a few months, or perhaps a month or two. I have no doubt the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, after the law is in full play, will be able to manufacture all these stamps. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue so informed me this morning.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator will put in the sum of $75,000 or whatever amount he thinks will cover the expenditure.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Allow me to suggest that this is an amendment of some importance, and to allow the Senator from Iowa time to frame the amendment properly the Senate had better adjourn, so that the provision can be prepared by to-morrow morning.

Mr. ALLISON. Will not the Senator allow us just to complete the pending amendment?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I thought perhaps the Senator would prefer, as nothing is to be done except to frame the proposed amendment, to keep the matter in hand until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I had intended to make a motion to go into executive session when we reached Schedule A; but as there may be some difficulty about fixing the proper amount to be inserted here, I will allow the motion to be made now.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be better to ascertain from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the amount necessary.

SILVER BULLION IN THE TREASURY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 27th ultimo, information relative to the item of $906,966.70, silver bullion, as set forth in the statement of the condition of the United States Treasury on the 26th day of April, 1898, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 19, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 18, 1898.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 18, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the Journal. As I heard it read, it states that upon the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill he named I made a motion to substitute another bill for the bill named by him. My motion was to add by way of amendment House bill 369 and not to substitute it for the bill named by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule a motion to amend is only in order by substituting one bill for another.

Mr. MOODY. The rule does not say amend by substitution; it says "to which motion one amendment only, designating another bill, may be made." I want to say that I did not know at the time that the bill should be designated as a substitute, and I should not have made the motion if that was the effect of it. But that was not my motion. The motion which I made was ruled out of order for another reason.

The SPEAKER. The Journal should state what happened. That is the reason why it was journalized in that way, because the idea is that the House shall have the opportunity of choosing between the two bills.

Mr. MOODY. I do not wish to be placed in the position of opposing a bill to which I was not opposed. I submit that I should be entitled to have the motion recorded in the Journal as it was actually made.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] did make a motion to designate another bill, and the Chair stated the rule; as he understood the rule it would only allow of a motion to substitute. The gentleman insisted on his right to add another bill to the one named by the gentleman from New Jersey. The point of order was made that it was not a bill on the Union Calendar, and the ruling was made upon that point.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made. If there is no other objection to the Journal, it will be considered as approved.

There was no further objection.

DEFICIENCY PENSIONS, ETC.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I report the following bill (H. R. 10378) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions, and for other objects, for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions, and for other objects, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, namely:

PENSIONS.

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $8,070,872.46: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same may be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount paid to each of the several classes of pensioners shall be accounted for separately.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

For the employment of such additional force of clerks, messengers, laborers, and other assistants as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be proper and necessary to the prompt, efficient, and accurate dispatch of official business in the War Department and its bureaus, to be allotted by the Secretary of War to such bureaus and offices as the exigencies of the existing situation may demand, $50,000.

For printing and binding for the War Department and its bureaus, to be executed under the direction of the Public Printer, $75,000.

That no money appropriated by the "act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for support of the Army for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes," approved May 4, 1898, shall be paid as additional increased compensation to soldiers performing in time of war what is known as extra or special duty, such payment being prohibited by the "act for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States," approved April 26, 1898.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For one stenographer in the office of the Secretary of the Navy, from the date of the approval of this act and during the fiscal year 1899, at the rate of $1,800 per annum, $1,997.75, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

For the following additional clerks in the office of the Auditor for the War Department and in the office of the Auditor for the Navy Department for a period not exceeding from the date of the approval of this act until and including December 31, 1898, namely:

Office of Auditor for the War Department: For eight clerks of class 4; seventeen clerks of class 3; ten clerks of class 2; and thirty clerks of class 1; in all, $55,866.32, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Office of Auditor for the Navy Department: For two clerks of class 3; three clerks of class 2; four clerks of class 1; six clerks, at the rate of $1,000 per annum each; and four clerks, at the rate of $900 each; in all, $13,296.72, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

For fees of witnesses, $95,000.
For fees of jurors, $75,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to state that the bill may go to the Calendar, and my information is that inside of an hour the bill will be in print and in the bill room, and then I will ask unanimous consent to go into Committee of the Whole and take such other steps as are apt to consider the bill. I desire to pass it to-day, and will be ready to begin in an hour if the House is so that I can test its sense at that time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is the order now made?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the bill been printed?

Mr. SAYERS. It will be printed in an hour.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—BROWN AGAINST SWANSON.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that after the reading of the Journal to-morrow I will call up for consideration the contested-election case of Brown against Swanson, from the Fifth district of Virginia.

PHOTOGRAPHING GUNS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9553) in reference to photographing any guns which would give the strength of any fortification of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, corporation or association, to print, publish, photograph, or reproduce by any process whatsoever, so as to make public in any wise, any information giving the power of the guns or the strength of any fortification of the United States.

SEC. 2. That any person convicted of the offense charged in the first section shall be deemed guilty of a felony and punished by imprisonment for not more than ten years or by a fine of not more than $5,000, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCEWAN. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if it would be in order to amend by inserting a proviso that this shall apply only in time of war?

The SPEAKER. An amendment can only be offered after the bill is up for consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question now is on the amendment recommended by the committee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the sixth line the words "giving the power of the guns or" and insert in lieu thereof the words "as to."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That does not include the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCEWAN]?

The SPEAKER. No; it is on the amendment recommended by the committee.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to say that if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey should be adopted it would nullify the whole bill.

Mr. HULL. That amendment is not yet before the House.

Mr. MCEWAN. Is it open to me now, Mr. Speaker, to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can propose an amendment.

Mr. MCEWAN. I move to amend, in line 5, after the word "whatsoever," by inserting the words "during time of war."

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, this bill was drawn with the intention of having some secrecy thrown around the strength of our fortifications. As a case in point, gentlemen of the House will probably remember the notable case of Dreifuss in France. Captain Dreifuss was accused of having given away to Germany information as to the strength of one of the French fortifications, and for that reason he was exiled. But, so far as my investigation has gone, I am unable to find in any of our statutes any restrictions governing this point. It is now possible for a person to go upon a Government reservation used as a fortification and not only describe all the guns, but to take photographs or drawings and make them public without violating any law. And if the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey should prevail——

Mr. BAILEY. The gentleman from New York will permit me to make this inquiry: If all that he has just described were done with the purpose of delivering the information to a public enemy, and it were actually delivered, would it not be treason?

Mr. BENNETT. No doubt it would be; but it would be very difficult indeed to secure the necessary proof. Such a course of conduct is not treason under the Constitution in time of peace. Still, if such information were given to the naval intelligence bureaus of any country in the world, it could keep that information and use it in time of war as well as in time of peace. It seems to me that the provision embraced in this bill is not an unreasonable one; and I do hope it will be adopted.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to ask the gentleman again whether a newspaper would not be subject to the penalties of this bill if, in time of peace, its reporters should simply attempt to describe for the information of the people the condition of one of these fortifications?

Mr. BENNETT. In that case the editor of the newspaper or other parties concerned would be liable to be tried and put in jail.

Mr. BAILEY. That is what would take place if this bill should become a law; but I ask whether, if it becomes a law, it would not subject persons connected with newspapers to penalties for an innocent article describing the strength of fortifications in time of peace for the information of the American people?

Mr. BENNETT. If information were published in detail in a newspaper as to the absolute strength of the fortifications, it would be a violation of this bill. My impression is that it is the intention of the newspapers of the United States to be patriotic, and that as soon as the attention of their publishers is called to the fact that by publications of this kind they would be giving information which could be used against the United States they would probably refrain from such publications.

Mr. BAILEY. There is a great deal of force in that suggestion, so far as it applies to a time of war; but in time of peace it seems to me the people of this country are entitled to know what is being done in any department of the Government; and I do not believe that if a newspaper should publish in time of peace, for the information of the public, the condition or strength of our fortifications, the publishers should be subjected to penalties of this kind.

Mr. BENNETT. Under certain circumstances such information might just as well be given in time of peace as after actual declaration of war.

Mr. NORTHWAY. As I understand, this is intended to be a permanent statute?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, sir; that is the intention.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Now, in time of peace is it not entirely possible for persons representing any foreign country to learn the strength of our batteries, the precise condition of our fortifications, and so forth?

Mr. BENNETT. Of course it is.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then the bill will not prohibit anything; for if any other nation wants to learn in time of peace the strength of our fortifications, it can do so, can it not?

Mr. BENNETT. The intention of this bill is to prevent anything of that kind. I believe that the freedom heretofore existing in the United States in this respect should not be permitted to continue.

I yield now to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. Before the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] proceeds, I wish to inquire whether this bill is approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. I will say to the gentleman that it is approved by the Chief of Engineers, General Wilson; by the Chief of Ordnance, and by the Assistant Secretary of War, all of them giving it their cordial indorsement. Let me say further that if the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey shall prevail, the bill will be utterly worthless. If information as to our coast defenses be given out in time of peace, it is impossible to change those batteries in time of war so as to make the information of no value to our enemy. A battery is a permanent affair.

This bill as originally presented went further than the committee believed it should, by prohibiting the giving of information as to the guns. We believed there was no objection to giving information as to the size and power of guns being shipped to a battery, but if information as to the placing of a battery, its location, and other details, if maps or photographs or full descriptions of such works should be published, either in time of peace or war, it would give the enemy the very knowledge they would want.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it not true that it is customary to exchange information of this character between governments?

Mr. HULL. No; it is not true. All governments guard with the most jealous care——

Mr. DOCKERY. I mean in time of peace.

Mr. HULL. In time of peace and war both, the fortifications and everything connected with the defense of the nation.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that Captain Dreyfus was sent to prison for life for giving just such information in time of peace.

Mr. FISCHER. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit a question? I understand this bill provides that there shall be no photographs made for the purpose of disclosing the strength of fortifications?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. FISCHER. Why not insert the word "weakness?" That happens to be the case with most of our fortifications.

Mr. HULL. If we have no fortifications, then we do not care. In fact, it is of benefit to the country to have attention called to such a state. If we have one gun, it is so much strength. If we have none, there is nothing to disclose. Now I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McEWAN].

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, one of the serious evils of a war is the readiness to pass legislation which we would not consider for one moment in time of peace, urged thereto by representations of its absolute necessity and the need of greatest haste. This makes the timid legislator forget the need of deliberation and accept any bill offered with the statement that it is made urgent by the war. He fears he will be considered unpatriotic if he hesitates. I have, therefore, several times since the war began run the risk of incurring the displeasure and perhaps the suspicion of this country as to my patriotism by opposing some of this kind of legislation and asking for becoming consideration—notably the issue of bonds, and yesterday in the case of granting registry to two vessels of foreign build, which gave to the owners of those vessels advantages which other equally good citizens do not enjoy, and again giving power to public officers, even if they be military officers, to purchase large quantities of supplies without competition. Now, to-day comes up another bill, which I submit has not received sufficient consideration, as can be readily seen from the crude form in which it is drawn, and which we are asked to pass at once and offhand.

Had the gentleman who introduced this bill drawn it in accordance with the few remarks that he made a few moments ago, I should not have had anything whatever to say about it; but I submit that this has not received any consideration whatever. If adopted, it would abridge the liberty of the press and even the liberty of speech. We know that almost from the time that history was first written, from the time there has been any printing at all in magazines, illustrated papers, or newspapers of any kind, it has been the custom to describe fortifications of all countries as among the interesting features in describing countries.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the gentleman from New Jersey name one?

Mr. McEWAN. Yes; I will name one—Morro Castle.

Mr. BENNETT. I will say to the gentleman that it would be necessary for them to give a detailed account of the strength of a fortification in order to violate the law.

Mr. McEWAN. If the gentleman puts that in as an amendment, I will, with the consent of the House, withdraw my amendment. Again I would ask how, under the wording of this law, can it be possible for students at West Point or at Annapolis, without violation of the law, to make any drawings whatever of these fortifications, or of any professor to tell of their strength? How can engineering go on as a profession if there is to be any such law as this? Do I hear some person say that the students have no business to know about the specifications for engineering?

Mr. MAHON. No one has any business to give information to the enemy.

Mr. McEWAN. This does not say anything about giving it to the enemy. It says that there shall be no printing, publishing, photographing, or reproducing by any process whatsoever, so as to make public in any wise any information as to the strength of any fortification of the United States.

Now, is it not a fact that in every magazine that you have ever read in which this or any other country or section is described there have been descriptions in a general way of fortifications as a part of the make-up of a country about which we have been reading? I submit that this bill is entirely too drastic and that it ought to be defeated or recommitted.

Mr. HULL. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this provision is not drastic enough. I should have been glad if this committee had reported a provision that the so-called contract work which is carried on in the fortifications of the United States should be abolished. I am told by the Chief of Engineers that when plans for fortifications for our harbors are made, for their construction, they are open to public competition. They are laid out before any person who chooses to come in and be a bidder. He can carry away copies of those plans, can know exactly where the mines and torpedoes are located. Now, the time of peace is the time when foreign countries prepare for war, and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey will not pass, because the dangers come to us not only in time of war, when we are more vigilant and when we watch these things, but more especially in time of peace, when we are off our guard.

I am told that the New York Herald a short time ago published a complete description of all the fortifications in New York Harbor, spread it broadcast to the world, so that the pilot of a hostile fleet could carry his ships in safety through all of the obstructions of the New York Harbor without any danger. Yet this poor wretch Downing committed suicide because he had been caught furnishing to the Spanish the location of our coal fleet. It seems to me that we have been altogether too free in giving the public information of the affairs of this country that for our own safety ought to be kept quiet; and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey will not carry and that the original bill will pass.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this bill ought to pass. It is not only too severe in the punishment which it prescribes, but it is too broad in its scope. In my judgment this House can not afford to put itself upon record as in favor of any such a proposition. Let me call the attention of members to its provisions:

> It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, corporation, or association to print, publish, photograph, or reproduce by any process whatever, so as to make public in any wise, any information—
>
> Any information!—
> as to the strength of any fortification of the United States.

If the bill should become law, a newspaper that should print a statement to the effect that a thousand men had been sent to a particular fortification in the United States, its publishers could be arraigned and punished, either by imprisonment in the penitentiary for ten years or by a fine of $25,000, or both, at the discretion of a Federal judge.

The Secretary of War has already sufficient authority to exclude whomsoever he may from our fortifications. A proper and vigilant exercise of such power will, in my judgment, effectually accomplish the object of this bill.

The danger is now that, because we are in the midst of war, we may increase the military power of the country, not only in time of war but in time of peace, and also adopt military methods of administration. The bill will not receive my vote.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to ask the gentleman whether it would not be in the same line with this bill to make it an offense for any newspaper to publish the strength of any army?

Mr. SAYERS. This is limited to fortifications.

Mr. BROWN. Would it not be in the same line to propose that?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes; you might as well do that.

Mr. BROWN. It appears to me that you might as well do that.

Mr. SAYERS. The bill ought to be defeated.

Mr. HULL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. It does seem to me that if there is any common-sense proposition which has been submitted to the House since the beginning of this war it is the bill which is now under consideration. As I understand it, this bill only prohibits the giving out of information as to fortifications and their strength. Now, is not that right? Have we been at peace so long that we can not now know how to conduct the war? Why, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to give to the enemy all our secrets, if we are going to give to the enemy descriptions of our forts, of our Navy, of our Army, then we are putting ourselves at the greatest disadvantage. Have we not an example of it before us now? Everybody knows where the American fleet is, but nobody knows where the Spanish fleet is. It would be of great importance to us if we knew where that fleet is.

But those who have control of the affairs of Spain are wise enough to keep that secret which, in order to conduct a successful war, ought to be kept secret. I do not believe that the construction placed upon this bill by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] could possibly be upheld by any court.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. Suppose a 10-inch gun should be sent to Galveston, in my own State, to be put in a fortification there, and one of the papers should publish the fact that such a gun had arrived and was being put there. Would not the publishers be subject to the penalty prescribed in this bill?

Mr. HAY. Certainly not.

Mr. SAYERS. Why not?

Mr. HAY. Because that is a public matter that everybody would know everything about, and it would not come under the scope of this bill. Why, who could not tell that a 10-inch gun was being transported from one end of this country to the other?

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HAY. I can not answer two questions at once.

Mr. SIMPSON. The bill says:

So as to make public in any wise any information.

Mr. HAY. Any information about what?

Mr. SIMPSON. About the guns or fort.

Mr. HULL. No; the provision with reference to guns was stricken out.

Mr. SIMPSON. Well, as to the strength of a fortification.

Mr. HAY. About the strength of the fort.

Mr. SIMPSON. Do not the guns go to make up the strength of a fortification?

Mr. HAY. They do not go to make up the description of a fort and the different parts of it, so that the enemy could know where to make his attack. I say that this is a common-sense proposition. I say that it is one that ought to be supported, and it does seem to me to be a curious fact that no bill can be reported here which looks to the real defense of the country and to the real purpose of defeating the foe with whom we are contending, without adverse criticism being made, and, in my humble judgment, that sort of criticism which ought to have no weight with the members of the House.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HULL. How much time do you desire?

Mr. DOCKERY. Two or three minutes.

Mr. HULL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, at the risk of bringing myself within the purview of the criticism just pronounced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], I desire to dissent from the provisions of this bill. Something has been said about the present location of the Spanish fleet, or rather about the absence of information of its whereabouts, while it is alleged that we are all advised of the whereabouts of the American fleet. In view of the existing restrictions placed on information relating to the movements of our fleet by the Navy Department, no gentleman on this floor has now any information as to the location of the American fleet.

But, coming to this bill, I want to say that its general purpose, in my judgment, is a good one, that the number of guns in a fortification and the details of its surroundings, and such information as may be of value to an enemy should not be made public during a time of war. But the trouble with the committee is that it has so framed the bill as to enlarge its scope and bring within its ban innocent publishers of news, because the bill says that if you print "any information" in reference to the strength of the fortifications of the United States you do so under the menace of the second provision, which carries rigorous pains and penalties. Now, we all desire to secure proper secrecy in respect to our fortifications, and I think it possible to offer an amendment that will accomplish this purpose.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman accept this amendment: Insert, after the word "information," in line 6, the words "with the consent of the Secretary of War?"

Mr. BLAND. That would make the Secretary of War censor of the whole public press.

Mr. HULL. Not at all. It would make him the custodian of public defense.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not think that amendment would answer the purpose, because, as suggested by my colleague, that places a power in the Secretary of War that he should not have, either in peace or war.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is obvious, and we are all agreed as to it; but I do not believe that in the hurry of this debate we can perfect the bill as it should be perfected. We do not want to give to the enemy the strength of our fortifications, we do not wish to have them photographed, and do not desire any information as to fortifications made public that would embarrass the Government in its military or naval operations; but this bill is "wide open" and puts every publisher in the United States under its ban. I think the committee ought to consent to recommit the bill and then reconstruct it along a line that will accomplish the purpose they seek and yet not put all the newspapers of the United States at the peril of fines and imprisonment.

Mr. BLAND. I would like a few minutes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] that so far as their contention is concerned—that they could have no information as to the guns—that is not true, clearly, because the words "giving the power of the guns" is stricken out of the bill. But so far as the fortifications themselves are concerned, if you throw it open so that in time of peace or war the newspapers can give full and detailed descriptions in the papers of the coast defenses, you might just as well not pass the bill at all. Of course there is known, in a general way, in all countries, just where the fortifications are; but the detailed information is not given; and of course we all admit that there must be a reasonable construction of statutes.

This bill has the indorsement of every man connected with the War Department possessing any information whatever on the question of coast defense; and, to my mind, to amend it so as to allow newspapers in the course of general information to write articles and give full information as to the batteries would defeat the very object of the bill. I know that we are all sensitive about the idea of curtailing the power of the press, and properly so. We ought to be. The press may have done some harm by too much enterprise, but great good as a whole. But there are certain lines, I believe, that the reputable newspapers of the United States will recognize should be followed out by the United States, even in giving information of any kind connected with our coast defense. Every other nation on earth has safeguards around their fortifications, every one of them. We have absolutely none. In most of the great nations the penalty is much more severe than in this bill. There are some fortifications that we all know about. Morro Castle has been referred to by the gentleman from New Jersey. We know all about Morro Castle and about the power of the guns.

Mr. McCLELLAN. It is obsolete.

Mr. HULL. Absolutely. Every ship that goes in and out of the harbor of Havana knows all about Morro Castle, but the modern shore defense is now hidden from view. Every man who goes up and down this Potomac River knows there are defenses, but does not know where they are, and of all the gentlemen in this House who have gone up and down the river to Fortress Monroe few if any have any information about the batteries except what they have received from the public press, and we are depending upon these batteries in time of war. If we gave out information as to the place of the batteries and descriptions of location of the guns, you might as well have them make photographs and maps, as the descriptions would be accurate enough to enable experts to draw a map accurate enough for all purposes.

Mr. GREENE. I want to say I am in sympathy with the general purpose of the bill; but does not the number and size of its guns at least enter into the strength of the fortification? Now, then, where this bill provides it shall be punishable to give out "any information," would not the simple announcement of the shipment of a gun and the size of a gun be a violation of the law? Because that is simply a reference to the strength of the fort, as the strength of the fort depends upon the number and size of its guns.

Mr. HULL. I think not. I do not believe the words "any information as to" ought to be stricken out.

I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I dare say that there is not a man on this floor who is disposed to deny to the Government of the United States in this emergency any protection which may be required in order to secure the success of her arms. But my judgment is, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is dangerous in its provisions. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, dwells upon the importance of preventing the giving out of detailed information. Why, we can all testify to the impropriety of that; but this bill provides that "any information" given out shall subject the publisher to the penalty named in this act. It places every newspaper in this country at the peril of the enemy of that paper, and not the enemy of the United States. I think there might be a better method than is provided in this bill.

I think newspaper publishers would rather submit to a severe censorship even than the provisions of this bill, and it would be safer in its operation. There is no limit placed upon the bill. "Any information" that may be given out—and who is to be the judge? I think the bill, as has been suggested, better be revised.

Mr. HULL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the difficulty in the matter lies in this. We are in war and we want to provide proper restrictions against the furnishing of information to the other side. That is the object of the bill. Now, we all agree upon the proposition that in time of war all of this information ought to be kept from the enemy. Nobody dissents from that. The trouble comes in that part of the bill where it undertakes to punish those that furnish information, and, as is emphasized here, "any information" in regard to the matter.

In considering the bill in my own mind, it operates upon me in this way: Where will you put the limit? How much shall be published and how little shall be published? It is useless to say that you limit the bill in its operation in time of peace, for upon the very first suggestion of war or the probabilities of war, this very information which has been procured in the time of peace will be obtained without any restriction whatever. Now, I concede the force of the suggestion that has been made, that in time of peace, when there is no agitation or probability of war, the bill is severe, but at the present time I think we had better let it go with the positive prohibition of any information at all, until peace is restored. Then we can revise the matter in a shape that will be satisfactory to all.

But I undertake to say, in conclusion, that I do not know a member on this floor—and I concede to them the utmost intelligence—that can draw that bill and tell where you shall say this information shall stop, what information may be published and what may not. I voted for this bill with the idea that in time of peace, as we have had for a number of years, I would modify the provisions of the bill; but in time of war I should most heartily support the present bill. At the present time they are photographing our forts and photographing our guns, and there is no more trouble in obtaining information of the status of our forts and guns for the Spanish Government than there is for the United States to obtain it itself. Therefore I support the bill.

Mr. HULL. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest objections to this bill is that it is unconstitutional. The Constitution provides, Article I, that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or of the rights of the people peaceably to assemble," etc.

Now, I take it this bill means more than simply to print. It says "to publish." I do not suppose under this prohibition a Government officer could send information to Congress describing fortifications, for the bill makes no exceptions. Information detailing the situation of fortifications and asking for appropriations for it would come under the prohibition of the bill, and so would debate upon it in the House, except for the provision as to the freedom of debate here.

All publication, without exception, no matter whether it is printed or proclaimed or how. And as to what? As to the strength of any fortifications in the United States. Now, what constitutes the strength of a fortification of the United States? There is no definition of it; it is vague and uncertain. Does it mean the number of guns? Does it mean the number of soldiers? Does it mean whether that fortification is constructed of certain materials, or of certain other material? What does it mean? Why, my friend from Tennessee [Mr. COX] says he does not know. He does not believe a bill of this kind can be drawn intelligibly. According to his idea the whole of it is to be left to judicial interpretation. No man with safety can talk about the strength of a fortification, that a certain number of soldiers is going to a certain fort, or a certain supply of arms is to be sent to such a fortification, without laying himself liable to arrest under judicial construction of this bill. And it is made a felony; the punishment is very severe.

It does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that when a bill, evidently contravening that portion of the Constitution which was designed to secure to our citizens freedom of speech and freedom of the press is presented here, it should be drawn with more care than this bill has received. It may be, sir, that in a Government like ours the guaranties of freedom of speech and of the press are connected with certain disabilities. And yet, sir, the fact that our citizens have been endowed with freedom of speech and of the press, for the purpose of general information and intelligence, makes us the proudest, the most powerful, and the most intelligent people on the globe.

Mr. Speaker, we must take these rights with the disabilities necessarily attending them. And while I would go as far as anyone in providing penalties for the punishment of anyone who may go about a fortification without the permission of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, or whatever authority may have those fortifications in charge, and publish a detailed description of those fortifications so as to give information to the enemy, while such an offense should be made penal, I would reach the result in some sensible, substantial manner which would conform to the principles of constitutional liberty—the freedom of speech and of the press. This bill opens the door not only to legitimate prosecutions, but to illegitimate prosecutions—to spite work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I would have been glad to occupy more time; but I have made my points as well as I could in the limited time allowed.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will not the gentleman consent to let this bill go back to the committee to be reconstructed?

Mr. HULL. I think the House might just as well vote the bill up or down now, because if we are going to leave the door wide open, it can be done now.

Mr. BLAND. I think that the committee might frame a bill which would substantially accomplish the purpose in view without flying in the face of the principles of American freedom. We do not want to convert ourselves into slaves in order to free somebody else.

Mr. HULL. I have heard a great deal of talk in the past about "converting ourselves into slaves." There is nothing in this bill that will make a "slave" of my friend from Missouri, if it becomes a law. The bill is one which was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT]; which was referred to the War Department for consideration; which passed there from one bureau to another; which received the approval of the Chief of Engineers, the Chief of Ordnance, and the Assistant Secretary of War, and was then sent back to the committee with the request that we present it to the House and try to have it adopted as a measure of great importance to the Government.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he is aware that the agitation of coast defense by the exposition of the weakness of our fortifications through the press continuously for ten years was necessary to bring about the construction of any fortifications anywhere. Without that agitation we never would have had any system of fortifications.

Mr. HULL. I do not think this bill will affect in any way any agitation as to the places where there is no proper defense. I think that will continue and should continue until we are fully protected.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that every improvement in the fortifications of the United States has been brought about by the press calling attention of Congress repeatedly to the fact that there were no fortifications at certain points needing defense.

Mr. HULL. I am aware that the press has been very potential, and it no doubt will continue so.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As early as 1878 Samuel J. Tilden wrote a letter in which he called attention to the weakness of the coast defenses of the United States. His letter, addressed to the American Congress, and copious press comments which followed, conveyed the appalling information that at that time more than one city on our Atlantic and Pacific coasts could have been taken by a single hostile man-of-war. Under this bill, it would be as unlawful for the press to call attention to the defenselessness of a poorly fortified city, with a view to securing additional fortifications, as to furnish a hostile force, by newspaper publications, valuable information as to the strength of fortifications. You propose to hamper the power of the press, so that it will be disabled not only from improperly advertising the details of methods used in fortifications, but also from agitating the necessity of works of defense at points where weakness exists. I believe that this bill, modified, might be a good——

Mr. HULL. I supposed the gentleman wanted to ask a question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I ask whether the weakness of fortified towns, or the defenselessness of those which should be fortified, could be dwelt upon by the press under this bill?

Mr. HULL. This bill would simply make it an offense to give out information as to the strength of our batteries already established. It would have nothing to do with discussing the fact that we are inadequately fortified——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Would not such discussion pertain to the strength of our fortifications?

Mr. HULL. The bill would have nothing to do with the discussion of the fact that we were at particular points inadequately fortified. It would have absolutely nothing to do with the discussion of the necessity of coast defenses. It would only have to do with the giving out of detailed information as to the emplacements and strength of the batteries which may be erected.

A MEMBER. It does not say so.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then the gentleman from Iowa says, as I understand him, that the bill will only prohibit giving any information as to the impregnable defenses?

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; if defenses were impregnable, it would be a different thing. I said nothing about "impregnable." Take the case of other great nations and their impregnable defenses. For instance, as to Gibraltar; you can not get the details of any part of the fortifications there. No newspaper can send its correspondent there and obtain such information.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman whether the War Department can not to-day issue orders absolutely controlling access to our fortifications?

Mr. HULL. It may issue such orders——

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I mean in time of war.

Mr. HULL. But it would be impossible to punish a man for giving out information.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman whether a mere general order or regulation enforced by the War Department against giving this information as to its fortifications would not avail?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs a question, which was suggested by a remark of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. He has called attention to the fact that the Constitution of the United States prohibits Congress from passing any law abridging the freedom of the press; and lays stress upon the argument that Congress can not pass a law, under the Constitution, prohibiting a newspaper from publishing any fact. Now, that presents to my mind this question: Congress can, of course, pass a law prohibiting the dissemination through the mails of newspapers, periodicals, or magazines of any character which publish certain classes of advertisements for instance, lottery advertisements.

But while Congress can prohibit the dissemination of such matter through the mails, is it, as a matter of fact, true that Congress can prohibit the newspapers from publishing anything? While we can, as a Congress, having full power over the mails of the United States, prohibit the transportation through the mails of certain classes of publications, can Congress undertake to prohibit, under the constitutional provision, a newspaper from publishing any advertisement it sees fit to accept, and would not such a prohibition be a restriction of the freedom of the press?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I think the assumption that the bill goes as far as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and others seem to think is an entirely mistaken assumption. The bill provides:

> That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, corporation, or association to print, publish, photograph, or reproduce by any process whatsoever, so as to make public in any wise, any information as to the strength of any fortification of the United States.

I do not believe the legal construction of the bill, or a proper construction, or even a reasonable construction of it, would apply to the ordinary discussion of such fortifications. It simply prohibits a published description of them which might be used by an enemy and make the fortifications less effective. It is intended to stop or prevent the detailed description to the world of the location of guns and the strength of our fortifications, which are matters that manifestly ought not to be in the hands of a public enemy.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to say that the Secretary of War has indorsed this bill?

Mr. HULL. I made that statement.

Mr. SIMPSON. It does not so appear, either in the bill or the report. The report says that the bill is "respectfully returned to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, inviting attention to the accompanying reports of the Chief of Engineers and the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army," and signed by Mr. Meiklejohn, Assistant Secretary of War.

It does not seem from this statement that the Secretary of War has indorsed the bill.

Mr. HULL. The cordial indorsement given to the bill by the two chiefs of the bureaus, when returned by the Secretary of War, calling especial attention to bureau reports in that way, has always been taken as an indorsement on the part of the Secretary.

Mr. SIMPSON. It seems to be a very weak indorsement. He simply refers you to what the chiefs of these bureaus have said in reference to the matter.

Mr. HULL. Nevertheless it has always been considered as an indorsement, as the gentleman will find on an investigation of the matter.

But, Mr. Speaker, so far as I am individually concerned—I am not speaking now for the Committee on Military Affairs, but only for myself—I have no objection to putting into the bill, if desired, the words "except by authority of the Secretary of War." That will cover the objections urged against the form of the bill.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I would like, if the gentleman will allow me, about three minutes on this bill.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Before the gentleman yields, I would like permission to ask him a question.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I noticed in the statement of the gentleman made a few moments ago that this bill does not prohibit "a discussion" of the subject of fortifications. Now, I would like to suggest to the gentleman that the law of "publication" is not confined to a mere written description or declaration, but may be established by an utterance or a discussion between two or more persons; which would be, in accordance with the decisions of the courts heretofore, a legal publication of the statement, and the bill would seem to prohibit such a discussion as that, and subject such persons to all the legal pains and penalties prescribed.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will permit me, it seems to me that the bill is clear on that point. It prohibits a publication in the ordinarily accepted sense of the word——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Yes; I understand that. But a "publication" may be an oral utterance as well as a printed publication.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky (continuing). And I would ask the chairman of the committee where, in the history of jurisprudence, there has been a different construction placed upon the law of publication?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question, with his consent.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to ask if the rules and regulations governing our coast defenses and fortifications do not now prohibit unauthorized persons to go about and examine and photograph them in detail except under written permission from the officials in authority?

Mr. HULL. That is correct, but there is no punishment for a violation of that rule.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then why not reach the point you have in view by permitting officers in charge of fortifications to prescribe such punishment as may prevent an infraction of that rule?

And before the gentleman answers that question I would like to make another suggestion as to how in the world we can derive any substantial benefit from prohibiting the publication of what anybody seems to have a right to go and get for himself. So long as it is possible to get the information, so long as a citizen—anybody—may go and obtain the information, it may just as well be public as not. For that reason I do not see any special advantage that the bill affords as a protection.

Mr. HULL. I think the gentleman will agree with me that if the War Department in time of war should catch a man making photographs they might possibly try him under martial law, but in time of peace they could not, and you have no restrictions whatever. A penalty for a violation of a mere regulation would be dangerous. You can not tell what a regulation may be. You may have a regulation forbidding a thing, but if there is no penalty attached to it your regulation is of no benefit whatever.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But why could not all this be accomplished by preventing unauthorized persons taking these photographs? I do not understand where any good can be derived from prohibiting the publication in our newspapers of facts which any unauthorized individual may go and secure. Take myself, for instance. If I am going about these fortifications and I secure this information, it is entirely immaterial that I am prevented from publishing it in a newspaper. If I am an agent of Spain, I can go and send a cipher message and tell them all about it. If I get the information, it may just as well be published as not.

Mr. HULL. I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RIDGELY].

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the committee to what is, to my mind, an omission that is of greater importance in carrying out the purposes of this bill than all contained in the bill. It is a common practice, and, I believe, the universal practice of this Government, to let out by contract the construction of nearly if not quite all of our fortifications, and to furnish specifications in detail to the contractor. By this means we leave open a possibility by which any alert, vigilant, foreign government may get the absolute drawings of every fortification, and thereby, with the aid of engineers, determine exactly the shape, form, and strength of any and every fortification which we now have or which we may hereafter build, unless this committee will permit an amendment which will close this door.

I wish to ask if the committee object to an amendment that will from this time on forbid the Government letting out by contract the construction of fortifications, and will make it the duty of the officers to construct these fortifications under Government supervision, and keep the specifications and other information as a state secret? I have such an amendment prepared, and I want to know if the committee are willing that it shall become a part of this bill?

Mr. HULL. I have no objection.

Mr. RIDGELY. Then I offer it as an amendment.

Mr. HULL. There is an amendment now pending.

Mr. RIDGELY. I will read the amendment in my time, and hope it may come up later:

That hereafter no contract shall be let for the construction of fortifications, but all construction of fortifications shall be done by the Government, and all plans and specifications kept as a secret by the Government.

I will offer that when the proper time comes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned, I have only the common interest in this bill that every other citizen has. Whether it shall be voted up or down is for the House to determine. It was introduced by Mr. BENNETT of New York, and is in the right direction. I simply want to say that whatever is done in this line should be done now. The bill is before the House, and there is no reason why it should not be voted up or down this morning.

I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CONNOLLY. Would it be in order now to move to recommit the bill to the committee?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order after the bill has been ordered to a third reading. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCEWAN], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 1, after the word "whatsoever," insert "during a time of war."

The amendment was rejected.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CONNOLLY. I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BENNETT) there were—ayes 82, noes 54.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, 33 members—not a sufficient number—rising in support of the demand.

Accordingly the bill was ordered to be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 9210) granting an increase of pension to George H. Baldwin, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SHOUP, and Mr. MITCHELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

S. R. 167. Joint resolution ratifying and confirming certain temporary appointments of officers of the Navy; in which the concurrence of the House was requested;

S. 4607. A bill providing for the payment and maintenance of volunteers during the interval between their enrollment and muster into the United States service, and for other purposes; and

S. 4414. A bill granting a pension to Georgia H. Berry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 1288. An act for the relief of Samuel McKee; and

H. Res. 237. Joint resolution appointing four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the payment of pensions, and for other objects, for the fiscal year 1898, and for other purposes, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill, to close general debate, and to read the bill under the five-minute rule for amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, that general debate be now closed, and the bill be read by sections for amendments. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

PENSIONS.

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $8,070,872.46: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same may be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount paid to each of the several classes of pensioners shall be accounted for separately.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill whether this $8,000,000 item is for the naval pensions only, or for a deficiency in all classes of pensions?

Mr. CANNON. I could not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I asked if the $8,000,000 item included the invalid pensions and general pension list as well as the naval pensions?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What proportion of it is for invalid pensions, and what proportion for naval pensions?

Mr. CANNON. I can not tell the gentleman exactly; but it is substantially all for invalid pensions.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Substantially all for invalid pensions?

Mr. CANNON. It is the usual form of making appropriations for pensions. It is substantially all for invalid pensions.

Mr. MCMILLIN. So that there was substantially an eight-million-dollar deficiency for invalid pensions?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. That amount was expected at the time the last appropriation was made?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I remember that it was stated at the time the appropriation would be inadequate. What does this make the total appropriations for pensions?

Mr. CANNON. In round numbers, $148,000,000 for the current year. The gentleman will recollect that the appropriations for the current year were made at the last session of the last Congress. Now, the gentleman has in mind, I take it, what was said about the appropriation for pensions the coming year. A deficiency was prophesied then, and I think the prophecy will——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will be fulfilled.

Mr. CANNON. Will be fulfilled. That is my judgment; but that matter will not be ascertained until the next session of Congress, commencing on the 1st of December next.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, before making the motion that the committee rise and report this bill with a favorable recommendation, it is proper for me to state that this bill, with the exception of the items for the Departments of Justice and Pensions, is purely a bill made necessary by the present war.

Mr. DOCKERY. I am glad the gentleman made that statement, and I desire the RECORD to show that the additional force in the Treasury Department, in the offices of the Auditors for the War and Navy Departments, were made necessary by the existing war.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; and from no other standpoint.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; from no other standpoint.

Mr. CANNON. After full investigation by the committee in charge of deficiencies with respect to the various items that would come before the various subcommittees having information touching all those matters, your committee was unanimous in believing that these appropriations were absolutely necessary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. PAYNE having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10378, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WAGON AND MOTOR BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT ST. CHARLES, MO.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4206) extending the time for the construction of a wagon and motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing the construction of a wagon and motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as fixed by an act approved June 3, 1896, be extended to one year from June 3, 1898, and that the time for completing said bridge as fixed by the act aforesaid be extended to June 3, 1902.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House amendment to the Senate bill be adopted.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 9, after the word "hundred," strike out "and two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF CURRENCY BILL.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, the supply of House bill 10289 has been exhausted, and I ask unanimous consent for a reprint. That is the currency bill reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman when he is going to call up that bill?

Mr. DALZELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a favorable recommendation, a draft of a bill for authorizing the appointment of a Second Assistant Secretary of War—to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL. I present a petition of the Military Association of the City of Norfolk, Va., praying that the navy-yard at that place be selected as a Government dockyard. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NORFOLK, VA., May 14, 1898.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

The Military Association of the City of Norfolk, composed of veterans of the Confederate and Union armies and navies, representing what they know to be the wishes of the people of this community and its vicinity, respectfully represent that the Norfolk Navy-Yard, from its geographical position on the Atlantic coast, is admirably suited for the Government dockyard, possessing advantages unequaled by any other location.

It was recommended by Admiral Vernon to the British Government in colonial days, after a careful survey of the eastern coast of North America, as the best harbor for the dockyard.

It was used as a rendezvous of the British navy during the Revolution.

President Washington rented a shipyard on the present site for the construction of one of the six frigates authorized to be built during his Administration, and 16 acres of the present yard was originally purchased for $12,000 by President Adams, under the act of Congress February 25, 1799, for the building of six 74-gun ships.

From that day to this it has been the favorite station of the Government for the building, repairing, and fitting out of ships of war.

It is situated on the southern branch of the Elizabeth River above the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth.

It is defended by Fortress Monroe, and is accessible to the waters of North Carolina by two canals.

The Capes of Virginia, its ocean gateway, is open at all seasons and all stages of the tides to the largest ships.

It is in a latitude free from obstructing frosts in winter and exempt from the malignant fevers of more Southern ports.

Its climate enables outdoor work at all times of the year, and is especially desirable in the rigging of ships.

Up to a very recent date its channel has been kept of sufficient depth and width to enable the arrival and departure of vessels at all hours of the day and night.

Notwithstanding the fact that the channel from Hampton Roads to the navy-yard is, with the exception of a few reaches, 700 hundred feet wide and 25 feet deep at ordinary low tide (which, however, is decreased by the prevalence of southwesterly winds), it is considered imprudent to bring the heavy cruisers and battle ships up to the navy-yard, although the exigencies of the Navy Department demand it.

As in the progress of shipbuilding, vessels are every year increasing in size and draft of water, both for the naval and commercial marine, and as it is impetatively necessary for the public good that the vessels of the American Navy should be able at all times to enter and depart from this important station in perfect safety and without waiting for the tide, your memorialists therefore pray that Congress will appropriate the necessary amount to widen the channel continuously from Hampton Roads to the navy-yard to not less than 450 feet in width, including the removal of Lamberts Point shoal, and to deepen the channel to 28 feet at ordinary low tide.

Your memorialists would suggest that the phenomenal growth of the commerce of the port of Norfolk in the last five years, exceeding in percentage that of any port on the Atlantic or Pacific Ocean, warrants some consideration in making this expenditure, the Pocahontas steam coal trade alone having brought to Norfolk in the last twelve months some 2,000 heavy seagoing vessels, including 500 foreign steamships calling for American coals for fuel in crossing the Atlantic.

They further represent that in response to the public resolution No. 33, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, the Secretary of War transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives a letter dated March 25, 1896, from the Acting Chief of Engineers, inclosing a copy of estimate from Hampton Roads to the United States navy-yard, 150 yards in width and 28 feet in depth at mean low tide, which estimate placed the amount necessary to be excavated at 2,000,000 cubic yards of material, scow measurement, costing, at 18 cents per cubic yard, $360,000.

By reference to the annual report of the Chief of Engineers, dated September 30, 1897, it appears that in the channel from Hampton Roads and in the inner harbor of Norfolk and Portsmouth $92,594.43 has been expended, and the operations under this expenditure have decreased the amount necessary for the channel-way 150 yards wide and 28 feet deep at mean low tide, especially in the reach between Seawells Point and Bushs Bluff.

Your memorialists would call attention to the fact that there has been expended since the foundation of the Government upon this navy-yard up to the civil war —— millions of dollars, and since —— millions of dollars, and that it now possesses machine shops in many respects second to none at any navy-yard in the United States, for the construction and repairing of iron or steel ships of war; that while the dry docks are unfortunately too small for the reception of the largest cruisers and battle ships, yet the repairs incident to an engagement between the American fleet and that of the enemy would in few cases absolutely require the docking of the ship, as her bottom could be examined and cleaned by divers in the deeper reaches of Norfolk Harbor, where there is found from 30 to 35 feet of water. The repairs to the interior and upper works of the ship, and especially to the machinery, could be made with equal dispatch and efficiency, as in any other public or private ship yard in the country, while the neighboring shipbuilding plant at Newport News will afford in an emergency dockage for our largest ships.

Hampton Roads has been from the commencement of our Government our great naval rendezvous and to her sheltering waters our disabled fleets would come after any probable engagement in the present war. To subject them after reaching port to the necessity of going to sea again to encounter the elements in their crippled condition to reach League Island, Brooklyn Navy-Yard, the Boston Navy-Yard or that of Portsmouth, N. H., would be unwise, expensive, and possibly perilous.

Your memorialists are prepared to furnish to the Government reliable contractors who will remove the 2,000,000 cubic yards of material, which the United States engineer has reported would have to be removed, in three working months from the time the contract was given out. The operation requires ten first-class dredges with an aggregate scow-plant capacity of about 30,000 cubic yards. This large plant has been secured by the patriotic cooperation of a number of the largest dredging concerns on the Atlantic Coast. The organization whose cooperation we have secured is prepared to undertake the work and secure its entire completion in three months from the day of the beginning of the work and to carry on the work so as to complete one-third of the width of the channel of 150 feet during each month; so that in thirty days after the contract is awarded any cruiser or battle ship can go to the yard, with the assistance of the Government tug to keep her in the channel way.

To secure this dispatch your memorialists would state that the Secretary of War should have authority to give work out after ten days' notice, and our association binds itself and will give security through its officers for the faithful discharge of its obligation. That if the channel be so located within the width of the present improvement as to escape the removal of all located hard excavation; if the dumping grounds be such as to permit convenient and free access of scows at all stages of the tide; the work be carried on, at the discretion of the contractors, during Sundays and legal holidays and through as many hours each day as the contractors elect, and the supervision of the work on the part of the Government be such as to prevent any loss of working time to the contractors, the work would be undertaken and completed in three months, at the rate of 16 cents per cubic yard, scow measurement, instead of 18 cents, as estimated by the United States engineer in charge, or upon an estimate of 2,000,000 cubic yards, at a contract cost of $320,000, instead of $360,000, as estimated by the United States engineer.

Your memorialists would state that this syndicate of dredging companies has been formed under the auspices of the American Dredging Company of Philadelphia. L. Y. Schermerhorn, president, whose ability to fully and satisfactorily carry out all contracts undertaken will be indorsed by Gen. William P. Craighill and Gen. John M. Wilson, both of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, and Mr. M. T. Endicott, in charge of the Bureau of Yards and Docks of the United States Navy.

Your memorialists would represent to your honorable bodies that they consider this tender on the part of the American Dredging Company liberal under the circumstances, as the months during which the work would be in progress are those which require the large dredging plant assembled to be fully protected against the ravages of the teredo, which would be a considerable item of expense, and after the plant has incurred the expense of a long sea trip to and from the site of the work.

In conclusion, your memorialists, animated by a patriotic desire to contribute in every possible way to the success of their flag in the present war against Spain, are willing to take the responsibility of underwriting financially the leading dredging companies of the Atlantic Coast, to obtain for our Government the opportunity of securing the important work, at a cost not much greater than that of a large collier or of the resulting damages to one of our large ships from running upon some unseen obstruction in our rivers and harbors.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8349) granting additional powers to railroad companies created by laws of the United States and operating lines in the Indian Territory, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1580) granting an increase of pension to Cutler D. Sanborn, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2524) for the protection of birds, preservation of game, and for the prevention of its sale during certain closed seasons in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 334) granting an honorable discharge to Samuel Johnston, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

EXTENSION OF HIGHWAY IN FLANDREAU, S. DAK.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9604) to grant a right of way to the village of Flandreau, S. Dak., to report it without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STENOGRAPHER FOR INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. CULLOM on the 17th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be authorized to employ a stenographer to report hearings before said committee during the present session of Congress, and that the stenographer employed to report the hearings on Senate bill No. 3354, to amend "An act to regulate commerce," be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

COMPILATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit from the Committee on Finance a report in compliance with the resolution of the 15th of May. It is a compilation of the internal-revenue laws of 1864, 1866, 1867, and 1872; in other words, embodying the internal-revenue laws up to 1873. I ask that the report be printed, and that an order be made to print 500 extra copies for the use of the Senate.

The order was read, as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the document room of the Senate 500 copies of internal-revenue laws 1861 to 1873, Senate Report No. 1123, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the order?

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not include the subsequent laws and have them all in one document?

Mr. ALLISON. These are the only laws bearing upon this question. This was done in pursuance of the order made the other day, and the work is already in print. I think it will cover the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 4628) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, on a line with First street SW.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 4629) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail a Regular Army officer to command the guard at the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on International Expositions.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 4630) to increase the pension of Chauncey A. Bradley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 170) authorizing the President of the United States to invite, through the proper channels, the Governments of England, France, Germany, Austria, Russia, Belgium, Switzerland, Mexico, and Venezuela to send details of troops to this country to participate in a jubilee to be given in New York by the trustees of the Red Cross Society of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on International Expositions.

QUARTERMASTER'S SUPPLIES, ETC.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that an order be entered to print the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes. I ask that it be printed as finally passed on the conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to an order to print the bill as requested? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ARANSAS PASS HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MILLS. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit plans, specifications, and estimates for the improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor, State of Texas, and especially to make plans and estimates for the removal of the sand bar at Aransas Pass and the deepening of the channel across said bar to a depth of at least 20 feet and a width of at least 150 feet at the bottom, so as to furnish an inlet for the passage of vessels from the Gulf of Mexico into Aransas Harbor; and in preparing said plans, specifications, and estimates the Secretary of War or such Government engineers as he may designate to do the work may consider the feasibility of utilizing such breakwaters now at said pass, constructed by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company, or the utilizing of any part of the same, and the value such use of such breakwater or material may be to the United States in deepening said channel; and in the estimate of such valuation any permanent damage which in the opinion of the Government engineers may have occurred by reason of the construction of said breakwater to said harbor or pass, or additional expense to the United States made necessary by reason of said attempted improvements in future improvements of said harbor or pass, shall also be considered by said engineers and reported by them. The engineers shall also report the approximate cost of construction of any breakwater of the said company which may be used by the Government, and also report the approximate cost of removing any part of said breakwater, if it is deemed necessary to remove any portion of it.

That the Secretary of War is further directed to report to the Senate at its next session.

Mr. HALE. Let the resolution go over and be printed.

Mr. MILLS. It is simply a resolution of the Senate calling for information. The same measure passed the Senate as a joint resolution, but it can not get through the House. I want to get the information from the War Department for the Committee on Commerce at the next session of Congress.

Mr. HALE. Is it simply a resolution asking for information?

Mr. MILLS. It is simply a resolution calling for information.

Mr. HALE. And the matter is not to be acted upon at this session?

Mr. MILLS. It is not to be acted upon until the report comes in. The report is to be made to the next session of Congress by the Secretary of War.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution directs the Secretary of War "to prepare and submit plans, specifications, and estimates for the improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor," etc.

Mr. HALE. Is it reported from the Committee on Commerce?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution was offered by the Senator from Texas. It is not reported by a committee.

Mr. MILLS. It is simply a resolution calling for information; precisely the same as the joint resolution that was passed, but we can not get the joint resolution through the House.

Mr. HALE. Let it be printed and go over.

Mr. MILLS. It simply calls for information.

Mr. HALE. I am afraid it goes too far.

Mr. MILLS. The joint resolution was passed without objection in the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. We passed a joint resolution on the same subject.

Mr. MILLS. The joint resolution was reported by the committee unanimously.

Mr. HALE. As a similar measure has already passed the Senate, I do not make any further objection.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 17th instant approved and signed the act (S. 3132) to provide for the disposition of abandoned imported merchandise.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 18th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1586) to abolish the distinction between offered and unoffered lands, and for other purposes;

An act (S. 4518) to provide assistance to the inhabitants of Cuba, and arms, munitions, and military stores to the people of the Island of Cuba, and for other purposes;

An act (S. 4566) to provide for the increased volume of work in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, due to the calling out of volunteers and the increase of the Regular Army; and

An act (S. 4567) to organize a volunteer signal corps.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. CHARLES, MO.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CANNON in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4206) extending the time for the construction of a wagon and motor bridge across the Missouri River at St. Charles, Mo., as provided by an act approved June 3, 1896, which was, in line 9, to strike out "and two."

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment. It merely changes the date within which the work must be commenced from 1902 to 1900. The words "and two" are stricken out.

The amendment was concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. H. L. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 995) for the relief of George M. Anderson, of the State of Nebraska;

A bill (S. 3953) to provide an American register for the steamer Catania;

A bill (S. 4582) to provide an American register for the steamship Centennial;

A bill (S. 3145) to establish an assay office at Seattle, Wash.;

A bill (H. R. 1288) for the relief of Samuel McKee; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 237) appointing four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 10100.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, the pending question being on amendment No. 77, reported by the Committee on Finance, on pages 33 and 34 of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday, when amendment No. 77 was under consideration, suggestions were made by Senators respecting its phraseology. I have consulted with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] who made some criticism, and now suggest two amendments.

After the word "is," on page 33, line 24, I move to strike out "directed" and insert "authorized;" so as to read:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to procure any of the stamps provided for in this act, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 3, on page 34, I move to strike out all after the word "Printing," down to and including the word "appropriated," in line 6, in the following words:

And a sum sufficient to so procure said stamps is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

If the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, it will leave the whole question of appropriating money for this purpose to be disposed of by the Committee on Appropriations in the regular appropriation bill, and in that way we can more clearly ascertain through an estimate from the Treasury Department the amount required.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the copies of the pending bill as reported to the Senate have been exhausted. I think we ought to have an order to print additional copies.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that an order be made that 3,000 additional copies of the bill as reported from the committee be printed for the use of the Senate and sent to the document room.

There being no objection the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 3,000 additional copies of H. R. 10100, as reported to the Senate May 12, 1898, be printed to be sent to the Senate document room.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Schedule A is next in order.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, it is fortunate for the American people in this great crisis that there exists at least one deliberative body where measures of importance can be thoroughly examined, section by section and line by line, in order that haste may not place upon the people unnecessary burdens at a time when the nation is already overburdened. In this bill and our action upon it the hopes of the Government are based for the means with which to carry on this war, while the hopes of the people are that while we will provide necessary revenues, we will not enact one section into law which will unnecessarily oppress the humblest citizen in the Republic. Revenue must be had.

No patriot will at this time question the wisdom or the unwisdom of the war. Our national honor and self-interest are at stake, and every citizen, in proportion to his ability to pay, owes it to the Government to contribute his share toward the extraordinary expenses incurred.

THE WAR INEVITABLE.

The American people love peace. They did not want war, and two Administrations did all in their power to avert it. But "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." Spain supposed that the commercial instinct had stifled the patriotism of our people, but to her sorrow she found at Manila that greed for gain has not destroyed our manhood and that Dewey is a worthy successor to Farragut, Decatur, and Perry.

I have said that two Administrations sought to avoid war. I might have truthfully said that every Administration since the United States was a nation has sought to avert war with Spain. President George Washington complained that Spain incited the Indians to insurrection while pretending to be friendly, and every President since Washington has found occasion to inform Congress through messages of atrocities committed upon American citizens and American interests by the Government of Spain. It has been evident for many years that Spanish influences could not be allowed to exist upon the continent where our forefathers unfurled the banner of liberty and where freedom and progress have marked a new epoch in the civilization of the world.

The blighting influence of Spanish oppression could not be allowed to poison the atmosphere of the Western World. The conflict between those who love freedom and those who hate it, this trouble between the sons of liberty and the oppressors of the Old World, was bound to come, and the hand which touched the button that exploded the mine in Havana Harbor while at enmity with the United States unconsciously extended the influence of the flag of freedom over all the Western Hemisphere and sent the message of liberty even to the far-off waters of the Orient.

HUMANITY NOT CONQUEST.

Surely no nation ever had higher, holier ground for war—a war not for conquest, but for humanity; a war in behalf of mercy, peace, and civilization. The records of the past fail to disclose a parallel for the brutal and cruel destruction by Spain of an entire people, simply to perpetuate her sovereignty. It constitutes the blackest chapter in the annals of the human race.

Mr. President, we waited too long. We were too much engrossed in business, too wrapped up in the pursuit of our own pleasure and self-interests, to heed the groans of an oppressed and suffering people. But the Christ who died a cruel death by the hand of man was not deaf to the wail of starving children, the shriek of outraged womanhood, and the dumb agony of brave men. A just God will heed the prayer of a people in the supreme agony. We replied, "Am I my brother's keeper?" and the voice of God spoke in the awful roar and the blinding flash which sent 266 of our brave men to their death in the mud and slime of Havana Harbor. That was a summons to duty which all heard, and none will fail to heed.

Had belligerent rights been accorded the insurgents two years ago, the United States would not have been involved in this war, the Maine would still proudly ride the sea, and the flag of free Cuba float upon the breeze. It took a call like that of February 15, to which we could no longer shut our ears, which could not be dismissed, like the stories of starvation and distress, with the sneer of "jingo" and "yellow journalism." From that moment no power could avert the war. The American people needed the report of no court to tell them who destroyed the Maine, and the flame that lit up the sky and the menacing thunder of the explosion were but omens of the blaze of anger which swept over this land.

THE MORAL LAW INEXORABLE.

We are taught by history that nations, like individuals, are under the rule of eternal moral laws, which in the one case as well as the other inexorably avenge their own transgressions. An active sin invites no greater punishment than the omission of a plain duty.

What is our wealth, prosperity, civilization, and boasted statesmanship worth, if the suffering and misery which comes from selfishness and tyranny are not to be ameliorated? We have paid dearly for the failure to do our duty, and to say that the selfish, inhuman savagery of Spain shall receive no punishment is to impeach the justice of God and to deny His omnipotence.

War is inhuman. It is a relic of barbarism. It is a disgrace to Christian civilization. But Spain is a gangrene upon the civilization of the earth, and the kingdom of peace can only be extended by the removal of every drop of this poison blood from the international body. It has been truly said, "War is the sledge hammer of Providence," battering down despotism that justice and mercy may reign.

IMMEDIATE ACTION DEMANDED BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. President, I am ready to vote for any measure which may be necessary to bring this war to a speedy conclusion. While we wait thousands in Cuba are houseless, helpless, and starving. They were starving when this war was declared, and many of them must have died ere now. While the peaceful blockade was rendered necessary in the opinion of those into whose hands the conduct of this war is committed, yet we can not lose sight of the fact that if Cuba was desolate and her people were dying two months ago, as so pathetically told by those Senators who visited the unhappy island, the condition now must pass all powers of description.

Every day means the loss of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of lives in Cuba. Let the money consideration be left out of the question entirely. When humanity is at stake dollars are as dross. The only question is how to strike, where to strike, and what is the earliest moment when it is possible to strike. Human lives are at stake in Cuba; the liberty of mankind is at stake in Cuba; the dearest principles for which our forefathers fought are at stake in Cuba, and our national prestige is at stake. Great, rich, and powerful, we must conquer Spain, and conquer her quickly, or lose caste among the nations of the earth.

And then, while war is in progress, the withdrawal of so many people from the peaceful pursuits of life decreases production, paralyzes business, and demoralizes public and private morals. Delay and uncertainty mean the loss of more money for the people than the cost of the war itself. It is to do but once, and the more quickly the better.

RESPONSIBILITY ON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. President, it is the function of the Executive to carry this war forward, and in that function his authority is supreme, and

I am glad that it is. Had President Washington, when he occupied the position of Commander in Chief of the Army, been subject to the control of Congress, the same body which refused him supplies might have forever prevented him from achieving the independence of the Republic. The American people placed William McKinley at the head of the Army and the Navy of the nation; and however we may differ from the Executive in politics, yet every American is proud of the fact that no man yet placed by the people in the Executive chair has ever been false to the trust reposed in him, and such is my faith in American nature that I do not believe we will ever have a President in whom we can not place our confidence.

CONGRESS WILL DO ITS DUTY.

It is the province of Congress, it is the duty of Congress, to provide the means by which the President may be enabled to properly fulfill the duties devolving upon him. It is in this provision of means that the utmost scrutiny should be had and the most careful deliberation taken, without regard to personal belief, private interests, or party policies. There is no question that an increase of expenditures requires either an increase of revenue or a corresponding decrease in other lines of expenditures. The War Department and the Navy Department must necessarily be provided with more money than is ordinarily sufficient for their purposes. If this money could be saved by curtailing expenses in other Departments, such a course would undoubtedly be the wisest one. If it can not, then the necessary means must be provided by the people through some mode of taxation.

LESSON OF THE LAST WAR.

The experience of the dark days between 1861 and 1865 should teach us now to be very careful that in providing enough revenue we do not provide too much. We inculcated then a habit of extravagance in the conduct of public affairs which it has seemed impossible to break, and from which the people have suffered ever since. The United States Treasury has no use for a surplus, and the moment our revenue becomes greater than is necessary Congress is immediately called upon, not to decrease the revenue, but to provide something, and the nature of the "something" is not very well considered, upon which this money can be expended. I want to see every item in this bill closely scrutinized. If it is wise, I shall vote for it. When the bill is complete and all sections have been considered, then I want a careful estimate made to ascertain as nearly as possible if the revenue produced will be enough and yet not more than enough.

In my judgment it is the most important measure that has been considered by this body for many years. If this war is to have the effect of increasing extravagance in the departments of our Government, then it is but a question of time before the local burdens will become too great for our own people to bear and we will be confronted with the most serious problem that has ever arisen in our national existence.

STARTLING FIGURES.

Prior to 1860 the expenditures of the Federal Government per capita ranged from $1.35 to $2.20. They now range from $5 to $6. In addition to this, the State expenditures average $9.10 per capita; a total of between $14 and $15 per capita. As compared with these expenditures, the Statesman's Year Book gives the per capita of expense of Austria at $1.51; Russia, $2.75; the German Empire, including State expense, $5.90; the British Empire, including colonial expenses, $3.97; Japan, $1.60; Portugal, $1.08, and Mexico, $3.85. Prior to 1860 the people of the United States were freer from the burdens of taxation than the people of almost any other civilized country. To-day they pay heavier taxes than the people of any civilized nation.

The extravagance of the Federal Government is not confined to any one Department. In 1860 the expenses for Indians was less than $3,000,000. Last year, with one-half as many Indians, the expenses were three times as great. If the expenses increase in the same proportion with the decrease of the Indians, a simple calculation will show that the last Indian will cost this Government about $27,500,000 a year to support him.

The expense for pensions is five times as great as it was twenty-five years ago, and if pensions are to continue to increase in the same proportion to the decrease in the number of living soldiers that has been maintained during the past twenty-five years, then upon the death of the last surviving soldier, if he should live to be 100 years old, the pension roll ought to be about $600,000,000 a year.

There has been enough money expended upon rivers and harbors to build a double-track railroad and fully equip it upon each bank of every mile of navigable water in the United States. There was expended prior to 1860 $76,000,000. From 1867 to 1897 there was expended upon rivers alone over $226,000,000. In 1870 the receipts of the United States Government were $395,959,833.87. The expenditures were but $164,421,507.15. There was a large surplus in the Treasury constantly accumulating until within the past ten years.

The policies of the Government based upon war legislation had become settled, and certain protected interests demanded that those policies should not be relaxed or changed, and the result was that Congress deliberated, not for the purpose of finding out how to economically administer the affairs of state, but to discover some new lines of expenditure by which this surplus could be kept down and yet allow the oppressive taxes to remain as they were. With this record before us, and in consideration of the hundreds of millions of dollars that have been wrongfully extorted from a hard-working people, I appeal to my brother Senators to watch very carefully every line of this measure, in order that history may not repeat itself.

INIQUITY MASKED AS PATRIOTISM.

Let us not forget in that other war period in the history of our Government that there was rushed through in the flurry of patriotic excitement the most iniquitous legislation that has ever disgraced the statute books of this country, simply because it was labeled "war measure." I can not forget that the taxing power of this Government as a "war measure" was invoked to destroy State banks, or that to-day this unjust tax still remains to oppress the people whom I represent, in order that others may enjoy a monopoly of the currency-issuing functions.

The demonetization of silver and the interpretation of the word "coin" to mean "gold" were the parents of the bond deal of the last Administration, which netted a commission of at least $8,000,000 to a favored few. The whole constitutes a shameful chapter in American history. This brood of evils, which still vex and oppress our people, were hatched in that other war period, and its bitter experience should warn us to permit no influence to seduce or clamor to drive us into any course of legislation which tends toward extravagance or corruption.

DANGER.

There are now some symptoms that I do not like. This feverish haste and too ready desire to resort to bond issues, is the tangible indication of an influence which exists in this country more powerful than the President and more potent than Congress—an influence which has dictated, which does dictate, and which, if possible, will continue to dictate what this Government shall do. I refer to that secret, unseen, silent money power which in peace or in war dominates the Executive, transforms the lower House into a phonograph, and seeks even to paralyze the Senate.

This Chamber for some time has been the only branch of this Government where the voice of the people could be heard and plots for their spoliation exposed. I saw some signs of weakening when the vote for the recognition of the independence of Cuba was taken, and I fear now to witness the complete surrender of this, the last citadel of freedom and independence. The net has been carefully woven, and once entangled within its meshes, escape is well-nigh impossible. This, Mr. President, is a favorable time to recall the words of the immortal Lincoln in reference to the last war. He foresaw the effect of the deadly poison which at that time was injected into the financial and political structure of the body politic when he said:

> Yes, we may all congratulate ourselves that this cruel war is near its close. It cost a vast amount of blood and treasure. The best blood of the flower of American youth has been freely offered upon our country's altar that the nation might live. It has indeed been a trying hour for the Republic. But I see in the future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all the wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. God grant that my fears may prove groundless.

These words are as true as any prophecy in Holy Writ. In the blood-soaked ground of the last war was planted the seed from which has grown the entire crop of evils which afflict us. Let us not make the mistake that was made then. For my part, I would not put too large a sum of money into the Treasury at any one time. Let us provide ample sources of income and pay the money out as fast as it comes in without at any one time having a large reserve on hand.

THE OFFSPRING OF GREED AND CUNNING.

On the 1st of July, 1860, there was only $4,877,885.87 in the Treasury. The 1st of July, 1861, there was $2,862,212.92. The 1st of July, 1862, there was $18,863,659.96. The 1st of July, 1863, there was $8,421,401.22. The 1st of July, 1865, with an indebtedness of $2,221,311,918.29 interest-bearing debt, besides $458,090,180.25 of noninterest-bearing debt, it was only necessary to have in the Treasury $5,832,012.98. Even with this immense indebtedness the idea of a reserve being necessary never entered the head of an American financier. Our Treasury is not a banking institution. Its sole purpose is to collect the revenues and pay the expenses of the Government.

Such a thing as a reserve was never heard of until it became necessary to dispose of a surplus, and thus hide the fact that the people were being overtaxed. One hundred million dollars of the surplus was therefore called a reserve. And now that reserve is supposed to be a sacred thing, not to be tampered with or reduced under any circumstances whatever. If bonds are sold as provided in the amendment and several hundred million dollars put into the Treasury, it is a standing invitation to scheming cupidity, and

"from temptation, good Lord, deliver us." With that much money in the Treasury, every official in this Government who will not be coaxed and cajoled into schemes of wickedness, will be bullied into passive submission or driven out of public life.

There is an army in this country just as anxious to raid the Treasury as the citizen army is to fight Spain for the glory of the American flag. There is no need to issue a call for volunteers for the ranks of the Treasury raiders. The scent of plunder is sufficient to attract recruits. To my mind, this army of speculators and jobbers constitutes a far greater danger than war with Spain. Our coast is more easily protected from foreign foes than the Treasury from vicious legislation.

HOUSE AND SENATE BILLS COMPARED.

Mr. President, I have thus called attention to the effect of the war measure passed in 1862 for the purpose of showing that we have not yet recovered from its baneful effect. And yet, Mr. President, that measure, iniquitous as it was, constituted the acme of human wisdom as compared with the measure which the House sent to this body for consideration. The act of 1862 bases the taxes upon income, legacies, successions, bank capital, receipts of railroads, steamboats, and ferryboats, occupations, yachts, billiard tables, carriages, and family plate, all of which bore most directly upon the rich and none of which appeared in the bill as sent to the Senate from the House.

I have taken a few figures out of the Internal Revenue Commissioner's report for the year 1867. The aggregate receipts for 1867, after two statutes had been passed for the purpose of reducing the revenue, amounted to $265,920,474.65. Of this, banks, trust companies, and saving institutions paid on their dividends and additions to surplus $3,774,975.32; upon their circulation, $208,276; upon their deposits, $1,355,395; on their capital, $476,867. The railroads paid on dividends and profits $3,379,262; on gross receipts, $4,128,255. Insurance companies paid on dividends and additions to surplus $562,473.93; on premiums and assessments, $1,326,014. Telegraph companies paid $239,594. Express companies paid $558,359. Revenue stamps paid $16,034,718. Legacies and successions paid $1,861,429. Incomes paid $57,040,640. Carriages, yachts, and pianofortes paid $1,005,152. Special taxes paid $18,103,615.

Among the occupation taxes were bankers, $1,433,715; brewers, $238,155; brokers, $598,854. The revenue from whisky and tobacco was only one-third what it was last year; and it is at least safe to assume that any one of the items taxed then would bring three times as much now at the same rate of taxation.

It is a difficult matter to determine just how much money is rendered necessary by the war, and somewhat doubtful if there is not already enough in the Treasury to cover all contingencies. The complete failure of the Dingley bill as a revenue producer may have something to do with the cry for increased revenue.

THE DINGLEY DEFICIENCY BILL.

In the House Chairman DINGLEY calculated that the bill would produce $90,000,000 a year revenue. As, after deducting the amounts received from the Pacific Railroad, the present deficiency is about $63,000,000, it will be observed that the bill did not purport to raise any more revenue than was necessary to cover the deficiency caused by the Dingley bill; in fact, the best calculation would place this deficiency by the 1st of August at just about $90,000,000; and the fact that a bill was reported to raise only the amount that will be required to meet the ordinary expenses of the Government on account of the deficiency of the Dingley bill as a revenue producer would seem to indicate that the object was to borrow all of the money necessary to carry on the war.

"THE CLOVEN FOOT."

The Treasury Department is now paying all demands in gold, and in an interview in the Washington Post the following statement is made:

> When asked yesterday for the reasons as to the large disbursements in gold, Assistant Secretary Vanderlip explained that with the present large stocks of gold in the Treasury (about $100,000,000), with the daily revenue coming in paid substantially, as it is, in gold, it was imperative that disbursements should be made in similar funds. The fact, too, that the daily payments are now, and for some time to come will continue to be, in excess of the receipts, makes it plain that the large gold balance will be reduced. This will continue, he said, until by the proceeds of sales of the new bonds to be provided for, the receipts are augmented.

Mr. President, it is plain from this statement and the statement Secretary Gage made before the Senate committee that the Treasury Department is trying to force an issue of bonds upon this country. Gold is not being demanded, but they are trying to deplete the Treasury of gold. There is a large surplus of gold on hand, and as long as it remains in the Treasury there is no hope of obtaining authority to issue bonds. The Treasury officials are therefore paying the gold out of the Treasury as rapidly as possible in order to make an excuse for a bond issue. He has authority to issue Treasury certificates, but he does not wish to use that authority.

There is silver in the Treasury, and no one has refused to take the silver, but the silver is not offered. There is paper money in the Treasury, and no one has refused to accept this money, but it is not offered. Why? Mr. President, the reason is obvious. The Secretary of the Treasury has asked for the issuance of bonds, the House has done his bidding, but the Senate committee refused to carry out any such scheme. It is a singular coincidence that the policy of paying out this gold was adopted simultaneously with the starting of the opposition in the Senate committee against the issuance of these bonds. If the Treasury officials want to make a deficiency in the gold reserve, it is in their power to do so, but upon their heads let the blame rest.

If, in order to coerce the Senate into adding a $15,000,000-a-year interest account to the burdens already imposed upon the people, they deliberately seek to pay out the gold in the Treasury, let them go without gold and pay in Treasury certificates. There is admittedly a very large available cash balance, amounting to over $200,000,000, and this amount will defray the expenses of the war for some time to come.

If the Secretary of the Treasury succeeds in paying out all of this available cash balance, I hope that the reserve will never be again placed in the Treasury. We went through the last war without a reserve; we went through a century of history marked with wonderful prosperity and progress without a reserve; the darkest days of commercial disaster that have ever come over the United States were since we had a reserve, and while I do not blame the reserve with our financial panic, it certainly did not prevent it, nor even ameliorate its conditions. If the Secretary of the Treasury wants to do without a reserve, I say, let him do so; if he does not want to do without a reserve, let him quit paying out gold when it is not asked for, and pay the debts of the United States in Treasury notes.

INTEREST-BEARING BONDS UNNECESSARY.

The legal-tender notes of the United States constituting a noninterest-bearing debt, cheerfully accepted by the people of the United States who become its creditors, and costing not one dollar, were the stand-by of this country during the civil war and had the party indorsement of such men as Salmon P. Chase, Thaddeus Stevens, and John A. Bingham. As late as 1892, a year when the Republicans claim there was the greatest prosperity known for many years, the debt bearing no interest, which included Treasury notes, old demand notes, and fractional currency, amounted to $1,000,648,939.37. This amount has been decreased by over $600,000,000, so far as the Treasury is concerned, a part of which has been replaced with silver certificates; but as to these, the cash is in the Treasury to meet them, and they are not classed upon the Treasury books as noninterest-bearing debt.

A GREATER MENACE THAN WAR.

The noninterest-bearing debt of the United States could be safely increased to the point at which it stood in 1892. Instead, however, of increasing the noninterest-bearing debt, it is the policy of this Administration to wipe it out of existence entirely and to increase the interest-bearing debt by the issuance of bonds. Not only does the addition to our interest-bearing debt cost the people directly 3 per cent in interest, but it withdraws the amount of the entire interest-bearing debt from the taxable property of the United States, because the bonds are specifically exempt from taxation.

Mr. President, I am not an alarmist; but this Republic is at the present time in more danger from the spirit which seeks to profit by the Government instead of participating in its burdens than from any other cause. It is the ambition of too many people in the United States to draw from the Federal Treasury instead of paying into it. Every bondholder, having succeeded in so investing his money as to escape his just share of taxation, tries to find a similar investment for what other means he may have. There are 1,000,000 names already on the pension roll, and half as many more would have been there had those who bore them been successful in their applications.

There are 178,000 Federal officeholders; there are nearly 500,000 State and municipal officeholders. Including the bondholders, 2,000,000 people draw money directly out of the public Treasury. This equals about one-sixth of the entire voting population. This state of affairs can not be indefinitely continued. It has bred an ambition to escape the penalties of taxation, rather than to welcome the responsibilities along with the privileges of citizenship. There is a class, and I regret to say that there are many members in this class, who are proud of their ability to escape taxation.

As an illustration a case might be cited of a very able lawyer in Illinois, son of one of the early governors of that State, who had a very active and successful practice, with himself as his only client. His sole object of existence was to defeat taxation, and, possessed of ample property, he fought the payment of taxes upon it until he was a terror to the legislative and judicial branches of the government of Illinois. He had no other business, and he wanted none. Opposition to taxation was a mania with him. This is but one man, but he illustrates a class which is unfortunately very large.

In this connection I wish to call attention to the speech made by ex-President Benjamin Harrison in Chicago upon February 22 of the present year:

TAX RESPONSIBILITY.

The special purpose of my address to-day is to press home this thought upon the prosperous, well-to-do people of our community, and especially of our great cities, that one of the conditions of the security of wealth is a proportionate and full contribution to the expenses of the State and local governments. It is not only wrong, but it is unsafe to make a show in our homes and on the street that is not made in the tax returns.

Equality is the golden thread that runs all through the fabric of our civil institutions—the dominating note in the swelling symphony of liberty. Equality, not of conditions, not of natural endowment, but of rights, is the foundation stone of our governmental structure. And as a corollary, necessary and imperative to this doctrine of an equality of rights, is the doctrine of a proportionate and ratable contribution to the cost of administering the Government. The duty of the State to protect life, liberty, and property is conditioned upon a fair contribution to the cost of government. A full and conscientious discharge of that duty by the citizen is one of the tests of good citizenship. To evade that duty is a moral delinquency, an unpatriotic act.

If we do not hold by this rule of proportion, which I think is an essential part of the definition of taxes, then everything becomes subject to the whim of the legislature. The whole revenue of a State may be derived from contributions exacted from a very small minority of its population, the majority going free. To allow such a system is not only to rob the minority thus unduly burdened, but is to rob the State of that which is essential to its healthy existence and, indeed, to the life of republican institutions. Honesty and carefulness in public expenditure will have no effective watchers. The watch of the minority will be ineffectual, and the majority will be careless as to the use of funds to the accumulation of which it has not contributed.

NAMES DELINQUENTS.

For very many years an opinion has been prevalent that the great bulk of the personal property of the States, especially of the class denominated "securities," including stocks, bonds, notes, mortgages, and such like, has escaped taxation. With a very few exceptions the great fortunes in this country are invested in such securities. The delinquency appears to be located largely in our great cities. Recent investigations of students of political science and recent tables prepared by State officials have disclosed an appalling condition of things. The evil seems to have been progressing until, in some of our great centers of population and wealth, these forms of personal property seem to have been almost eliminated from the tax list.

* * * * * * *

Taxes are a debt of the highest obligation, and no casuist can draw a sound moral distinction between the man who hides his property or makes a false return in order to escape the payment of his debts to the State and the man who conceals his property from his private creditors.

* * * * * * *

We must inaugurate, and at once, a system that shall equalize tax burdens. The men of wealth in our great communities should lead the movement. This great club, organized as a rallying center for loyalty and patriotic citizenship, should hear a call as loud and imperative as that which came to it during the years of the civil war.

Mr. Lincoln's startling declaration that this country could not continue to exist half slave and half free may be paraphrased to-day by saying that this country can not continue to exist half taxed and half free.

* * * * * * *

If there is not enough public virtue left in our communities to make tax frauds discreditable; if there is not virility enough left in our laws and in the administration of justice in our courts to bring to punishment those who defraud the State and their neighbors: if crimes of fraud may stalk unrebuked and unpunished in our streets, how long will it be until crimes of violence make insecure the fortunes that have refused to contribute ratably to the cost of maintaining social order?

* * * * * * *

SEES A WARNING.

These efforts should serve as a warning. The people will not consent that this state of things shall be accepted as a permanent condition. If we are to leave no taxes save such as in their nature necessarily exclude concealment and bribery, what tax will remain? If we admit the disgraceful conclusion that the state of public and private morals has become such in our country that the wealthy may not be brought under the law and compelled to yield it reverence and obedience, have we not confessed the failure of republican institutions?

The effects of the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few has already been as serious as was feared by President Lincoln. Mr. Holmes, one of the best-known statisticians of this country, estimates the present wealth of the United States at $60,000,000,000 and the number of families at 12,690,152. Of these, 11,593,887 families own $17,356,837,343, and 1,096,265 families own $42,643,163,657. Nine per cent of the families own 71 per cent of the wealth. Families to the number of 4,047 possess 70 per cent as much as do 11,593,837 families.

Mr. Shearman, the Brooklyn statistician, says:

The facts conclusively demonstrate that the wealthiest class in the United States is vastly richer than the wealthiest class in Great Britain. The average annual income of the hundred richest Englishmen is about $450,000, but the average annual income of the one hundred richest Americans can not be less than $1,200,000, and probably exceeds $1,500,000.

He divides the classes as rich, 182,090 families; wealth, $43,367,000,000; middle classes, $7,500,000; working classes, $11,215,000,000. The United States are practically owned by one-sixteenth of its population. And yet this class usually succeed in evading the payment of taxes.

In this country there is no income tax, nothing but a consumption tax, and admittedly the ratio of the amount consumed to the amount of income of the rich bears no just proportion to the same ratio as to the poor. The proceeds from income taxes in the leading countries last year were as follows: United Kingdom, $74,914,215; France, $44,498,922; Italy, $57,332,260; Japan, $1,434,259; Mexico, $2,200,000; the Netherlands, $4,620,000; Portugal, $6,199,700; Sweden, $7,150,000; Norway, $3,900,000; Turkey, $3,710,675. These figures are taken from the Statesman's Year Book. In no other country does the rich man escape taxation upon his income.

Mr. President, I see, just as ex-President Harrison says, that the future is fraught with great trouble unless there is a change in the tide of affairs, and the Congress of the United States, realizing the danger, so pilots the ship of state that she escapes the vortex into which she is being driven. The corporation, bank, and inheritance tax is a wise move and the best substitute possible for an income tax.

THOSE WHO PROFIT MOST SHOULD BEAR THEIR SHARE OF THE BURDEN.

Mr. President, the bill under consideration, as it came from the House, taxed the poor man and not the rich. The Senate committee has worked indefatigably, and the result of their labor is that they have presented us a bill which bears more equally upon all in proportion to their ability to pay. The bill as it now stands ought to have the approval of the Senate, with perhaps the exception of the stamp-tax feature, and I believe it would afford sufficient revenue with this eliminated. The bill should be passed as quickly as possible, but by this I do not mean that careful and full deliberation should be denied.

In the present bill there is a tax upon bonds, and, as a rule, no property so systematically escapes the burdens of taxation, both Federal and local, as bonds. This clause ought to receive the hearty support of every Senator. There is no politics in it. Bonds are held by Democrats, Republicans, and even by Populists, notwithstanding the opposition of the latter to the corporations whose indebtedness they represent.

Mr. President, under the House bill the speculators, who make more money, and cause others to lose more than any other class of men, escaped without taxation. In the present bill they are required to share the burdens of the Government. In the tax on bank checks, the Senate bill makes the rate more uniform and more just than in the House bill. The tax upon bankers and the exemption in favor of strictly mutual savings banks will affect a class that will derive profit from the war, while the exception exempts the class whose savings are small, and hence does not in any way retard or hinder the very desirable habit of saving upon the part of the wage earners. The tax upon brokers and insurance agents will also affect only those who can afford to pay the tax. The tax upon theaters and circuses is one that will be easily borne and will fall where it will result in no hardship to anyone. Bowling alleys and billiard rooms are places of amusement, and a tax upon them imposes no hardship.

The taxes upon dealers in the House bill were so provided that they fell most heavily upon small dealers. The Senate committee has very wisely and properly reversed this order and so regulated the tax that the merchant doing a large business pays in proportion to the amount of the business done. The tax upon conveyance has also been changed so as to make the tax bear a just proportion to the value of the property which changes hands.

Mr. President, no persons engaged in legitimate business will profit so directly and so largely from the war as the transportation companies. No tax was so cheerfully paid during the last war, and none will be more easily collected or result in less hardship under the present bill. In saying that the railroad companies ought to bear a very considerable proportion of the increased expenditure of the Government, I do not mean in any way to criticise the railroad companies, or fail to accord to them all the right and equities that should be allowed to a private individual. Their earnings will be greatly increased, and the tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent will not represent a considerable proportion of the extra profits they will make out of the necessary increase of business.

Insurance, telegraph, and telephone companies, it is well known, make in the aggregate very large profits, and while their business may not be increased by as large a percentage as in the business of railroad companies, yet it is but reasonable to state that the direct profits arising out of the war will more than pay the tax imposed. I do not think that anyone will oppose a tax upon gas and electric companies except the gas and electric companies themselves. The tax upon bank deposits is one of the very best in the bill for more reasons than one. It is a class of property which usually escapes taxation, but outside of that fact, and without regard to any opinion I might have as to the desirability or undesirability of our present banking system, this tax will have a tendency to reduce the amount of idle money that lies in the vaults of our banks. Bankers are preeminently conservative, and the moment the business world needs the use of money for the purpose of tiding over temporary difficulties the bank stops discounting paper. With a tax on average deposits, it will be an incentive to the banks to keep less money idle. It will have a tendency to increase the circulation, and materially assist in adding to the volume of business.

The tax upon legacies, while not altogether without difficulties, was not complained of during the last war. As a rule, the pleasure of inheriting money makes the inheritors perfectly willing to pay a tax upon it. It is distinctly a war measure, and as such has been successfully tried before. The excessive tonnage tax, which would have crippled our foreign trade, and had a direct effect upon the prices of our farm products, which constitute nearly three-fourths of our exports, has rightly been eliminated. The policy of borrowing money by bonds when there is a large surplus in the Treasury and the lowest noninterest-bearing debt in thirty-six years, has rightly been eliminated by the Senate committee.

The coinage of the silver seigniorage and the issue of silver certificates to the extent of the bullion now in the Treasury does not by any means constitute a change in the present financial system. That silver was bought and paid for with the people's money under a law which positively required it to be coined. While the purchase of further silver bullion was stopped, there has been no change in the law which requires the coinage of that which has already been purchased. The fact that it can be circulated is shown by the Treasury now being short of silver certificates and of silver coin, and paying out gold as a matter of preference.

The provision of the bill requiring an additional issue of Treasury notes to the amount of $150,000,000 constitutes an increase of our noninterest-bearing debt to that amount, and ought not to provoke any adverse discussion. It does not bring up any of the greenback theories. It is simply borrowing that amount constituting about $2 per capita, from the people of the United States without paying interest in preference to borrowing of the bankers and paying interest. The amount is not excessive, being very much less than has been absorbed by the country within the period when every dollar of paper currency has been redeemable (at the option of the holder) in a dollar in gold. If the people could absorb a much larger issue in times of peace by reason of their faith in the Government, they can be relied upon to absorb this amount now without in any way affecting the stability of our currency.

Mr. President, I hope this bill can pass the Senate in as just and equitable a shape as it passed the committee. It may have defects. Some of these may be pointed out during the debate, while others may not be discovered until the law is put into operation. We want enough revenue and we do not want too much. We do not want to withhold a dollar that can be advantageously used. We do not want to pay a dollar as an unnecessary tribute to speculators, and we do not wish to provide a surplus in the United States Treasury. If possible, we must avoid the disastrous consequences which followed the passage of the war measure of 1862, or, rather, the failure to repeal it until after it had created an enormous surplus in the Treasury.

JUST COMPLAINT OF THE PEOPLE.

Mr. President, the American people are a patriotic people. In them the love of liberty is so great that they love its very name; they will bear any evil rather than submit to the control of a monarch. But, Mr. President, there has of late years been ominous murmurings in the workshop, around the fire in the corner grocery, in the homes, and even out on the farms. The agricultural classes, the last to rebel, these long-suffering, hard-toiling sons of the soil, are thinking along lines that they never thought before; they are saying harsh things about this Government; they are cherishing dangerous resentments.

While patriotism is active, yet they feel that there is a class against whom they are at enmity, and that the voice of that class has entirely too much potency in the shaping of public affairs. These murmurings go through the lower strata of society, and in the poorer quarters of the cities anarchistic meetings are held, and the murmurs do not stop there. They come up grade by grade through the different classes until they now permeate through four-fifths of the social fabric. In considering this bill we must not only consider how to conduct this Government economically, but how to raise the funds so as to press most lightly upon the poor and most heavily upon the rich.

INDUSTRIAL DESPOTISM SUPPLANTS INDUSTRIAL COMPETITION.

Mr. President, since the 1st of January the paper mills of this country, the bituminous coal operators, the pottery manufacturers, the glass manufacturers, the biscuit and cracker makers, and a large number of other industries have been formed into trusts. The constant tendency has been toward the creation of combines; the small operator has been frozen out. There has been such a concentration of wealth since the passage of the Dingley law as was never known in this country before. Mr. President, there should be some way to reach these men and to reach them so hard that these combinations would be unprofitable.

Mr. President, we are engaged in war. It is the universal experience of mankind that war creates a demand for goods during its continuance, and that by lessening the number of employees who are out of employment, by utilizing them in the service of their country, work during war is always more plentiful than during peace. Especially is this true where the war is outside of the country and there is no devastation at home.

But so successfully have the combines controlled, that in spite of the fact that the Government is giving employment to a hundred and twenty-five thousand volunteers and to many thousands who are at work upon munitions of war, Bradstreet reports for the month of April, that the Boston Rubber Shoe Company's plant, employing 3,500 hands, is shut down; the Roxbury Company's Carpet Mills, with 750 employees, is shut down; the great Smith & Thayer Mills, with 2,000 employees, is shut down; 250 shingle mills in the State of Washington have closed down; the Bessemer pig-iron producers have closed their mills; the mills at Manchester, N. H., employing 3,500 operators, are running on half time; the Rodman Manufacturing Company, at Allentown, R. I., operating both woolen and cotton mills, has shut down all their immense works.

Mr. President, what is the matter? Prices are rising every day; men are flocking from the workshop and the benches to rally around the flag of their country. These mills were closed so long that there is no surplus of product, and yet the voices of women and children are heard throughout this country crying for bread, when there is no bread; strong men search in vain for work and see their families suffer around them because no work is to be had. Mr. President, there is something wrong about the condition which makes this thing possible. The reason for the closing of these mills is obvious. They are controlled by trusts. They are closed to create a scarcity and raise prices; there can be no other purpose.

GAMBLERS RAISE THE PRICE OF BREAD.

There is one class of men taxed in this bill who should have a tax as nearly prohibitive as possible placed upon them. I refer to the dealers in futures. As soon as war was declared, they increased the price of breadstuffs and the bakers' trust increased the price of bread. The consumption of wheat will not be increased by this war. No wheat fields will be devastated, for wheat is not grown on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. The area of wheat has not been lessened one acre, the product of wheat has not been lessened one bushel, the consumption of wheat has not been increased a pound, and yet, in order to make money out of the distresses of the nation, these men, after the farmers have sold all their stock and can no longer be benefited, have sent wheat to the highest point almost in the history of the world.

It is this band of leeches on the body politic, these financial cormorants who would swallow all of their fellow-beings, that should be made to pay the expenses of this war. Those expenses should not be raised by taxes upon consumption, for those taxes bear directly upon the widows and the orphans; they make the families at home of the soldiers in the field pay the expenses of the war.

The railroad companies, the express companies, the dealers in stocks and bonds, the bankers, and the brokers all directly profit by reason of the war. The manufacturers of iron and steel, of guns and powder, all make enormous profits. The man who has to borrow the money to support his family by mortgaging his little home makes no profit. The old one-armed soldier too old to go to the present war, who makes a scanty living by selling a few caddies of tobacco and a few boxes of cigars from some little hole in the wall where rents are cheap, makes no profit out of the war. The man who buys patent medicines in the hope of curing his sick wife or child because he can not afford the expense of a physician makes no money out of the war.

Mr. President, there are certain principles of taxation which every writer upon the science of political economy recognizes as fundamental. One of these is that the burdens of government should be borne in proportion to the benefits derived from the government. Another is that taxes should be equal. Another is that taxes should be uniform as to the classes taxed. Now, Mr. President, let us scrutinize this bill carefully. Let us make the men who are to reap the benefits shoulder the burdens. Let us see that these taxes are uniform and that the class upon which they fall is the class that can afford to pay them, and not the class that is already hopeless and discouraged by reason of fighting adverse fate under circumstances that do not admit of success.

Mr. President, in the name of the people of the United States, who in their collective capacity constitute the Government of the United States, we should take no action hastily, and every provision of this bill should be carefully weighed and wisely considered before we allow it to be placed upon the statute books. Let us discuss each section, not in a party spirit, nor for the purpose of saying pleasant things or things that will sound well, but with an honest endeavor to reach the best conclusion, no matter what the political or personal effects of such conclusion may mean to any of us.

When the appropriation of $50,000,000 was voted, we arose superior to party, and the record of that day will be looked upon with pride by the historian who, in future times, will put in print the story of the war between the United States and Spain. Let us carry out that same spirit in providing the means with which to bring this conflict to a speedy and glorious conclusion, so that its burdens will be distributed among the people in proportion to their individual capacities for carrying those burdens.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with Schedule A, line 11, page 34. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in line 20, page 34, after the word "all," to insert "sales or memoranda of sales or deliveries or;" in line 23, after the word "whether," to insert "made;" in the same line, after the word "upon," to insert "or shown by;" in line 24, after the word "by," to insert "any;" in line 25, after the word "any," to insert

"delivery, or by any paper or agreement or;" in line 1, on page 35, before the word "evidence," to insert "other;" in line 2, after the word "sale," to insert "whether;" in the same line, after the word "holder," to insert "in any manner;" in line 4, before the words "the future," to insert "for;" and in the same line, before the word "stock," to insert "any;" so as to read:

SCHEDULE A.

STAMP TAXES.

Bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness issued after the 1st day of June, A. D. 1898, by any association, company, or corporation, on each hundred dollars of face value or fraction thereo , 5 cents, and on each original issue, whether on organization or reorganization, of certificates of stock by any such association, company, or corporation, on each hundred dollars of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents, and on all sales or memoranda of sales or deliveries or transfers of shares or certificates of stock in any association, company, or corporation, whether made upon or shown by the books of the association, company, or corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale, whether entitling the holder in any manner to the benefit of such stock, or to secure the future payment of money or for the future transfer of any stock, on each hundred dollars of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the committee whether it is the intention to make this section applicable to a case where there is no actual transfer, but simply an agreement to transfer. The word "agreement" is in this section; but if Senators will scan it closely, they will see that it does not relate broadly to any agreement, but it is limited to an agreement to transfer, as will be seen if you read the entire sentence. If the committee has had its attention attracted to this, and if it thinks it covers it, I will be very glad to have some Senator point it out. The reason why I make the suggestion is this: I remember that last year, when we had the tariff bill up, there was a suggestion of a similar tax in that measure, and there was a publication in some of the New York papers, whether authorized or not I do not know, but still it was certainly being contemplated, to the effect that if that provision should be inserted in the bill, those engaged in these stock-exchange operations would evade it by not making the transfer, but simply having agreements to transfer, and settling upon those agreements, without making any transfer whatsoever.

I do not know whether that would be feasible or not, but I remember very distinctly that there was a publication to the effect that such was the purpose. If it is feasible to do that, then the object of the bill in this particular would be defeated. I do not offer an amendment, for of course the committee have had this matter under consideration, and I am not in a position to judge of it as they are, but I should like to hear from the Senators on this subject.

Mr. ALDRICH. This amendment as amended is intended to cover precisely that case, and I think it does. It provides that any paper or agreement or memoranda to secure the future payment of money or for the future transfer of any stock shall pay a tax.

Mr. ALLISON. Amendment No. 88 is intended to cover all that.

Mr. BACON. Amendment No. 88?

Mr. ALDRICH. The following amendment provides that a stamp shall be affixed to the agreement.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Amendments Nos. 82 and 88.

Mr. ALDRICH. Amendments Nos. 82 and 88 together. The whole scheme will appear if the Senator will allow the next amendment to be read.

Mr. BACON. The next amendment probably discloses it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, after the word "cents," in line 6, page 35, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in case of sale where the evidence of transfer is shown only by the books of the company the stamp shall be placed upon such books; and where the change of ownership is by transfer certificate the stamp shall be placed upon the certificate; and in cases where the transfer is by delivery of the certificate assigned in blank there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale, to which the stamp shall be affixed; and every bill or memorandum of sale before mentioned shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers. And any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale, or who shall in pursuance of any such sale deliver any such stock, or evidence of the sale of such stock or bill or memorandum thereof, as herein required, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Upon each sale, contract, agreement, or other evidence of a sale of any products or merchandise at any exchange, or board of trade, either for present or future delivery, for each $100 in value of said sale, 1 cent, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent: Provided, That on every sale, contract, agreement, or other evidence of a sale as afore said, there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale, contract, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, to which there shall be affixed a lawful stamp or stamps in value equal to the amount of the tax on such sale. And every such bill or memorandum shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers; and any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale, contract, agreement, or other evidence of a sale, or who shall, in pursuance of any such sale, contract, agreement, or other evidence of a sale, deliver any such products or merchandise without a bill or memorandum thereof as herein required, or who shall deliver such bill or memorandum without having the proper stamps affixed thereto with intent to evade the foregoing provisions shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. BACON. I understand, of course, that the committee have given this very careful consideration, and if I mistake it of course they will excuse my failure to perceive their accomplishment of the purpose intended. The point to which I directed the attention of the committee is the distinction between a contract in which there is no sale, but simply an agreement that they will sell, and the other case. If there is anything in this bill, either in the original text as it came from the House or in the amendment as now proposed to the Senate, which would cover the case of an agreement to sell and put it beyond doubt, I am unable to discover it.

Mr. ALDRICH rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me just a moment, in order that he may take my idea, because I do not understand that there is any difference between the committee and myself as to the desire to cover that, but simply a question as to whether they have done it. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the places where the word "agreement" occurs. The first word in this schedule which could be construed to mean an agreement to sell is the word "agreement" in the first line on page 35, and yet I submit that any court would hold, in construing that language, that the word "agreement" there referred to an agreement of transfer or sale and would not cover the case of an agreement that they would hereafter transfer or sell.

I think the same suggestion is true as to any future recurrence of that word. There is no place in this section where the idea is covered that there shall be a tax upon an agreement, not of sale, but an agreement to sell, and I repeat that that is somewhat important in view of the fact that when the same suggestion of a tax was before the Senate last year the New York papers published the statement that the parties who were interested and would be interested if such a tax were imposed would evade it by not making actual sale, but by simply making agreements to sell and never selling, but settling their differences without having perfected such sale.

I suggest to Senators that unless they can show that I am wrong in my construction of the language they have used, possibly the purpose may be effected by inserting in the second line on page 35, after the word "sale," the words "or agreement to transfer or sell."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In what line?

Mr. BACON. The second line; so that it will read:

Any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale, or of an agreement to transfer or sell.

If the committee are satisfied that the law can not be evaded in that way, then the amendment is not needed. On the other hand, if they are satisfied that the language already used covers the point, the amendment is not needed.

Mr. ALDRICH. It seems to me an agreement to sell must be an agreement to transfer stock at some time in the future.

Mr. BACON. Not necessarily.

Mr. ALDRICH. It must include it by implication if not in express terms, because otherwise the title to the property would never pass. Otherwise it would mean nothing and the agreement would be void. The language, in my opinion, covers the case exactly as he has stated it; but I have no objection to putting in the words "sale or agreement to sell" in line 20, on page 34. I think it is now covered by the language used, but I am perfectly willing that those words shall be inserted.

Mr. MORGAN. That would make it clear.

Mr. ALDRICH. It would make it absolutely clear and cover the point suggested.

Mr. BACON. That is a good suggestion. I simply desire to add to it further that those words be repeated after the word "delivery."

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "sale," in line 14, on page 35:

Every bill or memorandum of sale or agreement to sell.

Mr. ALDRICH. After the word "sale," insert "or agreement to sell."

Mr. BACON. In the twentieth line?

Mr. ALLISON. In the fourteenth line.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the twentieth line first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the word "sales," in line 20, page 34, the words "or agreements to sell."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. "All sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales, or deliveries or transfers."

The SECRETARY. In line 14, page 35, after the word "sale," it is proposed to insert "or agreement to sell."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Secretary to repeat the first amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the word "sale," in line 2, page 35, the words "or of an agreement to transfer or sell."

Mr. ALDRICH. With the other amendments made, I do not think this amendment is necessary. I think it complicates the language used rather than otherwise.

Mr. BACON. I do not care for that particular amendment, just so that this section as amended will cover the point fully. The suggestion I made was subject to the suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That seems to cover it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any amendment proposed to line 14?

Mr. ALLISON. Let the Secretary repeat the words in line 2.

Mr. ALDRICH. That does not go in. I do not understand that the Senator from Georgia asks to have the amendment adopted.

Mr. BACON. I do not ask it at present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn. The proviso as amended is now before the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. Let it be read as it will appear.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There has been no change in the proviso, except in the fourteenth line, where the words "or agreement to sell," after the word "sale," were inserted. The amendment as amended is before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the Secretary read from the semicolon in line 10.

Mr. WOLCOTT. On what page?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 35; so that the effect of the amendment can be seen.

The Secretary read as follows:

And in cases where the transfer is by delivery of the certificate assigned in blank there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale, to which the stamp shall be affixed; and every bill or memorandum of sale or agreement to sell before mentioned shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers.

Mr. ALDRICH. I would suggest that perhaps the better place to put the amendment is in the tenth line, after the word "cases;" so as to read "and in cases of an agreement to sell, or where the transfer is by the delivery of certificates, etc.," there shall be a memorandum or bill to which a stamp shall be attached. I think that covers it.

Mr. BACON. I think it ought to be in both places, because the place where it is already inserted——

Mr. ALDRICH. All right; let it come in in the tenth line.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, page 35, after the word "cases," it is proposed to insert "of an agreement to sell or;" so as to read:

And in cases of an agreement to sell, or where the transfer is by delivery of certificate assigned in blank, there shall be," etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. The amendment in line 14 is withdrawn.

Mr. ALDRICH. That stands.

Mr. BACON. No; that stands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I think there should be some modification in the next paragraph, on page 36—"upon each sale, contract, agreement, or other evidence of a sale of any products or merchandise."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In what line?

Mr. ALDRICH. Lines 4 and 5.

Mr. ALLISON. "Or of a contract or agreement to sell any products." That ought to be repeated.

Mr. BACON. In what line?

Mr. ALLISON. In line 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "agreement," in line 4, page 36, it is proposed to insert the words "to sell;" so as to read:

Upon each sale, contract, agreement to sell, or other evidence of a sale of any products or merchandise, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. That does not quite cover it.

Mr. BACON. Upon reflection the Senator will recognize that that is not the proper place for those words to come in.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not.

Mr. COCKRELL. After the word "of," in line 5, let the words "or agreement to sell" be inserted.

Mr. BACON. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. After "merchandise?"

Mr. COCKRELL. After the word "of."

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. COCKRELL. Insert there the words "agreement to sell any product."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Would it not be more comprehensive to let it come in after the word "each" and before the word "sale" in line 4, "Upon each agreement to sell, or sale, contract, agreement, or other evidence," etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all right. It is better, I think.

Mr. SPOONER. What line?

Mr. ALLISON. Line 4, page 36.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "each," in line 4, page 36, it is proposed to insert the words "agreement to sell or;" so as to read:

Upon each agreement to sell, or sale, contract, agreement, or other evidence of a sale, etc.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then, in line 7, you will have to put in "of said agreement to sell or" before the word "sale."

Mr. SPOONER. Those words are in now.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be passed over for the moment until we can get the proper phraseology to cover it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it is already in there now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be passed over temporarily.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 37, line 8, before the word "drawn," to strike out "exceeding $20;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Bank check, draft, or certificate of deposit not drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money drawn upon or issued by any bank, trust company, or any person or persons, companies, or corporations at sight or on demand, 2 cents.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it is not wise to make the same discrimination in favor of small amounts drawn upon banks as in other cases where you tax notes, so as to let the small depositor——

Mr. CHILTON. Notes are all taxed.

Mr. GORMAN. You exempt in some cases up to $100.

Mr. CHILTON. Promissory notes are all taxed.

Mr. GORMAN. However that may be, would it very seriously affect the scheme of your bill for revenue if that concession were made to the small depositor?

Mr. ALDRICH. It undoubtedly would.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Abut 50 per cent, the statistics show.

Mr. ALDRICH. About $3,000,000 a year; and most of the people who draw small checks are not small depositors. Most of the small checks are drawn by large depositors; that is, in proportion to number.

Mr. GORMAN. Does it affect the drawers on savings banks?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not where there is no written order of withdrawal. If the withdrawal is by book, it would not be affected by this clause. No stamp would be required, and most withdrawals from savings banks are made by withdrawal on the book of the depositor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Maryland—and it will probably appeal to him at once—that under an exception of $20 the law can be evaded by drawing two checks, each less than $20, if one desires to do so.

Mr. GORMAN. The inducement would not be sufficient for that fraud.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the inducement would not be sufficient, it would not seem that the tax is very onerous.

Mr. GORMAN. The tax in the aggregate means considerable to the small holders, in my judgment.

Mr. RAWLINS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Maryland that the former law made an exception and limitation of $20.

Mr. ALLISON. Afterwards it was $10.

Mr. ALDRICH. The first exception was $20, and it was afterwards reduced to $10 and then abolished. The experience of the Government showed that it was better to have no limitation.

Mr. RAWLINS. I understand. There were large concerns which resorted to that habitually. They were prosecuted for violating or evading the law. A case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the court held that, although the firm had habitually resorted to the method of drawing checks of less than $20 for the very purpose of evading the law, it was lawful and they were not subject to any penalties.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask a question in regard to lines 6 and 7. They say:

Bank check, draft, or certificate of deposit not drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money drawn upon or issued by any bank, trust company, or any person or persons, companies, or corporations at sight or on demand, 2 cents.

The next provision is:

Bill of exchange (inland), draft, certificate of deposit drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money, otherwise than at sight or on demand, or any promissory note except bank notes issued for circulation, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents; and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents.

Let us take a case. Here is a bank with a capital of a million dollars. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa to hear this. It has deposits of $17,000,000. If the phrase "bill of exchange (inland)" means drafts drawn by banks on correspondents, 2 cents on $100 or less and 2 cents for each additional $100, this bank would probably have to pay over $30,000 during the entire year. In one place the words are "bank check, draft, or certificate of deposit," and in another the words are "bill of exchange (inland), draft, certificate of deposit." Ought not the language be a little more explicit, so there would not be room for latitude of construction?

Mr. ALLISON. That is copied from the old law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the suggestion is well made by the Senator from Missouri. We could meet it, if those in charge of the bill approve of it, by striking out the word "draft," in line 6, in which case it would be entirely covered by "order for the payment of any sum of money."

Mr. ALDRICH. There are two distinct kinds of drafts. One draft is a demand on sight. The other is one otherwise than at sight.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is known as an inland bill of exchange is a draft as well. You go to the bank and say, "Give me a draft on New York for $100"——

Mr. ALDRICH. A bill of exchange drawn at sight is taxable under the first provision, and a bill of exchange drawn otherwise than at sight is taxable under the second division.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, that is intended.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the second section? Does the Senator say that a bill of exchange comes in under the second section?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly, when drawn otherwise than at sight or on demand.

Mr. COCKRELL. How about drafts?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is the same.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the same. They are two distinct classes of paper, well understood in their use.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand. If the words "bills of exchange"——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Missouri will allow me to make a suggestion. I think lines 6 to 10 relate to drafts and bills payable on demand. From line 11 on it relates to bills not payable on demand.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is nothing said about it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 13 it is distinctly stated "otherwise than at sight or on demand."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 89, striking out the words "exceeding $20."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 37, line 14, after the word "circulation," to insert "and for each renewal of the same;" in line 16, before the word "cents," to strike out "five" and insert "two;" and after the word "cents," to insert:

And for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents.

So as to make the clause read:

Bill of exchange (inland), draft, certificate of deposit drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money, otherwise than at sight or on demand, or any promissory note except bank notes issued for circulation, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents; and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to call attention to one feature of the clause which has just been read:

Bill of exchange (inland), draft, certificate of deposit drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money otherwise than at sight or on demand, or any promissory note except bank notes issued for circulation, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents.

I understand that under that feature every time a man gives a promissory note ranging from one to one hundred dollars it must be stamped with a 2-cent stamp. Otherwise the note could not be sued on and would not be admissible as evidence in court. My idea is that that will be very unpopular legislation, and it will give a great deal of trouble. It will be found that when the farmers and business men come to make these notes they will frequently fail to stamp them, and there will be serious trouble in regard to it. I believe that feature of the bill ought to be stricken out. I move to strike out the words:

Or any promissory note except bank notes issued for circulation, and for each renewal of the same.

So that the clause will read:

Bill of exchange (inland), draft, certificate of deposit drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money, otherwise than at sight or on demand, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents.

It strikes me that that kind of legislation ought not to be resorted to except when the very life of the nation is involved, and that in a war with a little country consisting of 16,000,000 people we can raise enough money to pay the expenses of that war without resorting to such a measure. I believe it will be unpopular, and that the people will demand its repeal. I do not believe that promissory notes, the common business transactions of life, ought to be included.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Georgia is before the Senate. It is to strike out from the text of the bill the words--

Or any promissory note except bank notes issued for circulation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It will be observed that the rate has been reduced from 5 cents a hundred, as it was fixed by the House, to 2 cents a hundred, and that the rate upon the higher amount has been stricken out. It ought to be remembered that promissory notes are given to a much greater extent by people of means than by people who have no means. The burden of this tax will fall upon people of large property rather than upon people of small property.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut just what effect this change will have. The House scheme is to tax at 5 cents on notes not exceeding $100; and then up to $100 and not exceeding $200 10 cents, and so on until a note of twenty-five hundred dollars is reached. What is the effect of the proposed change on notes of larger amounts, say above $1,000?

Mr. ALDRICH. It reduces the House rate a little more than one-half, the House rate being 5 cents in place of 2 cents in the Senate committee's bill.

Mr. GORMAN. That is on the smaller notes. What is the effect on the larger notes?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is substantially the same.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The rate went down as the amount increased.

Mr. ALDRICH. In the House bill the rate proportionately was less than on small notes. We make it the same on each $100. In answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia, I assume the Senate is not going to relieve promissory notes from taxation if it is going to have this tax on other forms.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator if it is true that all promissory notes will be taxed 2 cents?

Mr. ALDRICH. Two cents on the first hundred dollars.

Mr. CLAY. Two cents on the first hundred and then after that the tax is increased?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; the rate of the tax is not increased. There is a proportionate increase, of course, of 2 cents for each hundred dollars.

Mr. CLAY. And every time a small note is renewed an additional tax of 2 cents is also required?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. In my judgment this will be a very unpopular tax and a tax that will give a good deal of trouble.

Mr. ALDRICH. We expect the whole of this tax to give trouble.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the Senator from Georgia ever know of a popular tax?

Mr. CLAY. I think it is a tax that will give a great deal of trouble in the business transactions of life. A great many men will give the notes, and the holders will not be aware of this law and they will have great trouble in collecting them. The notes can not be introduced in evidence at all in a court of justice unless they are stamped.

Mr. WHITE. There is no reason, I imagine, why promissory notes should be exempted, and yet an order for the payment of any sum of money carry a stamp. If the farmer referred to by the Senator from Georgia gave an order for the payment of money, he would have to stamp it, but, according to the Senator's proposition, if the farmer aforesaid should give to another a promissory note or should deal in promissory notes, he is to be exempted. That seems to be a very difficult distinction to sustain.

The amendment of the committee compels those who have larger transactions to pay more. That certainly is just. There can be no burdening in requiring 2 cents upon the renewal of a note. If a note is not to bear any tax when it is renewed, there must be some way of tracing it. There is no particular appearance in a renewed note to indicate that it has been renewed. If I owe a hundred dollars to you, Mr. President, and am unable to pay it and you see fit to allow me to give a new note, that note has all the appearance of the original. It is an original note in effect, and certainly bears upon its face no indication showing that it was renewed.

I do not think that anyone will suffer because of the imposition of this 2-cent tax who is able to sustain other burdens contained in the bill, and admitted to be necessary. It is a fact, I think, that the stamp tax will generally be unpopular. While some taxes may be said to be popular, I have never found anyone who was fond of paying taxes. Certainly a statement of that kind by anyone would seem to create some doubt as to the veracity of the party.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to strike out the words—

Or any promissory note except bank notes issued for circulation.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. I think the suggestion of my colleague is not so much as to the burden of the tax as to the great inconvenience and annoyance of parties who are dealing in very small transactions; and therefore, as the Senate has refused to strike out that clause, I move to amend the clause so as to read:

For a sum exceeding $100 and less than $200, 2 cents.

And then so on with the balance.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that according to the agreement under which we are proceeding the committee amendments are to be disposed of first. The Senator can offer that amendment later.

Mr. BACON. I have only offered it in view of the fact that the Senate has already acted on the other proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not raise the point on the amendment of the Senator's colleague.

Mr. BACON. I will reserve it, then.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 37, in line 14, to insert, after the word "circulation," the words "and for each renewal of the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 16, after the word "dollars," to strike out "five" and insert "two;" so as to read, "for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents."

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to suggest right here that no such agreement as the Senator from Rhode Island has just announced can certainly be carried out. We must have the privilege of amending the amendments as we proceed. It is the only way we can deal with the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Undoubtedly. But the amendment suggested by the junior Senator from Georgia was an amendment to the text of the bill; and according to the agreement under which we are proceeding, as I understand it, it would not be in order until the committee amendments were disposed of.

Mr. GORMAN. But that amendment was voted upon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not raise the point, because I did not think it was of enough consequence.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not think the point ought to be raised. I think in dealing with a paragraph of this kind, where a question is raised, the only way is to move to amend it at once. Otherwise we shall have to go back and debate it over perhaps two or three times.

Mr. ALDRICH. The agreement of the Senate was the ordinary agreement which always applies to appropriation bills and which everyone very well understands. It was distinct and definite that the committee amendments should first be disposed of, and then the bill would be open to other amendments. Of course the committee amendments are themselves subject to amendment, but amendments to the text of the House bill are not in order until after the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator will see at once that we shall lose time by pursuing that course and then coming back and fighting it all over again.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have been trying so far as I could and so far as I had any influence to get ahead without these discussions.

Mr. GORMAN. They are going on, however.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It seems to me the proposition of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is practically an amendment to the Senate committee amendment and that it would save time to allow it to be disposed of at this time. The committee propose to change the text of the bill by laying a tax of 2 cents instead of a tax of 5 cents. That is what is involved in this very amendment. The Senator from Georgia wants to limit that provision so that it shall apply only to notes exceeding $100, and it seems to me clearly to be an amendment to the amendment. While technically it proposes to strike out a part of the text as the bill came from the House, nevertheless it is a change of the amendment the committee propose in the text of the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. It is practically an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia being acted upon.

Mr. BACON. I will then offer the amendment. In line 15, on page 37, I move to strike out the word "not" and to insert after the word "dollars," in the sixteenth line, the words "and less than $200;" so that it will read:

For a sum exceeding $100 and less than $200, 2 cents.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should to ask the Senator from Georgia a question. If under his proposition a man should want to borrow $150, he might give two notes of $75 each, payable after thirty days. Would he have to stamp either of them under the amendment?

Mr. BACON. I do not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Suppose a man goes to a bank to borrow $150. He wants to borrow it for thirty days. Under the amendment of the Senator, if he gave a note for $150 he would have to put a 2-cent stamp on it; but instead of doing that he does what is equally convenient and very common, he gives two notes of $75 each, both payable at the same time, in the same bank, at the same place and the same hour, a part of the same transaction, and by giving the two notes he does not have to stamp either. Is not that the case?

Mr. BACON. The Senator is correct as to that point. However, it may be possible to put in additional words which will cover a case of that kind, where there is an attempt to evade the law.

I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to what I think is the main purpose here. In remote rural districts the transactions are very small. The people in many of them are very ignorant, and they have their little neighborhood interchange of five and ten and fifteen dollar obligations to pay. Those are the transactions that my colleague has in mind. This provision will bring trouble in having that class of people unnecessarily dragged into court because of the unintentional omission to observe the requirements of the law in fixing a stamp to their little rude country obligations in their ordinary small interchange of products and things of that kind or the loan of a very small amount of money.

Mr. WOLCOTT. My own impression is that the making of that exception would be an enormous detriment to the revenues to be derived under the bill. Small notes under $100 are by no means limited to people who are poor. The whole purpose of this law has been to create a tax for war revenues, and there has been an effort made by the committee to make the tax small. All taxes are vexatious and annoying. It has been the effort to make no tax financially burdensome, but to leave it so that every citizen of this country is made to realize that he is putting a stamp upon every transaction of life which is evidenced upon paper for the purpose of paying the expenses of this war.

There are great advantages, Mr. President, in letting the people in rural districts, where their transactions are small, have their patriotism fed and their attention called to the fact that they in turn are helping to bear the burdens of this war. It is not vexatious. It is upon the stump vexatious, but it is not financially burdensome to anybody. When the man gives a note for $15, he will put a 2-cent stamp upon it, and I do not care if he lives in the farthest back county in Georgia, it is not going to hurt him financially to put a 2-cent stamp on a fifteen-dollar note. He may think it is burdensome when election comes around and he is made to feel that he is a cruelly oppressed man, but in the ordinary relations of life a universal stamp of 2 cents on all the business affairs of life is not in the slightest degree burdensome.

Mr. BACON. I do not desire to go into the question of politics in this matter.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It seemed to me, with all due respect to the Senator, that the objection must be political and not financial.

Mr. BACON. The Senator entirely misconstrues my purpose. I do not know what prompts him to do so, but still he does.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Because I realize the breadth of character of the Senator, and I could not imagine that he believed anybody would be financially distressed by it.

Mr. BACON. Different conditions in Colorado, where there are not so much backwoods as in Georgia, may be the reason for it. I desire to say to the Senator, however, that if the backwoods of Colorado are like the backwoods of Georgia, the people of those communities have something very much more serious than 2-cent stamps to remind them of the war; because if the Senator will call the roll of those who go to the front to fight the battles of the existing war, he will find that the rural districts are, to say the least of it, as fully represented by the men they send to the front as the cities.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is not the slightest doubt of that. That is also an excellent argument upon the stump; but it is also true that the people who are still at home in those rural districts have the right and the privilege of paying their share of maintaining the burdens of the war.

Mr. BACON. They will pay it. Mr. President, there is no doubt about that. Under our system of taxation they are paying very much more than their proportion. I venture to make that remark, even in the presence of the fear that I may again elicit from the Senator from Colorado the suggestion that it is a stump declaration and not one fitted for the august presence in which we now stand.

But, Mr. President, leaving that out of the case and coming back to business, I suggest that possibly the addition of the words after the amendment which I have already suggested, "not negotiated in any bank," might cure the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Colorado. The clause would then read in this way:

For a sum exceeding $100 and less than $200, not negotiated in any bank.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We are in this bill imposing upon bankers a license tax of a hundred dollars; under the amendment moved by the other side of the Chamber we are taxing their deposits; and I will ask the Senator if he desires to make it so that it will be more burdensome and expensive to borrow money at a bank, which is a place for the loaning of money, than to go to an individual and borrow money?

Mr. BACON. The great purpose is not to save the small amount of 2 cents; it is to save the inconvenience in the very small transactions in the rural districts, where it is not convenient for the people to do these things. I made the suggestion in deference to the apprehension expressed by the Senator from Colorado that advantage would be taken of the provision to cut up an amount which was intended to be embraced in a note and make two notes where otherwise only one would be made.

Transactions of that magnitude are most frequently had with banks. The burden would still be borne by the party who made the note. Everybody knows that the maker of a note will have to pay for the stamp. I think with that modification, the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado, which was certainly very pertinent, and which is really the only objection to this amendment that I can see, would be in a large degree met.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest to the Senator that if a note is given as a negotiable note it may go into bank at any time. Are you, then, going to put a 2-cent stamp upon it when the bank takes it or are you going to leave it out? I must say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia, that it is no more burdensome in a back county in Georgia or in a rural district to put a 2-cent stamp on a promissory note than it is to put it on a letter. They can put a 2-cent postage stamp on a letter, if they write there, and they may just as well, and I think with no more inconvenience, put a 2-cent stamp on a note. I suggest, if the Senator wants to relieve the rural communities from inconvenience in the matter of stamps, they be not required to stamp letters. There is no more inconvenience in the one case than in the other.

Every post-office is going to have these stamps for sale. You can buy these stamps in the most remote district in the United States. There will be no place where you can not buy them. You can buy revenue stamps just as easily as you can buy postage stamps; one stamp has the same price as the other. It does not seem to me that the argument of inconvenience has weight in that view. It is no more burdensome to lick a stamp to put on a promissory note than to lick a stamp to put on a letter.

Mr. BACON. I understand the bill does not require that the stamps shall be sold in each post-office, but in only such as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; in all the post-offices.

Mr. ALDRICH. He can designate all the post-offices.

Mr. BACON. I understand the bill does have that phraseology.

Mr. ALDRICH. It allows him to designate every post-office in the United States, and he would unquestionably designate every post-office where there was any demand for stamps.

Mr. BACON. I do not think the comparison of postage stamps with revenue stamps is a legitimate one. The postage stamps relate to a system which is permanent, with which everybody is familiar and knows all about, whereas the system of revenue stamps is something which is extraordinary, made for an emergency, with which the people would take a very long time to become familiar.

I am very frank to say that if this stamp tax should become a law, to which I am not altogether favorable, I should be afraid to sign any paper without going and consulting a book to see what stamp I had to put upon it; and even if I should become so familiar, and if other Senators here become so familiar, with the provisions of this law that such an investigation would not be required, that is not going to be the case with the people who live in what the Senator from Colorado persists in calling the backwoods. I am referring to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], as I see the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] smiles at me.

Mr. TELLER. There are backwoods.

Mr. BACON. And there are good people in those backwoods, too.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I did not say a word about backwoods. I said "back counties."

Mr. BACON. Well, back counties. Back counties in our part of the country contain a good many woods. It may not be so in Colorado.

But, Mr. President, this is not a question of burden; it is not a question of 2 cents; it is a question of the convenience of this class of people, their freedom from annoyance, their freedom from liability for failure to comply with a law of this character. I do not think that the revenue which would be lost to the Government by simply exempting promissory notes under $100 in amount would amount to a great deal. I should like, if I am in error about that, to have the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Rhode Island as to what it would be.

Mr. ALDRICH. To show the danger of amending a bill in this desultory way, I will say that the change suggested by the Senator from Georgia would be so far-reaching as to practically nullify the stamp provisions of the preceding paragraph. It would apply to all taxes and all orders for the payment of money, to all drafts and all bills of exchange less than $100, and if drawn at one day's sight it would allow them to evade the payment of any tax whatever.

Mr. BACON. How?

Mr. ALDRICH. Because it applies to all those, as well as to promissory notes.

Mr. BACON. The Senator's criticism may be correct, but I will simply state that that is not my design.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope that before the Senator offers his amendment either he or his colleague will get it in such shape as he desires that we may know exactly what we are supposed to vote on. Under the old law, and I never heard that in the back counties of Georgia or anywhere else there was any trouble about it, this instrument paid a tax of 5 cents. I am not sure that the back counties of Georgia were then paying any tax, but I never heard anywhere any great criticism of the amount of the tax placed on a promissory note.

Mr. GORMAN. The statement of the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill has not been controverted, so far as I have heard, that the bill as it has been reported from the Committee on Finance would produce a very much greater revenue than is intended to be levied. If that be so, I take it that if the tax on gross receipts of corporations and the legacy and succession tax remain on the bill there will be no earthly necessity for a stamp tax on notes, which unquestionably bears harshly and heavily upon people generally away from the centers of trade and commerce.

The Senator from Rhode Island says he never knew of any trouble in that respect. I have known of it. If the Senator will only look back at the records and the debates, not on partisan lines at all, he will find that there was a universal demand to relieve the people from this very annoying way of levying money, growing, as I said, out of the want of facilities in the interior and in the small towns.

I have no objection to having this provision perfected, but I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill if it is the intention to eliminate any part of this scheme that comes to us from the committee, and whether this provision in regard to stamp taxes on notes and so on should not be eliminated, if the tax on corporations is kept in the bill? I should like to know for my own information at this stage in the consideration of the bill. If the committee have come to no conclusion on the subject, of course the Senator will not be able to give a definite answer to my question.

Mr. ALLISON. If I understand the Senator's question, it is whether we intend to retain finally each of these provisions if we insert all of them. My own judgment is that if amendments 177 to 180 shall be included, a very large number of taxes included elsewhere could be very well dispensed with, but I take it for granted that we are not likely to do that. However, I know of no way of getting on with the bill and ascertaining whether we will or not, except to go on as we are going, taking each of these items as they come. I should myself like very much to know whether it is the intention of the Senate to include these amendments, which I think will yield a very large revenue. I estimated it the other day at $70,000,000. I may have put it possibly a little too high, but it will approach that sum. Therefore we could exempt these little notes, if we put that in, without any detriment to the revenue. But for the present I think we had better go on and keep in what we can and see what the judgment of the Senate will be as to the larger matters when we come to them.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that we must go on, but I supposed that since the discussion began and the facts had been presented to us, probably the committee itself had agreed; and I think we should know it in voting upon these matters. For instance, I want to vote to eliminate any tax on notes described by the Senator from Georgia, if I can do it safely and leave revenue enough to the Government. I consider it one of the most objectionable taxes that is contained in the provisions of this bill. If the Finance Committee, with the light that has been thrown on the subject, will inform those of us who have not the opportunity to get the information, what is to be insisted on to raise the $150,000,000, I should like to know, and if it can be done, as I said, without the stamp tax, then I want the stamp tax to go out now.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, there has been no great light, so far as I know, disclosed by the debate thus far upon the particular point now suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. The Senator says he wants to relieve promissory notes. Some of us want to relieve some other taxes which are in this bill, but after all I think it would be wiser to go on and do the best we can. If in the end it is found there is a great body of taxation thrown in here, it will enable us to eliminate from the bill Schedule A and all the burdens which are put upon the people who deal with banks or who deal with each other; then we can do that if that is thought wise. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] made the other day what I think was a very good suggestion, that at some time before the completion of this bill we ought to test the sense of the Senate upon these sections.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator knows very well, I think, because he has studied this bill with care, that if we include these taxes upon bank deposits and upon gross receipts, as provided for in the bill, we can go back and eliminate other taxes. I should think the first taxes to eliminate—though I do not wish to enter into that discussion now—would be the tax on receipts. If we insert a tax on gross receipts, then we should eliminate the tax on individual receipts, which would be a considerable tax.

Now we can go along, I think, without any very great difficulty and pick up here and there eliminations after we shall have inserted these great items, if we do insert them, and we may then agree with the Senator that the tax on promissory notes may be eliminated and also the tax on bank checks as well as on gross receipts, or we may think that Schedule B will be unnecessary at that time and we can eliminate cordials and proprietary articles, or some of them, which are provided for in Schedule B; but I do not see how we can pause now and eliminate each tax as we go along, beginning with promissory notes and then taking up bills of exchange, drafts, etc., and in that way exclude in order to make it absolutely necessary that we shall include.

I should like to have a free expression on the whole proposition which is presented here by the majority of the committee before I am willing to commence the process of exclusion.

Mr. GORMAN. Very good. Mr. President, that is the very point that I hoped to get the Senator to finally, and it was the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado several days ago. Why not begin at once upon the three great propositions which are brought in here by the Committee on Finance, the tax on the gross receipts of corporations, the increased tax on banks, and the succession tax? And then we can proceed with the balance of the bill intelligently, wisely, and without loss of time. I trust the Senators in charge of the bill will agree that we shall proceed in that way. Why not take up the question of the tax on the gross receipts of corporations now? The three items I have named control what ought to be in this bill.

It is idle to discuss the matter in detail as we are doing now. Of course if what both the Senators from Georgia have presented in regard to this annoying tax to the people engaged in small business in the country should be eliminated, and if the corporations are not to pay a greater amount of tax or a sufficient amount to enable us to relieve the ordinary people of the country, the sooner we know it the better.

I trust the chairman of the committee will now agree to go to that section and begin with it now and let us discuss it and dispose of it.

Mr. CLAY. I want to ask the Senator from Maryland, Is it not true that, under this bill, when a party gives or renews a promissory note and neglects to place the stamp upon it, he is liable to fine and imprisonment?

Mr. GORMAN. Not to imprisonment. Yesterday, on my motion, the Senate struck out the provision as to imprisonment. Such a person will be subject to a fine of not more than $100; but the imprisonment clause has been stricken out on that class of obligations by the vote of the Senate yesterday.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, there is no difficulty about this question at all. We ought to proceed with the consideration of this bill as we proceed with the consideration of every other bill. If the amendment which the Senator from Maryland has referred to could be adopted when it was reached, it would be easy enough to go back to the provisions which conflict with it and strike them out, either in the Senate or in Committee of the Whole, by general consent.

I assume that no bill will pass Congress which does not contain a stamp tax upon bank checks and upon articles of that kind. This section simply provides for putting a stamp tax upon bills of exchange, drafts, certificates of deposit drawing interest, orders for the payment of any sum of money, and on promissory notes. If you exclude promissory notes, you will only change the form of the obligation into a draft, payable at one day's sight, or something of that sort. There will not be in terms any promissory notes given, but they will be all drafts or some form of obligation to evade the payment of the tax.

I think we might just as well meet this question now as at any other time, and I am as ready now to vote on the proposition of the Senator from Georgia as I shall be at any time. If we go on with the consideration of the bill, passing over for the time being those taxes which are imposed on telegraph companies or express companies and the stamp tax upon bills of lading, until we act upon the proposition to tax corporations generally, we shall make all the progress we ought to make, and make it in a much more orderly and much more satisfactory way, in my judgment, than we shall by pursuing any other course.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I desire to say as to the tax on promissory notes that I should like to remind the Senator from Maryland that that is a tax which exists in a heavy degree in every civilized country in the whole world except in the United States.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask a question for information?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he thinks we could get along without the stamp taxes if a corporation tax were put in the bill? Could we otherwise raise sufficient revenue?

Mr. ALDRICH. Personally I do not think we could, but that is simply a matter of individual judgment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Why not?

Mr. ALDRICH. I assume that the scheme offered by the majority of the committee will never be adopted by the Senate as a whole, and I assume that it will be necessary to preserve some part of the stamp taxes; and if we are to preserve any, we certainly ought to preserve this paragraph.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the primary difficulty we have to deal with here is that the committee are divided as to the amount which should be raised by the bill. The majority of the committee thought we ought to have $150,000,000, while the minority of the committee thought we ought to have much less than that. I have not been able to find out exactly what the minority thought we ought to have, but I will assume it was about what the House bill provided. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said he thought it would be $100,000,000, which is some $12,000,000 above the House estimate.

If we are to determine what taxes we will put in this bill, as suggested by the Senator from Maryland, it seems to me that we should first determine how large a sum we ought to raise. Shall it be $150,000,000 or shall it be $100,000,000 or $200,000,000, or what shall it be?

I do not myself believe that this bill as it came from the committee is going to raise any such amount of money as the Senator from Iowa believes will result from it. I will say that my judgment on that proposition is probably exactly as good as that of the Senator from Iowa, because he was guessing and I am guessing and everybody else who speaks upon this subject is guessing as to the amount. There is no way of determining exactly the amount which this bill will produce. It will largely depend upon the condition of the general business of the country, whether it is prosperous and active, or whether it is in a depressed state. So you can not tell whether the amount will be $200,000,000 or $175,000,000 or $150,000,000.

I think there is only one way to go to work to determine this question, and that is to put in this bill such things as are the legitimate subjects of taxation, keeping in mind all the time that there should be a general distribution, so far as possible, so that it will be equitable and bear easily and not too heavily upon any particular industry or any particular persons.

We went through the experiment of the stamp tax and of other taxes during the civil war. As my colleague has said, every country in the world is dealing with that subject more or less and to a greater extent than we are, and while stamp taxes are disagreeable, so are all others. Taxes upon consumption are very unpopular in some sections and with some people.

I think we are not meeting in this bill what is a demand, and a just and equitable demand, which the people make, and that is that the wealth of the country shall bear its share of the burdens. There seems to be very little disposition to do that. The bill proceeds upon the theory that we are to collect a large amount of money and to collect it in small sums.

The Senator said the other day that one of the items will produce $75,000,000. If so, that probably is more than is fair in proportion to the amount to be raised, although $75,000,000 collected will not be burdensome, distributed as it will be distributed. I do not know what the Senate means to do about this. Are we to have $200,000,000 revenue or are we to have $100,000,000 revenue? I am in favor of $200,000,000; I am in favor of a bill which will produce revenue enough to pay practically, without going into debt, the cost of this war. I am in favor of making this bill a revenue bill, not for this war alone, but as a preparation for the next war.

I know of course, Mr. President, it is said that we are not going to have another war. I have heard within four months on this floor more than one Senator declare—generally when the doors were closed—that there was no possibility of a war in this country and that we need not make any preparations for one. We have discovered that that was a mistake. We will get through with this war without much trouble if the signs of the times are as I think they are, and if they appear to other people as they do to me. We shall, however, have a worse difficulty to meet in a few years than that which now confronts us. We all know how we have felt humiliated and annoyed at our lack of coast-defense preparation, at our lack of ships, and at our lack of munitions of war, which every great nation ought to have in keeping at all times.

I wish the committee would get together, if they can; and, if they can not, I wish the Senate would get together in some shape so that they may determine how much revenue we ought to raise. If we can determine that question, then we can determine very much better upon what items we are going to raise the necessary revenue or whether we are going to put the burden upon the next generation.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe in dividing the burden.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Illinois says he believes in dividing the burden. I do not believe in dividing it at all. The American people are rich enough to pay in this generation and in this year the cost of this little war with the 7 by 9 country with whom we are now contending. We may come in a few years to a condition where we can not do that. We may then be contending with powers much greater than Spain; and the chances are that we shall be. Then we may be compelled to run in debt; but we are abundantly able, without unduly imposing upon the people of this country, to raise sufficient revenue to pay inside of eighteen months or two years every dollar which this war will cost.

The people of the United States will not object to it if the taxation is righteously and properly laid. If all interests are taxed, if all classes of the people everywhere are compelled to bear a portion of this burden, there will be no complaint. There will be inconveniences, of course, in putting stamps upon notes and receipts; but these are little inconveniences which we can not afford to stop here to consider; we can not afford to eliminate from this system all the notes of a hundred dollars, or any other sum, any more than we can checks of $10 or $20.

Taxation, Mr. President, is burdensome anyway, and if we are to raise but $200,000,000 by this bill, the taxation will not be burdensome. We will not be taxed as Europe is taxed, and the National Government will not tax as the State governments are taxing. If there is any advantage in this system of government of ours, if there is any merit in what we are doing in trying to extend the area of freedom, then we ought to be willing, it seems to me, to pay the taxes now.

I am in favor of leaving in this bill everything that is in it; and if I had my way, I would put some things in it that are not in it now. I presume, before we get through with it, I shall have an opportunity to vote for some things which are not now in the bill that I think ought to be in the bill, and thus increase the revenues by putting a tax upon those who will escape taxation under this bill as it stands and who are abundantly able to bear it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, looking over this matter, I feel I do not exactly understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia, and I would be obliged if the Chair would order it to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CANNON in the chair). The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. BACON. In view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] as to the effect of the amendment, I have eliminated promissory notes, as at first proposed by me, and I have changed the phraseology somewhat, intending to effect the same purpose originally indicated; but it is necessary to divide the paragraph on that account. So I propose to amend, after the word "demand," in line 13, on page 37, by inserting the words "for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents;" so as to make it applicable to the class of obligations referred to in the preceding lines. Then I propose to strike out the word "or," after the word "demand," and insert the word "and" in the same line; and in line 16 to insert the words "and less than $200, not negotiated in any bank."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator restate the amendment? I did not catch it exactly.

Mr. BACON. I will hand it to the Senator. The purpose is simply to exempt notes under $100 in amount from that tax, without affecting any of the other classes of obligations stated in that paragraph.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the man who holds a promissory note, who owns it, I presume is supposed to take care of the placing of a stamp upon it. Certainly he will have to do so when he proceeds to collect it. Now, whether it be in the backwoods, or the back counties, or the back trails, or anywhere else, the possession and holding and ownership of a promissory note is no evidence of impecuniosity. It seems to me that there are a great many people in different portions of the United States, in the large cities, who deal in small transactions at very high rates of interest, and who hold small promissory notes—various persons who, perhaps, are not any better able to pay than those referred to previously in this debate—and on principle I can not see why there should be any exemption in this case. Of course the stamp tax is general; and, as has often been said, it is exceedingly onerous. If we could get along without any of it, it would be much more pleasant; but whether we can or not depends upon what is done with this bill hereafter; and I presume, as stated by several Senators, that the process of elimination may be entered into if we find that we are to raise more money than the necessities of the Government require—a contingency, however, which I do not believe will arise.

Mr. BACON. I ask to have read at the desk the amendment as I have modified it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 13, after the word "demand," it is proposed to insert "for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents;" in the same line, before the words "any promissory note," to strike out "or" and insert "and;" in line 15, after the word "sum," to strike out "not," and after the word "dollars," in line 16, to insert "and less than $200, not to be negotiated in any bank;" so as to make the clause read:

Bill of exchange (inland), draft, certificate of deposit drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money, otherwise than at sight or on demand, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents; and any promissory note except bank notes issued for circulation, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum exceeding $100 and less than $200, not to be negotiated in any bank, 2 cents.

Mr. ALDRICH. I inquire how much is to be paid if it is negotiated in a bank?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. CLAY. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PETTUS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is absent, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. RAWLINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], and so withhold my vote.

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORRILL (after having voted in the negative). I understand the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] has not voted, and therefore I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. GEAR. As announced, I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. With the consent of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which will permit the Senator from Alabama and myself to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PETTUS. Under that arrangement, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ALLEN. In this connection, I desire to announce the pair of the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Bacon,	Clay,	Lindsay,	Turley.
Bate,	Daniel,	McLaurin,
Berry,	Gorman,	Mills,
Cannon,	Gray,	Mitchell,

NAYS—41.

Hanna,	Mantle,	Proctor,	Wellington.
Hoar,	Martin,	Quay,
Jones, Nev.	Money,	Rawlins,

So Mr. BACON'S amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in line 16, page 37, after the word "dollars," to strike out "five" and insert "two;" and in the same line, after the word "cents," to insert:

And for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents. And the provisions of this paragraph shall apply as well to money orders issued by the Government of the United States, and the price of such money orders shall be increased by a sum equal to the value of the stamps herein provided for.

So as to read:

Bill of exchange (inland), draft, certificate of deposit drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money, otherwise than at sight or on demand, or any promissory note except bank notes issued for circulation, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents; and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents. And the provisions of this paragraph shall apply as well to money orders issued by the Government of the United States, and the price of such money orders shall be increased by a sum equal to the value of the stamps herein provided for.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to have from the committee some explanation why Government orders are to be taxed.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Government postal authorities issue money orders, for which they charge certain rates. The express companies and certain banking institutions also issue money orders. Under the provisions of the bill as it passed the House the private institutions would have to pay the tax and the persons who bought such orders from the Government would escape it. This simply provides that the same tax shall be paid upon Government orders that is paid upon individual orders. The individual who sends the money order pays for the stamp.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, after line 22, on page 37, to strike out down to and including line 20, on page 38, as follows:

Exceeding $100 and not exceeding $200, 10 cents.
Exceeding $200 and not exceeding $350, 15 cents.
Exceeding $350 and not exceeding $500, 20 cents.
Exceeding $500 and not exceeding $750, 30 cents.
Exceeding $750 and not exceeding $1,000, 40 cents.
Exceeding $1,000 and not exceeding $2,500, $1.
Exceeding $2,500 and not exceeding $5,000, $1.50.
And for every $2,500, or part of $2,500 in excess of $5,000, $1: Provided, That upon promissory notes and other evidences of debt secured to be paid by mortgage, or by deed of trust upon real or personal property, or by any other conveyance of real or personal property intended as security for the payment of such promissory notes or evidences of debt, 25 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 21, after the word "orders," to insert "by telegraph or otherwise;" and in line 1, page 39, after the word "pay," to strike out "the same rate of tax as inland bills of exchange or promissory notes" and insert "for a sum not exceeding $100, 4 cents, and for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 4 cents;" so as to read:

Bill of exchange (foreign) or letter of credit (including orders by telegraph or otherwise for the payment of money issued by express or other companies or any person or persons), drawn in but payable out of the United States, if drawn singly or otherwise than in a set of three or more, according to the custom of merchants and bankers, shall pay for a sum not exceeding $100, 4 cents, and for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 4 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 6, before the words "or more," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "and fifty;" in line 11, before the word "cents," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" and in the same line, after the word "cents," to insert "and for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents;" so as to make the paragraph read:

If drawn in sets of two or more: For every bill of each set, where the sum made payable shall not exceed $100, or the equivalent thereof, in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard of value fixed by the United States, 2 cents; and for each $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 13, on page 39, to strike out down to and including line 7, on page 40, as follows:

Above $150 and not above $200, 5 cents.
Above $200 and not above $500, 10 cents.
Above $500 and not above $1,000, 15 cents.
Above $1,000 and not above $1,500, 20 cents.
Above $1,500 and not above $2,250, 30 cents.
Above $2,250 and not above $3,500, 50 cents.
Above $3,500 and not above $5,000, 70 cents.
Above $5,000 and not above $7,500, $1.
And for every $2,500, or part thereof, in excess of $7,500, 30 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out from line 12 to line 21, inclusive, on page 40, as follows:

Express: Upon all boxes, bales, packages, articles, or bundles carried exceeding 3 miles, for the transportation of which any express company, or carrier, or person whose occupation is to act as such, receives a compensation of not over 25 cents, 1 cent.

When such compensation exceeds the sum of 25 cents and not over $1, 2 cents.

When one or more packages are sent to the same address at the same time, and the compensation therefor exceeds $1, 5 cents.

And insert:

Express and freight: It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation or person whose occupation is to act as such, by rail or water or by both rail and water, to issue to the shipper or consignor, or his agent, or person tendering goods for transportation, a bill of lading, manifest, receipt, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment received for carriage and transportation, whether in bulk or in boxes, bales, packages, bundles, or not so inclosed or included; and there shall be duly attached and canceled, as is in this act provided, to each of said bills of lading, manifests, receipts, or other memorandum, and to each duplicate thereof, a stamp of the value of 1 cent. Any failure to issue such bill of lading, manifest, receipt, or other memorandum shall subject such railroad company, carrier, express company, or corporation or person to a penalty of $50 for each offense, and no such bill of lading, manifest, receipt, or other memorandum shall be used in evidence unless it shall be duly stamped as aforesaid.

Mr. SEWELL. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if any estimate has been made as to the amount this provision will bring? It provides for a duplication of taxation by taxing a bill of lading and the receipt also. Is that the intention of the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. I made a statement the other day which included these items. I have a memorandum here. It will yield more than five or six million dollars. Of course it is impossible to secure accurate data, because the number of bills of lading is not accessible, so far as I know, in any statistical report; and therefore it must be, in a measure, an estimate. An officer of a railway company, known to me personally, happened to be here, and I asked him what he thought would be the daily number of bills of lading on the line of road which he represents—6,000 miles, perhaps, in all. After making some examination, he wrote me that it would amount to $75,000 daily. So I should say that this provision as amended will alone yield from eight to ten million dollars—probably $10,000,000.

Mr. SEWELL. I would ask the chairman of the committee if it is the intention to tax both the bill of lading and the receipt from the same party? The language of the bill would do it.

Mr. ALLISON. The receipt is for money. The bill is for the delivery of property. So there is not a tax upon the receipt——

Mr. SEWELL. But the receipt and the bill of lading are from the same individual. Take a shipment to a station, and a bill of lading is attached and a receipt, too. Are you going to tax both?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course they are the same thing in that particular instance, but we have here another bracket or item which taxes all receipts. That, of course, is not a double tax on bills of lading as well as receipts. A bill of lading is supposed to be a receipt for property.

Mr. SEWELL. The real state of the case is this: You take a shipment of goods from a station and a bill of lading is made out to follow the goods, and also a receipt. Are both to be taxed?

Mr. ALLISON. They are not.

Mr. SEWELL. I think the language ought to be changed somewhat, then.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think there is no objection to striking out the word "receipt" in the third line on page 41. It is all covered by the next provision.

Mr. SEWELL. I shall be perfectly satisfied if it merely provides for one stamp for each transaction.

Mr. ALDRICH. There certainly will be no objection to striking out the word "receipt" in the third line where it first occurs at the beginning of the line.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the committee let the amendment go over until I can frame an amendment or they can?

Mr. ALDRICH. That fixes it beyond any question.

Mr. SEWELL. Very good.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not necessary to have the amendment go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, page 41, it is proposed to strike out the word "receipt."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I would suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that on page 41, line 11, after the word "railroad," the word "steamboat" should be inserted, so as to cover the different companies mentioned in the beginning of the paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

The SECRETARY. After the word "railroad," in line 11, on page 41, it is proposed to insert "or steamboat;" so as to read:

Shall subject such railroad or steamboat company, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senators in charge of the bill to the fact that the penalty in this case for a refusal to use a stamp is only a fine, which I think is right, whereas in every other case the person is subjected to imprisonment where the stamp is not used.

Mr. CHILTON. It is not a failure to use the stamp. It is failure to issue a bill of lading. This penalty is a different thing.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is correct.

Mr. GORMAN. In order to escape taxation the bill of lading will not be issued. So the principle is the same.

Mr. CHILTON. The other clause would apply to the corporation for failure to use the stamp. This is a double penalty, or it amounts to a double penalty. It is intended to force the corporation to issue a written paper.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 8, after the word "manifests," I move to strike out "receipts;" in line 10, after the word "manifest," I move to strike out "receipt;" and in line 14, after the word "manifest," I move to strike out "receipt."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. Amendment No. 101 runs down to and includes line 14, on page 42, and I ask that the whole may be read before a vote is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued. The remainder of the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 41, it is proposed to insert:

> Telephone messages: It shall also be the duty, under like conditions and penalties, of every person, firm, or corporation owning or operating any telephone line or lines to give a receipt for every message or conversation transmitted over the said line or lines from any public or pay station thereon for which a charge of 15 cents or more is imposed, to which receipt shall be attached an adhesive stamp of the value of 1 cent——

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the committee in regard to the paragraph relating to the tax on telephone messages. Is it the Senator's construction that the receipt provided for here, to be given to the sender of the message, is to be given at the time of sending the message, as in the case of telegrams?

Mr. ALLISON. I so understand.

Mr. MALLORY. There are some cases in which that is an impossibility, where, for instance, with a telephone company in a city like Washington, a request comes over the wire to connect the speaker with the long-distance telephone. There it would be impossible to give a receipt at the time. I am informed that that is a very large part of the business. If it is contemplated that there shall be kept a monthly account with subscribers who use the long-distance telephone, that could be done, but as the paragraph is now it seems to me to require the telephone company to do something that is impossible.

Mr. ALLISON. This does not apply to individual telephone transmissions. It merely applies to special messages, where there is a pay telephone.

Mr. MALLORY. I understand that; but take the case of an individual subscriber to a telephone company who wishes to have his line switched onto a long-distance telephone in the city of New York, for instance.

Mr. ALLISON. Does he pay anything for it?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly he has to pay extra for it.

Mr. ALLISON. On the long distance?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. If he wants to use the long-distance telephone, he pays on the message. This is only intended to apply to pay stations, of which there are three or four thousand in New York.

Mr. GORMAN. I may go to a pay-telephone office on Pennsylvania avenue and call up Baltimore. I ask the office to call up Baltimore for me. The charge is 50 cents. How is it possible for me to get a receipt for the amount I pay? I now put the money in the slot, and there is no process by which I can get a receipt or by which the telephone company can give me one.

Mr. ALLISON. Will they not know somewhere that the Senator has called up Baltimore and paid 50 cents for it?

Mr. GORMAN. At the central office.

Mr. ALLISON. They are required to keep a memorandum.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I explain that, so far as the telephone companies are concerned, the stamp is not affixed at all by the sender or receiver of the message, but the tax is paid according to monthly statements, which are certified by the company to the collector of internal revenue.

Mr. GORMAN. This paragraph does not so read.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator will find it on page 42.

Mr. GORMAN. Explain to me what is the object of this provision:

> It shall also be the duty, under like conditions and penalties, of every person, firm, or corporation owning or operating any telephone line or lines to give a receipt for every message or conversation transmitted over the said line or lines from any public or pay station thereon, for which a charge of 15 cents or more is imposed, to which receipt shall be attached an adhesive stamp of the value of 1 cent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is at pay stations. At pay stations a receipt can always be given, for there is some one in charge of the pay station.

Mr. GORMAN. No; the process now is to drop your money in the box——

Mr. WOLCOTT. In the slot.

Mr. GORMAN. In the slot. The central office notifies you how much it is—10 cents, 20 cents, or 50 cents.

Mr. WOLCOTT. They will have to modify that regulation at the pay stations, so as to give a receipt and affix the stamp. At other than pay stations they make certification to the collector of internal revenue monthly of the number of messages, exceeding 15 cents, other than those upon which stamps are affixed.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that the provision might be changed so that the telephone company would exhibit their accounts every month to the collector of internal revenue, and not attempt to force them to give a receipt in each individual case. It is not like bills of lading on a railroad, where that is the ordinary transaction and where they make them in duplicate.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator had looked upon the next page he would have seen that at stations where mechanical devices are used for the reception of the money they must make a return and pay on the return and not stamp receipts.

Mr. GORMAN. Why not, if the companies are to be assessed in this way, let the accounts be sworn to and returned monthly?

Mr. ALDRICH. The public pay station is easily regulated the other way.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator can go into a bank or a railroad office, not a public pay station, and it is not conducted in that way. The privilege is given to gentlemen without charge, as a matter of convenience.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If I do not interrupt the Senator from Maryland too much, I will say you are forbidden by your contract to let others come in and talk over your telephone. It is one of the agreements you enter into, that other persons shall not use your telephone.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true only in some localities.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But at all the pay stations, except where slot machines are used, there is always somebody in charge, and it is as easy to give a receipt as it is for the telegraph company to do so. In offices where they have slots for the reception of the money, or at other than pay stations where there are not slots, then it is upon monthly return to the collector.

I wish to say to the Senator that while the telephone people do not want the tax, they are in entire agreement that this method of collecting is one of the most convenient for the company.

Mr. ALLISON. They have made no objection to it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No objection, except they did not want the tax.

Mr. ALLISON. They would prefer not to pay the tax.

Mr. GORMAN. There has not been much time for objection; but if the gentlemen in charge of the bill feel that it is perfect without any suggestions, I know we are powerless to correct it. I think, though, that Senators on both sides of the Chamber who are advocating this extraordinary taxation, considering the embarrassing mode in which it is presented and the penalties that you have imposed for all these offenses and the threats to imprison, will regret that they have not taken a little more time and given a little more consideration to the convenience of the business people and to the interests of the ordinary people of the country.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will say to the Senator that as a very humble member of the committee I shall be very glad indeed of any suggestions that will improve the method of collecting the tax or the method of levying it. It seemed to us that taxes levied by stamp, which paid themselves and certified their own payment, were very much more desirable than the employment of a vast number of assistant deputy collectors, whose duty it would be to inspect the business and offices and books of various concerns doing business; that wherever it could be self-evident at the close of the transaction that the Government had received its tax or excise, there the Government was the gainer, because the number of people employed was the minimum, there was very much less espionage and very much less opportunity for investigation of a wrong sort than in any other method of levying taxes.

So far as concerns passing over this amendment, I desire to say that there are amendments of some importance to be offered to this provision respecting bills of lading, and I had hoped to present the same to the Finance Committee and to get them, if possible, reported as committee amendments, or in any event to get them before the Senate soon; and if it is to be settled now, I should like to give notice that I shall ask to have the amendments put upon the bill later. I refer to the amendments as to which I have conferred with individual members of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to passing over this amendment.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to have it passed over, if there is no objection.

Mr. PASCO. While we are upon this amendment, I wish to direct attention to another matter, which, I think, should be considered by the committee. The complaint is that this tax upon the telegraph and telephone companies will operate differently. I understand that when a message is sent by telegraph the sender has to stamp it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. PASCO. But when the message is sent by telephone then the telephone company has to put on the stamp.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is no difference, if I do not interrupt the Senator. They are at the same liberty to exact payment of the customer as is the telegraph company.

Mr. PASCO. They can add to the cost of the message.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. PASCO. But the Government imposes upon the company the duty of affixing the stamp. So the person who sends the message can not be compelled by the Government to stamp it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But the telephone company will not receive it unless it is stamped, and they can——

Mr. PASCO. They can increase their rates, but sometimes their rates are fixed by law.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I see the force of the suggestion of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PASCO. We made a peremptory rate for the company in the District or a peremptory reduction, I forget which it is. Therefore the company will be compelled, if this provision is insisted upon, to put the stamps on.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I see the suggestion.

Mr. PASCO. It seems to me that while the amendment is being considered it would be well for the committee to take that matter under advisement and perhaps afford a remedy.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think there is force in the suggestion which the Senator makes. I ask to have the amendment passed over.

Mr. COCKRELL. What amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment No. 101. It will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning at line 14, page 42. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 42, line 19, after the word "thereof," to strike out "50 cents" and insert "and all other:" in line 20, before the word "of," to strike out "bond" and insert "bonds;" in line 21, after the word "description," to strike out "other than" and insert "except;" in line 22, after the word "proceedings," to strike out "and such as are;" in the same line, after the word "otherwise," to strike out "charged" and insert "provided for;" and in line 23, after the word "schedule," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Bond: For indemnifying any person or persons, firm, or corporation who shall have become bound or engaged as surety for the payment of any sum of money, or for the due execution or performance of the duties of any office or position, and to account for money received by virtue thereof, and all other bonds of any description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, not otherwise provided for in this schedule, 50 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 8, after the word "any," to strike out "other;" in the same line, after the word "description," to strike out "than those" and insert "required by law not otherwise;" and in line 9, after the word "specified," to insert "in this act;" so as to make the clause read:

Certificate of any description required by law not otherwise specified in this act, 10 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 16, after the word "steamer," to insert "or any renewal or transfer thereof;" so as to make the clause read:

Charter party: Contract or agreement for the charter of any ship, or vessel, or steamer, or any letter, memorandum, or other writing between the captain, master, or owner, or person acting as agent of any ship, or vessel, or steamer, and any other person or persons, for or relating to the charter of such ship, or vessel, or steamer, or any renewal or transfer thereof, if the registered tonnage of such ship, or vessel, or steamer does not exceed 300 tons, $3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 25, after the word "such," to insert "for each note or memorandum of sale if not otherwise provided for in this act;" so as to make the clause read:

Contract: Broker's note, or memorandum of sale of any goods or merchandise, stocks, bonds, exchange, notes of hand, real estate, or property of any kind or description issued by brokers or persons acting as such, for each note or memorandum of sale if not otherwise provided for in this act, 10 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 9, after the word "cents," to insert "and for each additional $500 or fractional part thereof in excess of $500, 50 cents;" so as to make the clause read:

Conveyance: Deed, instrument, or writing, whereby any lands, tenements, or other realty sold shall be granted, assigned, transferred, or otherwise conveyed to, or vested in, the purchaser or purchasers, or any other person or persons, by his, her, or their direction, when the consideration or value exceeds $100 and does not exceed $500, 50 cents; and for each additional $500 or fractional part thereof in excess of $500, 50 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 11, to strike out the following:

When the consideration exceeds $500 and does not exceed $1,000, $1.
Exceeding $1,000 and not exceeding $2,500, $2.
Exceeding $2,500 and not exceeding $5,000, $5.
Exceeding $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000, $10.
Exceeding $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000, $20.
And for every additional $10,000, or fractional part thereof, in excess of $20,000, $20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, was on page 44, after the word "message," to strike out "except press news dispatches, for which the charge paid or to be collected does not exceed 25 cents;" so as to make the clause read:

Dispatch, telegraphic: Any dispatch or message, 1 cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, to strike out line 3, as follows:

When the charge exceeds 25 cents, 2 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, to strike out after line 3, the following:

That any person, firm, or corporation owning or operating what is commonly known as a long-distance telephone line or lines, or other toll-telephone line or lines, whether such line or lines, or any part thereof, is or are operated separately or in connection with the similar lines of any other person, firm, or corporation, shall, on the first day of each month, return under oath to the collector of internal revenue in and for the district in which such person, firm, or corporation resides, the number of messages transmitted over the said respective separate or connected lines during the preceding month; the said return to include the paid messages so transmitted from individual or other subscribers to the telephone service of the said person, firm, or corporation, and from the respective public pay stations of the said person, firm, or corporation, together with the amount received for each such message so transmitted. Upon the failure of any person, firm, or corporation to make such return, or for the making of false returns, they shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not exceeding $500.

On each message so transmitted for a distance of 30 miles or more where the charge for which, according to such sworn return, does not exceed 25 cents, said person, firm, or corporation shall pay a tax of 1 cent; when the charge exceeds 25 cents and does not exceed $1.50, 2 cents; when the charge exceeds $1.50 and does not exceed $5, 5 cents; when the charge exceeds $5, 10 cents.

The taxes hereby imposed upon telephone messages shall be assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the provisions of existing law relative to the assessment of taxes and of the 50 per cent penalties for neglect or failure to make return and of the 100 per cent penalty for the making of false returns and of the collection of such taxes and assessed penalties are hereby made to apply to the taxes imposed by this section: Provided, That official messages of the United States Government shall be exempt from the taxes herein imposed upon telegraphic and telephonic messages.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. As I understand the provision as it stands now as amended, it is a tax of 1 cent on every message sent by the telegraph company to any person, no matter what the charge is or the distance?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a uniform tax.

Mr. GORMAN. It is a uniform tax of 1 cent?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator if there is not great discrimination between that tax and the one that is levied on the telephone companies where they are required to pay 1 cent for every 15 cents they receive?

Mr. ALLISON. No.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no. Upon messages that cost 15 cents or over the tax is 1 cent.

Mr. GORMAN. For every message that costs 15 cents the tax is 1 cent; but in the case of the telegraph company, no matter what the cost of the telegram may be, 1 cent also is charged.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a discrimination against the telegraph company, if anything.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The minimum charge of the telegraph company is 15 cents. The telegraph company sends no messages for less than 15 cents.

Mr. SPOONER. Ten words.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Ten words. Therefore that is made the basis of the pay of their messages, but to put the telephone company on an equality we let messages that cost less than 15 cents go by telephone for nothing. When the telephone company reach the minimum price of the telegraph company, they have to pay a cent on each message.

Mr. GORMAN. A message under 15 cents is not taxed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It goes free.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 47, line 2, after the word "shall," to insert "hereafter;" in the same line, after the word "lives," to strike out "(not including policies of insurance against accident only):" in line 4, after the word "thereof," to strike out "two" and insert "ten;" in line 7, after the word "be," to strike out "1 cent for each unit of 5 cents of weekly premium" and insert "6 cents for each $100 or fractional part thereof on the amount insured;" and in line 10 to strike out the proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That cooperative life-insurance assessment orders and companies, as well as all policies issued by them, shall be exempt from taxation under this act.

So as to read:

Insurance (life): Policy of insurance, or other instrument, by whatever name the same shall be called, whereby any insurance shall hereafter be made upon any life or lives, for each $100 or fractional part thereof, 10 cents on the amount insured: Provided, That on all policies, for life insurance only, issued on the industrial or weekly-payment plan of insurance the tax shall be 6 cents for each $100 or fractional part thereof on the amount insured.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that the life-insurance section be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the section will be passed over at the request of the Senator from California.

Mr. LODGE. Is that the life-insurance section?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is the life-insurance section.

Mr. LODGE. It is to be passed over for the present.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes. I suggest that amendment No. 123, in the thirteenth line, should be considered. I think there is no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 12, on page 47, the committee propose to strike out the following:

Insurance (on property): Upon each premium on each and every policy of insurance, reinsurance or renewal thereof, or other instrument, by whatever name the same shall be called, by which insurance shall be made or renewed upon property profits, titles, or liability of any description, whether perils by sea or by fire, or other peril of any kind, made by an insurance company, or its agents, or by any other company or person, $100 and under, 10 cents; exceeding $100 and not exceeding $500, 50 cents; $500 and upward, $1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. CHILTON. I think that had better go over, to stand with the other. I think possibly some amendment may be necessary.

Mr. ALDRICH. As far as I know, there is no objection on the part of anybody else to the provision in regard to insurance other than life insurance.

Mr. CHILTON. I thought it was understood that the whole of the insurance provisions should go over.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not.

Mr. CHILTON. All right, then.

Mr. ALDRICH. We can return to it if there is any objection, but I know of none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 47, after line 23, to insert:

Insurance (marine, inland, and fire): Each policy of insurance or other instrument, by whatever name the same shall be called, by which insurance shall be made or renewed upon property of any description (including rents or profits), whether against peril by sea or on inland waters, or by fire or lightning, or other peril, made by any person, association, or corporation, upon the amount of premium charged, one-half of 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof.

Insurance (casualty, fidelity, and guarantee): Each policy of insurance, or bond or obligation of the nature of indemnity for loss, damage, or liability issued, or executed, or renewed by any person, association, company, or corporation, transacting the business of accident, fidelity, employer's liability, plate glass, steam boiler, burglary, elevator, automatic sprinkler, or other branch of insurance (except life, marine, inland, and fire insurance), and each bond undertaking or recognizance, conditioned for the performance of the duties of any office or position, or for the doing or not doing of anything therein specified, or other obligation of the nature of indemnity, and each contract or obligation guaranteeing the validity or legality of bonds or other obligations issued by any State, county, municipal, or other public body or organization, or guaranteeing titles to real estate or mercantile credits executed or guaranteed by any fidelity, guarantee, or surety company upon the amount of premium charged, one-half of 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have prepared some amendments to the provisions on page 36 which, I think, answer the objections made this morning. I ask permission to offer them, and request that they be printed in order that members of the committee and members of the Senate may see them and ascertain whether they carry out the purpose that the Senate had in view. I simply offer them now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that they be read?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; I do not ask that they be read. I simply ask that they be printed; I shall offer them to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I make a like request. I submit an amendment which I intend to propose on page 41 in respect to telephone messages. I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 49, after line 2, to insert "If for a period of time not exceeding one year, 25 cents;" so as to read:

Lease, agreement, memorandum, or contract for the hire, use, or rent of any land, tenement, or portion thereof, if for a period of time not exceeding one year, 25 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 5, after the word "time," to insert "exceeding one year and;" so as to make the clause read:

If for a period of time exceeding one year and not exceeding three years, 50 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 15, after the word "mortgage," to insert "or pledge;" in line 22, after the word "security," to strike out "and shall be redeemable before the sale or other disposal thereof;" in line 24, after the word "otherwise," to strike out "or any personal bond given as security for the payment of any definite or certain sum of money" and insert "on any of the foregoing;" on page 50, line 2, after the word "one," to strike out "hundred" and insert "thousand;" in line 3, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "five" and insert "one thousand five;" in line 4, after the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" and in the same line, after the word "cents," to insert:

And on each $500 or fractional part thereof in excess of $1,500, 25 cents: Provided, That upon each and every assignment or transfer of a mortgage, lease, or policy of insurance, or the renewal or continuance of any agreement, contract, or charter, by letter or otherwise, a stamp duty shall be required and paid equal to that imposed on the original instrument.

So as to read:

Mortgage or pledge of lands, estate, or property, real or personal, heritable, or movable, whatsoever, where the same shall be made as a security for the payment of any definite and certain sum of money, lent at the time or previously due and owing or forborne to be paid, being payable; also any conveyance of any lands, estate, or property whatsoever, in trust to be sold or otherwise converted into money, which shall be intended only as security, either by express stipulation or otherwise; on any of the foregoing exceeding $1,000 and not exceeding $1,500, 25 cents; and on each $500 or fractional part thereof in excess of $1,500, 25 cents: Provided, That upon each and every assignment or transfer of a mortgage, lease, or policy of insurance, or the renewal or continuance of any agreement, contract, or charter, by letter or otherwise, a stamp duty shall be required and paid equal to that imposed on the original instrument.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 11, to strike out the following:

Exceeding $500 and not exceeding $1,000, $1.
Exceeding $1,000 and not exceeding $2,500, $2.
Exceeding $2,500 and not exceeding $5,000, $5.
Exceeding $5,000 and not exceeding $10,000, $10.
Exceeding $10,000 and not exceeding $20,000, $15.
And for every additional $10,000, or fractional part thereof, in excess of $20,000, $10.

The mendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 1, after the word "if," to strike out "less than" and insert "costing not exceeding;" so as to make the clause read:

Passage ticket, by any vessel from a port in the United States to a foreign port, if costing not exceeding $30, $1.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 2, to insert:

Costing more than thirty and not exceeding sixty dollars, $3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "Exceeding thirty" and insert "Costing more than;" so as to make the clause read:

Costing more than $60, $5.

The amendment was agreed to:

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 6, to strike out the following:

Power of attorney for the sale or transfer of any stock, bonds, scrip, or for the collection of any dividends, or interest thereon, 25 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 13, to strike out the following clause:

Power of attorney to receive or collect rent, 25 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 17, after the word "same," to insert "to receive or collect rent, to sell or transfer any stock, bonds, scrip, or for the collection of any dividends or interest thereon;" and, in line 20, after the word "specified," to strike out "$1," and insert:

Twenty-five cents: Provided, That no stamp shall be required upon any papers necessary to be used for the collection from the Government of claims by soldiers or their legal representatives of the United States for pensions, back pay, bounty, or for property lost in the service.

So as to make the clause read:

Power of attorney to sell and convey real estate, or to rent or lease the same, to receive or collect rent, to sell or transfer any stock, bonds, scrip, or for the collection of any dividends or interest thereon, or to perform any and all other acts not hereinbefore specified, 25 cents: Provided, That no stamp shall be required upon any papers necessary to be used for the collection from the Government of claims by soldiers or their legal representatives of the United States for pensions, back pay, bounty, or for property lost in the service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, to strike out from line 1 to line 17, inclusive, as follows:

Probate of will or letters of administration: Where the estate and effects for or in respect of which such probate or letters of administration applied for shall not exceed the value of $2,500, 50 cents.
Exceeding $2,500, and not exceeding $5,000, $1.
Exceeding $5,000, and not exceeding $20,000, $2.
Exceeding $20,000, and not exceeding $50,000, $5.
Exceeding $50,000, and not exceeding $100,000, $10.
Exceeding $100,000, and not exceeding $150,000, $20.
And for every additional $50,000 or fractional part thereof, $10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 22, to insert the following:

Receipts for the payment of any sum of money, or for the payment of any debt due, not being for the satisfaction of any mortgage or judgment or decree of any court, and not otherwise in this act especially enumerated, 1 cent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to Schedule B, concerning proprietary articles and preparations, etc., on page 53, line 12.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There are a number of provisions in Schedule B that I should like to look into, and I would be glad to have it passed over for the present.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that we can probably agree upon the amendments commencing on page 57 down to the end of the schedule. I believe there will be no objection to those commencing at "chewing gum," at the bottom of page 56. I think those paragraphs might be disposed of now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to continuing with the consideration of the bill, as suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island, unless some other Senator objects.

Mr. ALDRICH. Then I suggest that we commence now at line 25, on page 56.

The reading of the bill was resumed at line 25, on page 56. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 57, line 1, after the words "jar, or," to strike out "other container of" and insert "package containing;" in line 3, after the word "value," to strike out "five" and insert "four;" in the same line, after the word "cents," to strike out "on each additional dollar's worth or fractional part thereof, an additional 5 cents" and insert "if exceeding $1 of retail value, for each additional dollar or fractional part thereof, 4 cents;" and in line 7, after the words "Internal Revenue," to insert "with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;" so as to make the clause read:

Chewing gum or substitutes therefor: For and upon each box, carton, jar, or package containing chewing gum of not more than $1 of actual retail value, 4 cents; if exceeding $1 of retail value, for each additional dollar or fractional part thereof, 4 cents; under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 8, to strike out:

Mineral and all other waters, and beverages not otherwise subject to internal-revenue taxes, imported or domestic, bottled for sale, upon each bottle or siphon containing one-half pint or less, one-fourth of 1 cent.
Upon each bottle or siphon containing more than one-half pint and not more than one pint, one-half of 1 cent; upon each bottle or siphon containing more than one pint, 1 cent.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether it is the intention of the committee to relieve mineral waters from taxation in this bill by striking out these clauses?

Mr. ALDRICH. Some of them undoubtedly would be relieved by striking out these provisions.

Mr. SEWELL. Is not the Senator from Massachusetts in favor of that?

Mr. LODGE. I am in favor of striking this provision out, but what I wish to call attention to is the fact that as the bill now stands, while the committee has struck out this clause which taxes mineral waters directly, it leaves them taxed much more severely in the next clause of Schedule B, to which I am also opposed. I would find out whether the intention of the committee was to relieve mineral waters from all taxes, or whether it was simply to let off this part.

Mr. SEWELL. I hoped that the members of the committee were running on the line of temperance, and that they were going to leave mineral waters out entirely. What is the section to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers?

Mr. LODGE. The beginning of Schedule B, page 53, the first clause, line 17, where it says "waters." Then it provides that any waters sold under a trade-mark are to be taxed by a stamp duty much heavier than the one in the clauses now under discussion before the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I believe that the Senate has passed over the particular subdivision to which he now alludes. I think he is correct in his construction of that paragraph. It may require some attention hereafter.

Mr. LODGE. All I wanted to get at, I will say to the Senator from California, was the intention of the committee, to ascertain whether they intend to tax mineral waters under the first clause of Schedule B. I wanted it understood that this clause did not relieve them from taxation, but, on the contrary, they were much more heavily burdened than they were under the specific clause of the House bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on amendment No. 170, on page 57, in relation to mineral and all other waters, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 57, after line 16, to strike out "Wine, sparkling or otherwise, of any name or description, made from grapes or other fruits, or from rhubarb or other substances, or by the infusion of any matter in spirits, and offered as wine or as a substitute for wine," and insert "sparkling or other wines;" in line 21, after the word "sale," to strike out "whether domestic or imported;" and in line 22, after the word "less," to strike out "2 cents" and insert "1 cent;" so as to make the clause read:

Sparkling or other wines, when bottled for sale, upon each bottle containing 1 pint or less, 1 cent.

Mr. MILLS. Is it the intention to strike that out?

Mr. FRYE. It is provided for elsewhere.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know whether the committee construe the first section of Schedule B as taxing all mineral waters, and whether that is the reason why the provision as to mineral waters has been stricken out on page 57? I should like to understand that.

Mr. ALDRICH. The provisions of Schedule B certainly would not tax all mineral waters; whether they would tax such mineral waters as are sold upon the plea that they are specifics for certain diseases, or sold under a trade-mark, is a question which I can not answer very intelligently at this moment, but certainly all mineral waters would not be taxed under the provisions of Schedule B.

Mr. WHITE. I believe it was the intention of the committee and of every member of the committee to exclude mineral waters, so called. So far as I am concerned, my attention was only called in the last two or three days to the point now made by the Senator from Massachusetts. I think the matter ought to be inquired into with more care than can be bestowed upon it here in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. LODGE. I will say the provisions in the first section of Schedule B do not cover all mineral waters. All mineral waters practically are sold under a trade-mark. They were not covered in the House provision, but the insertion by the Senate committee of the words "or trade-mark" brings every one of them in, practically, and places upon them a very much heavier taxation than the House of Representatives proposed. In fact, I think the inclusion of everything sold under a trade-mark is a very doubtful provision in itself, because the trade-mark is a very doubtful piece of property in many cases. I only wanted to call attention to it at this time, so that we may take it up when that section is considered.

Mr. ALDRICH. The principal objection made to the provision beginning in line 9, on page 57, as it came from the other House, was that it would make the payment of a tax necessary upon waters that were sold, not mineral waters, but simply pure waters that were sold by the barrel or the demijohn or otherwise for the benefit of people in various parts of the United States. There was no particular claim then made in regard to special waters, like Apollinaris water or Poland water. There was no allegation that those waters ought not to pay something; but this provision was stricken out so that those waters should not be taxed.

The question whether any waters ought to be taxed has never been discussed, I think, in the committee at all; but my own opinion about it is—and I am only speaking for myself personally—that as to some of those waters, where some peculiar virtue is claimed for them and where they bear a trade-mark, they ought to pay a small tax. They are medicines. It seems to me there is no hardship upon anybody in making those articles pay a small tax; but the committee, as I have said, have never considered that question at all. They will undoubtedly consider it in connection with the Schedule B, which has gone over.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] asked a question, a specific answer to which was overlooked. I will say, in reply to the Senator, that it was not the intention of the committee, in repealing the provision which taxes these natural waters, to impose thereby the tax of the preceding section. It was the sentiment of the committee that all these natural, ordinary table waters should be free. That was the distinct understanding of the unanimous committee. The section which the Senator from Rhode Island has had passed over may be more broad or may not be more broad than it should be, but it was contemplated that in that provision might be included certain waters which came from the earth, and which were advertised as specifics for certain diseases and sold as medicines. That was the distinction.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Colorado has stated the exact distinction that I desired to get at, that it was not the intention of the committee to tax these pure natural waters from natural springs, for example, like the Poland spring, and yet that is a water sold under a trade-mark, and it would unquestionably be taxable under the first clause.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the water is sold also as beneficial to persons having certain ailments.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly. But there are a great many springs the water from which is sold simply as pure drinking water. Such waters are sold largely in towns where the water supply is bad, and they are sold under a trade-mark. If it was the intention of the committee to exempt such waters from taxation, then they have got them under a much heavier taxation by using the words "or trade-mark" in that first clause.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, my recollection is substantially that stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT]. Personally I do not believe in the taxation of any of these waters. I do not believe it possible to make a discrimination with reference to their medicinal qualities. They are all declared to be highly beneficial to health. Many of them will rejuvenate manhood, and it is only necessary to have a sufficient supply of those waters to convert an old man into a very young one, if we believe the advertisements. [Laughter.] So, unless we have some general language which will be applicable to all of these waters, it seems to me it will be impossible for the officers of the Government to enforce the statute at all.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest to the Senator from California that perhaps if the proprietors of those springs of ordinary natural pure waters would quit advertising them as specifics for every ailment, they might save themselves the tax under Schedule B.

Mr. WHITE. They probably would.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask if the insertion of the words "or trade-mark," in line 1, on page 54, does not very much enlarge the scope of the section and take in an enormous number of articles which were not intended to be covered by it?

Mr. ALDRICH. That particular section is not now before the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That section has been passed over.

Mr. SEWELL. I beg pardon; I did not know that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendments of the committee numbered 171, 172, and 173, from line 17 to line 23, on page 57; which have been read.

The amendments were agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 57, line 24, after the word "pint," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" so as to make the clause read:

Upon each bottle containing more than 1 pint, 2 cents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 58, to insert the following:

That all articles and preparations provided for in this schedule which are in the hands of manufacturers or of wholesale or retail dealers on the 1st day of June, 1898, shall be subject to the payment of the stamp taxes herein provided for, but it shall be deemed a compliance with this act as to such articles on hand in the hands of wholesale or retail dealers as aforesaid who are not manufacturers to affix the proper adhesive tax stamp at the time the packet, box, bottle, pot, or phial, or other inclosure with its contents is sold at retail.

Mr. CHILTON. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] requested me to see that that amendment was passed over until his return. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore I ask that the amendment which has just been stated may be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 58, after line 10, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. —. There shall be an allowance of drawback on articles mentioned in Schedule B of this act on which any internal-revenue tax shall have been paid, equal in amount to the stamp tax paid thereon, and no more, when exported, to be paid by the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Treasurer of the United States, out of any money arising from internal taxes not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no allowance of drawback shall be made for any such articles exported prior to June 1, 1898. The evidence that any such tax has been paid as aforesaid shall be furnished to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by the person claiming the allowance of drawback, and the amount shall be ascertained under such regulations as shall be prescribed from time to time by said Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, at this point I should like to ask the acting chairman of the committee if he will kindly explain why it is that stocks of manufactured tobacco, cigars, etc., on hand have been exempted in the bill as reported, and why it is that stocks of medicines and proprietary articles in retail drug stores have not been exempted?

I ask the question and desire an explanation because I have received a great many communications bearing upon this particular point, requesting me to endeavor to secure the exemption of these patent medicines and proprietary articles on hand in retail drug stores. Perhaps a statement from the Senator who has the bill in charge, or from some other member of the committee, explaining this discrepancy would be of value and would serve to answer the many inquiries which are coming to me.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will apply to stocks of wine on hand as well.

Mr. MANTLE. I have not that in mind particularly, as the communications which have reached me have borne more directly upon the question of drugs, medicines, and such articles.

Mr. ALLISON. Proprietary articles in the hands of wholesale and retail dealers have not hitherto been subjected to a tax. The committee were of opinion that if they were subjected to a tax, it should only be imposed when the articles were sold. Therefore we have so provided as to minimize the burdens upon dealers who have already acquired these articles by purchase. That idea actuated the committee in respect to proprietary articles.

As to manufactured tobacco, inasmuch as we had never imposed an additional tax where a tax had already been imposed and the articles were in the hands of dealers, whether wholesale or retail—but that matter has not yet been discussed in the Senate—the argument made against the taxation of tobacco on hand is that it could not be sold in competition with new tobacco manufactured after the passage of the act, and that to impose a tax upon dealers in tobacco would be to subject them to great loss, because they could not recover from the user or consumer of tobacco the amount of the tax paid.

These, I think, were the considerations which operated upon the committee in striking out the House provision, which does tax tobacco on hand. My own judgment is—I speak only for myself—that there ought to be a tax imposed upon stocks of tobacco on hand if it can be constitutionally imposed; but I do not think that tax should be equal to the tax imposed upon tobacco manufactured after the passage of this act. That is my opinion.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to ask the Senator one question. Of course, we have all received such letters as have been referred to by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE] from druggists all over the country, and I ask whether or not one request made by the druggists was that which has been complied with by the committee, that the stamp should not be required to be affixed until the article itself is sold?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. And was not that the request of the druggists which came to the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. The committee have had a variety of requests. Many druggists object to the stamp being placed upon articles they purchase and which are in their stores. Others claim that it would be a great hardship to compel them to immediately place adhesive stamps upon any such articles.

Mr. FRYE. That is the complaint to which I allude.

Mr. ALLISON. And therefore they ask the committee to make a provision which will enable them to place stamps upon the articles when sold. The committee believed that to be a reasonable provision, and so have inserted it.

Mr. CHILTON. When sold at retail?

Mr. ALLISON. When sold at retail.

Mr. FRYE. I understand from the associated druggists, I think, of New England, or of Massachusetts, from letters sent to me a few days ago, that that provision as retained in the bill is satisfactory.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt it is satisfactory to the great body of druggists, but my own judgment is that we ought to require stamps to be placed upon these articles when they are sold at wholesale as well as at retail. For example, take a druggist in a large city who has a stock of these articles on hand. He sells a dozen bottles or twenty-four bottles at wholesale. It seems to me that when that sale is made the stamps ought to be affixed.

Mr. FRYE. You would not require the stamp, then, to be affixed by the retailer alone?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not; but whether the article is sold at wholesale or retail. The committee has not discussed that question. It is one of the questions which we hope to discuss tomorrow. Whether or not this should be confined to the retail trade, I am not quite sure.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether the change which has been made by the committee is satisfactory to the retail dealers as well as to the wholesale dealers?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course it is impossible to say.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] asked the question whether the dealers were not satisfied with the provisions of the bill that the stamp should be affixed to the article when sold, and not when held on the shelves. What I desire to know is whether the retailers have expressed any satisfaction with this provision of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I find a difference of opinion among the retailers. I think I have received as many as fifty or sixty letters from retail dealers in my own State and in other States objecting to this tax being paid only by the retail dealers. Of course, after this bill shall have become a law, and the retailers shall be
